CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

J. ALLEN EVANS IN PRISON.

A correspondent of Mr. Evans' sends me a portion of a letter from him, in which he says: "I want you to write to Lillian Harman and urge her to appeal to comrades through the Light-Bearer for some slight assistance. I am sure that some of them will lend a helping hand. I have been a supporter of our cause for thirty years, and a subscriber to the Light-Bearer since its birth. I was convicted on the charge of violating the Comstock laws."

I wrote to our friends in Denver, asking them to call on Mr. Evans, and have received the following reply from J. Warner Mills, of that city:

"DENVER, COLO., June 12, 1906.

"I received your recent letter telling me of the trouble that had come to J. Allen Evans. I called upon him, as you requested, and found him doing time in the county jail for a period of 100 days. He seemed glad to see me, but the only service, outside of a little friendly chat, he seemed to think I could perform was to give him some substantial reading matter and get him permission to use a clean razor, so that he would not be obliged to shave himself with the razor that is used by all the other inmates of the prison. He appears to be a very enthusiastic old gentleman, and it is a pity that he should have to find himself behind the bars at his age of life.

"I know nothing about the offense charged against him except that the statute under which he was sentenced is the notorious Comstock law. I was surprised to find him so well read and so deeply interested in current philosophy, politics and industrial matters.

"I got permission of the officials to let him have a clean razor and took the same over the other morning, with the June issue of 'Tom Watson's Magazine' and Mr. Trowbridge's work on 'Bi-Socialism.'"

Mr. Evans is well known to many of the readers of LUCIFER, and they will, no doubt, wish to write to him. His address is County Jail, Denver, Colo. I know nothing of the specific charge against him, but feel sure that he is a sincere, refined, earnest seeker after truth and worker for the well-being of all humanity. L. H.

THE DEATH KNELL OF FREE PRESS.

The Comstock mail laws, which have been so often abused, misconstrued and overstretched to cover sex discussions not originally thought of by the makers of the law, have been gradually "strengthened" and fitted for broader or more inclusive and extensive use by numerous little modifications—and the worst feature of all is that part of the law conferring discretion on one postoffice official to decide what publication may be prohibited as "non-mailable."

In the last (1906) report of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice (Anthony Comstock, secretary), it is proposed to renew the effort that failed ten or more years ago to have the words "disgusting" and "filthy" added to obscenity; and in this move we shall no doubt see the society backed by the enormous riches of the beef trust, for a bit of news from the Middle West says that the beef packers are already clamoring for the postal authorities to refuse mailing privileges to the magazines that print muck-raking and, therefore, "disgusting" articles about the "filthy" methods of the beef packers.

The third assistant postmaster general would not have to go much beyond the far-reaching steps he has already taken in this direction to accommodate the beef trust and aid them in the repressing of unpleasant facts; but if he waits till congress gives a little more power to his elbow in the way of suppressing freedom of the press it may be only one year more before he will have the "disgusting" literature suppression law—excluding it from mail circulation. There are those who want it that probably have the wherewithal to get what they want.

Elizur Wright, T. B. Wakeman and other old-time opponents of this sort of mail meddling, used to say that there would be no limit to the possibilities of evil along this line; and even in our lifetime their prophecies may come true.

After filthy and disgusting, why not add "treasonable," "unpatriotic," "anarchistic," "socialistic," "defamatory"? and the party in power will so fortify itself against criticism and new thought that we shall easily settle down to a stagnation status surpassing that of China. Patrick Henry said: "Give me liberty or give me death." Death is "in the air" oppressively, at present.—Truth Seeker.

SOME MEDICAL STATISTICS.

Thursday, April 12, witnessed the following sudden outbreak on the editorial page of the New York "Sun." Since that date it has shown no further excitement in the same direction. Nobody seems to know what caused the explosion:

"There are diseases of which the general public knows little or nothing which in their results are as disastrous to life, to health and to happiness as is consumption. Plain speech is sometimes necessary. Can one doubt for a moment that, if mankind were aware of the fact that ninety per cent of all cases of locomotor ataxia and most of the paralytic attacks, that eighty per cent of all the deaths from inflammatory diseases peculiar to women, at least fifty per cent of all the operations known in gynecology, as well as thirty per cent of all the blindness in infancy and childhood, were due to these diseases, transmitted by men as a result of immoral sexual association—can one believe for a moment that, with this knowledge in mind, the public would not take steps to lessen the possibilities of these infections?"

That's what Moses Harman thought. And see where he is now. That's what the "Sun's" great hero, Theodore Roosevelt, doesn't think. And see where he is now. Will the "Sun," fresh from its study of medical statistics, and having told us what percentage of the prevailing mortality proceeds from the transmission of "these diseases" as a result of immoral sexual association, kindly tell us also what percentage of the remaining mortality proceeds from the transmission of "these diseases" as a result of moral sexual association? Or would it have us understand that every priest and magistrate is provided with a certain lymph, which goes with the marriage certificate and renders the moral immune?—Liberty (New York).

The moral regeneration of mankind will only really commence when the most fundamental of the social relations is placed under the rule of equal justice, and when human beings learn to cultivate their strongest sympathy with an equal in rights and in cultivation.—John Stuart Mill.

It is well to consider a little whether in our zeal to suppress one form of immorality we may not be forging chains which may in time be fastened upon the neck of some great but unpopular truth.—Loring Moody.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 8 months and 10 days old. He has served 115 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor. His task at present is breaking stone.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, care of Chaplain, State Penitentiary, Joliet, Ill. All letters pass through the chaplain's hands. Do not expect personal answers, as, according to the rules of the prison, a prisoner may write only one letter a month. However, a list of letters will be kept and published from time to time, so that the writers may know they were received.

* * *

LETTERS FROM THE EDITOR.

The letter dated May 30 was received on June 6, which was after LUCIFER No. 1067 was printed. It seems that he was allowed to write it as a special holiday privilege. The second letter is the regular one which he can write at intervals of five weeks, and which is sent out if approved by the prison officials. The first two letters which he wrote were not sent out, because of something to which the officials objected. The prisoner does not know on what the objection was based, as he was very careful to avoid criticism, which is forbidden. However, the opinions of the editor are fairly well known to the readers of LUCIFER, and they are especially interested in having reports of his daily life, state of health, etc. If he retains health and strength he will be able, in a few months, to again express his convictions through the columns of LUCIFER. I send a copy of each issue of LUCIFER to him, but he has seen only fragments of two copies.

Of the old songs which he desires we can send those marked with an asterisk. If any of our friends have the book, or can tell me where it can be obtained, or can send the words of the songs, the favor will be appreciated. L. H.

* * *

STATE PENITENTIARY, JOLIET, ILL., May 30 (Decoration Day), '06.—My Dear Lillian: Unexpectedly I am permitted to write a letter home. On my return to cell, after witnessing a very interesting stereopticon performance at the chapel, I found this blank sheet on my bunk, and now, having filled the stomach with an excellent Decoration Day dinner, I proceed to write you a penciled letter.

Received yours of the 24th in due time, telling me of the whooping-cough in family; also that No. 1066 had been published, with reviews of my case by Crane and Chamberlain. Please thank them for me. Glad to know that the paper gets to press regularly and promptly. Hope you are not overworking yourself. Hope money enough comes in to enable you to hire all needful help, especially in the correspondence department—so many letters to be answered. Who is your stenographer now? Did not see No. 1066—nor previous numbers—except two fragments, since I have been in the S. P. Glad to hear that my brief letter to you, dated May 6, was published, containing acknowledgments of receipts of letters. Now I will send you another list of letters received since May 6, and will ask you, if possible, to insert it in next LUCIFER. In my name, please return sincerest thanks to the writers and ask them to continue to remember the "prisoner in bonds," though not bound just as he is bound. How I wish I could answer them each and all. Here is the list received since May 6: F. B. Earnshaw, 1; Gertie Vose, 1; Hulda P. Loomis, 1; George B. Wheeler, 2; T. P. Meade, 1; Ada Morley, 3; Annie E. Parkhurst, 2; Elizabeth H. Russell, 2; Thomas J. Griffiths, 2; Rachel S. Tenney, M. D., 1; M. Florence Johnson, 9; Josephine K. Henry, 1; W. W. Miller, 1; Dr. E. B. Foote, 1; M. Gifford, 1; Mrs. P. Isgrig, 1; Adeline Champney, 1; Ed Secrest, 1; Bettie M. Roberts, 1; Dr. J. R. Price, 1; Ida B. Robinson, 1; Lulu McC. Clarke, 1; William Schenck, 1; Lucinda B. Chandler, 1; George Harman, 1; Katharine S. Fry, 1; Arthur Wastall, 1; Mattie D. and James Haworth, 2; Henry C. Hansou, (Ill.), 1; George and Louie Bedborough, 4; D. Edson Smith, 1; Mary D. Jenne, 1; Joseph Harman, 1; Lillian Harman, 6. A few of these were cards.

Please say to all friends who have inquired or who may inquire after my health that, all things considered, my health is fairly good; better, in fact, than I could reasonably expect. I am still at work breaking stone "for the state of Illinois." Have worked thus far without shelter, but was officially informed two days ago that we are to have an awning soon to shelter us from sun and rain. We work about eight and a half hours per day, if I mistake not. As is sometimes said of the devil—that he is not really as "black as he is painted"—so I would say of the "rock pile," the work is not so dreadful as some people imagine it to be. I have often worked harder on the farm than I have done on the rock pile, and yet have made an average hand at the latter-named work.

I hope nothing will prevent your coming to see me on the 17th of June, or earlier if possible. I have so many things to talk about—concerning the pardon business and publishing business. But don't think I am worrying about anything. I trust you and our other friends, fully and unreservedly, in all respects.

Give my best love to all the household. Kiss Virna and Baby George for me. Hope the children will soon be well. Time about up. Good-by, dear daughter, good-by. Write often. Don't overwork. All good things be yours. M. H.

To the Usher or other Officer: Please let me know if there is anything wrong with this letter. It is nearly dark and my pencil worn out. M. HARMAN.

* * *

STATE PENITENTIARY, JOLIET, ILL., June 10, 1906.—My Dear Lillian: Two letters from you last week—one written Sunday eve and the other Tuesday or Wednesday. Glad to know that Virna and George are better of their cough. What you say in regard to your "chief responsibility" is quite correct. I want to see you very much, but can wait till it is altogether safe to bring the babe with you. Hope the warden will let G. O'B. see me tomorrow, and then allow you to come a week or so later. Weather quite warm, but not oppressively hot. Some good showers lately. The worst feature, perhaps, of work on the rock pile is its monotony; hence I would gladly welcome the privilege of singing while pounding stone, just as the ditchers are able to do more and better work on the Panama canal when permitted to sing. Talking is not allowed to workers in the stone yard, but singing, in low tones, is not contrary to rules, so far as I know. I have a good supply of tunes suitable for use as accompaniment to the strokes of the stone-hammer, but have forgotten most of the words to which these tunes were set. In my younger years I once owned a collection of hymns and songs, called the "Universal Musician," printed with numerals instead of notes, but have not seen the book for many years. It is probably now out of print, but if you could get a copy for me I would greatly appreciate the favor. It was published fifty years or more ago by Benj. Franklin, I think, in Cincinnati—not "Old Ben," of course. It was the best all-round book of the kind I ever saw. If the book itself cannot be had I would sincerely thank you or any one else for the words of some of the songs I learned therein, such as these—designating by first lines:

"Away to the greenwood, away;" "When early morning's ruddy light bids man to labor go;" "The morning advancing peeps o'er the hills;" "O, a farmer's boy is a jovial lad;" "Flow gently, sweet Afton;" "Farewell, farewell to thee, Araby's Daughter;" "O my soul is full of music;" "Fly away to my native land, sweet dove;" "Highland Mary;" "Ye banks and braes o' bonny Doon;" the song of the various handicrafts, etc.

Among the library books I read is "People of the Abyss," by Jack London, and can't help contrasting the daily lives of the denizens of the "under world" in the largest and richest city with the daily fare and prospects ahead of the convicts in Joliet S. P.—with their abundant and regular supply of excellent food, their comfortable clothing, clean and warm beds, educational privileges, and, generally speaking, regular and not excessively hard work.

Since my Decoration Day letter was written I have received letters as follows: Ada M. Morley, 2; J. P. Phinney, 1; P. Isgrig, 1; Katharine S. Fry, 1; Sadie A. Magoon, 1; Lois Waisbrooker, 1; George Bedborough, 1; A. E. K. Parkhurst, 2; J. M. Gilbert, 1; A. B. Fish, 1; Elizabeth H. Russell, 1; Hulda P. Loomis, 1; George B. Wheeler, 1; Henry E. Dewey, 1; Philip G. Peabody, 2; Frank L. Poland, 1; Lucinda B. Chandler, 1; Thirza E. Rathbun, 1; Emma Greene, 1; C. N. Greene, 1; Mattie Day Haworth, 1; William H. Wilgus, 1; William Frets, 1; F. A. De Crane, 1; P. L. Philips, 1; Sarah Stone Rockhill, 1; Ed. W. Chamberlain, 1; "Frank," 1; Lillian Harman, 3. A few of these are cards. Please thank the writers of these friendly missives for me and ask them to kindly continue to remember the prisoner in bonds. No one can fully appreciate the value of letters until shut up behind prison bars. Also, please remember to thank all who have spent and are spending time, labor and money in efforts to secure my release. Just what shape these efforts are taking I have only a vague general idea, but feel sure that the agitation of the subject will help to make people think, and think seriously, and that the general result will be an advance toward a better understanding of the great fundamental problem of human rights and human wrongs.

Also, please do not forget to thank all societies or clubs that have kindly remembered the prisoner in bonds by resolutions of sympathy and encouragement, especially such clubs or societies as those with whose members I am personally acquainted, such as the Chicago Society of Anthropology. I received in due time the report of the secretary, Dr. C. P. Lewis, stating that I had been thus honored by a unanimous vote of the membership at a regular meeting, but have never yet learned whether a suitable acknowledgment of the honor had been made in my name.

My single sheet is full. Good-by, dear daughter. With love and heartfelt thanks for your faithful and untiring work, ever yours,

M. H.

To the Usher: Please let me know if anything is wrong with this letter. M. HARMAN.

NATIONAL OWNERSHIP OF ALL PROPERTY.

We live under a condition of individual ownership of property. Who knows of any one, rich, medium or poor, who is absolutely contented with economic conditions as they exist—who is not to some extent suffering the spirit of discontent?

Let us study into national ownership of all property as a remedy.

Let us suppose the nation owns everything except the clothes we wear. Money is abolished. Everybody works for the nation. Each draws the same annual salary. Draw pay in form of a ticket. Everybody is a producer in some form a part of the time at least. All products turned over to the nation and placed in storehouses the property of the nation. We buy everything from the nation and pay by having our ticket punched. Our salary is perpetual from the day of birth to date of death. Our salary is adequate to secure food, raiment and shelter, and also travel and various entertainments. The nation's libraries are at the disposal of all.

What is the nation? It is of the people, by the people and for the people. Officers are chosen upon merit and draw no more salaries than field laborers. All draw same salary, regardless of ability or condition.

How transform from the present condition of individual ownership to a condition of national ownership? By natural growth.

Some people understand and want this change. Others do not understand and do not want any such change.

Very well, then. Let every tub stand on its own bottom. Let those who do not understand or are indifferent to any change, continue as they are. Let those who do understand get together and adopt such plans of life as will tend to gradually bring the condition of life desired.

Here is a suggestion: Farmer A opens his home to those who desire him as a leader (limiting the number) and those he desires as followers. They all work together to build up a large estate and place it in legal form to succeed from generation to generation. B is a manufacturer, and does same. C is a merchant, and does same. So on through all the occupations. Accordingly as these people are happy and prosperous, accordingly will others fall in line, until finally all property will become absorbed and national ownership have come by natural growth.

Discussion is in order and all questions and answers are to be sent direct to LUCIFER for publication when accepted.

Yours for truth and the best. SUBSCRIBER.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

R. THOMAS, JR., Alderson, W. Va.—Please find enclosed $5 for books, subscription to LUCIFER and Brother Harman's latest photograph. I wish I could hire a man to take his place on the rock pile, or I would take his place for a while if they would let him out. This is a shameful outrage.

P. E. LEONARD, Cestos, Okla.—Have just finished reading Mr. Crane's "History of Persecution," etc., in No. 1066, and would like to see it in pamphlet form. It is splendid! Will take and distribute $1 worth or more if so printed. Enclosed find $2 in redemption of my promise to help pay extra cost of printing Moses Harman's photograph in LUCIFER.

ELIZABETH H. RUSSELL, 828 South Seventh street, San Jose, Cal.—Many thanks for the package of LUCIFERS No. 1065. Will remit later on when I can send for a money order. I am pleased to report that I have obtained thirty-seven signatures for one of the petitions among friends and neighbors, and posted the same to the Free Speech League. I sincerely hope the president will show himself of some use in this case and right the great wrong done your father.

LUCINDA B. CHANDLER, Norwood Park, Ill.—Dear Lillian: I was glad to see in last LUCIFER that your father had received two letters of mine. I had mailed a third before. Today shall mail the fourth. It's too bad he can't have his cell alone. I think of you often and know your burden is very heavy. I hope and trust you will keep up courage and strength. A benefit was given me last week by Douglas Park Woman's Club, so I can spare a mite to help LUCIFER. I wish it could be much more. Best wishes and love.

J. B., Springfield, Mo.—On Saturday, May 5, there was what had been announced as a "Machinists' smoker" by the North Side Lodge, but which proved to be a political trap. At least they furnished liquid refreshments and chin music. Refreshments had but little attraction for me, but I was on hand with a petition for pardon for Comrade Harman, which I had received from the Free Speech League. As soon as Mr. Hamlin, candidate for congress, finished

"soft-soaping" the boys I approached him for his signature to the petition. But he "knew Harman; used to go to school to him" here in southern Missouri, I forget the county. (Is that true?) "Did not approve of his views, had read LUCIFER, and recently had a personal letter from Harman wanting him to subscribe to his relief fund." (Is that correct?) No, he could not sign it; he "did not think it right for a man to marry one woman and when he got tired of her go off and leave her with a lot of children to take care of. Why, just look! we have men in congress today who keep three or four women." I simply responded that Mr. Harman was not responsible for the existing state of commercial immorality and turned away without casting more pearls before swine, though I felt tempted to tell him that the things he spoke of were the result of present conditions, and wished to ask him if the reason he did not want to disturb them was because he, too, desired the privilege of "keeping three or four women" when he got into congress. Two numbskulls who heard his protest refused to sign, but I got eighty-seven signatures there that night. Not so bad for a start. I doubt he and his beer getting one-quarter as many votes. I enclose $1, for which please send me a few copies of Post and Wakeman letters and LUCIFER with petition in, and balance, if any, on subscription.

ALBINA L. WASHBURN, San Diego, Cal.—I have been dumb at the actual execution of the absurd and cruel sentence of your dear father, but would have written sooner but for the handicap of lame shoulder and spinal troubles. Under care of osteopath and magnetic doctors for some months. Some better and will not delay longer. Enclosed find $2—$1 for extra copies of LUCIFER through March and the Burbank letter number, and on subscription; the other for a copy of "Karezza," which I wish to present to a young pair of friends who are to marry June 20. If you have not "Karezza" in stock send me something else, whatever you think will fit the case of sensible but uninformed orphans. With much loving thought for you and to you and yours.

L. P. E., Morgan City, Utah.—A few days ago I was most agreeably surprised to receive two copies of LUCIFER, the reform paper that, among the many I have read, I always held to be far in advance of all of them. My firm faith in the grand principles advanced by your father is, if possible, stronger today than it ever was. My age, soon 81 years, prevents me from taking any active part in this most important movement. Among the many so-called Freethinkers few are thinking, reading and investigating far enough. There are only few, very few, who possess such indomitable character as your worthy father. And while I deeply sympathize with him in being deprived of liberty and freedom, I am fully convinced that the time shall come when Moses Harman's name will be placed among the foremost saviors of mankind. He is fighting for a principle that will not die even if he shall die in the fight. I send the petition today.

EDWIN F. LUDWIG, Secretary Economic Educational League, Washington, D. C.—I enclose $2, a donation from the Economic Educational League. This is part of the collection taken at our meeting on April 29, when we considered the subject of free speech. A part of the collection was also sent to the Free Speech League. The attendance was very small, owing to threatening weather, but the meeting was on the whole quite successful. One of our members gave an able address on "Our Despotic Postal Censorship," outlining the proceedings against yourself and LUCIFER and making a plea for free speech and a free press. Petitions for your pardon were circulated at the meeting, and before and since, and eighty-three names were secured. These, with perhaps a few additional three names were secured. These, with perhaps a few additional ones, will be forwarded to the Free Speech League in a day or two. We regret the donation is not larger and trust you are holding your own. Cheer up, and go in for victory.

W. P. ROOT, Medina, Ohio.—I have just received a copy of your journal for April, containing an account of Mr. Harman's arrest. While I have not read the matter for which he was arrested I have no doubt it was far from being criminal, and I cannot help feeling that his incarceration is an indication that we are fast getting into troubled water; for when advanced thinkers can thus be confined at the whim of one press censor we might all just as well put our necks into St. Anthony's yoke and lie down to our bondage forever. Books and papers are constantly sent through the mails that are designed to pander to passion, but nothing is said about it, for the designed to pander to passion, but nothing is said about it, for the word "art" covers it all; but when a vital matter is seriously discussed by a Harman or by a Dr. A. B. Stockham, who has blest her sex so greatly by her works, a fine is promptly imposed. Whatever evils may be entailed on us as a people by questionable literature of the "Sapho" order it cannot be compared with the trouble we shall encounter by letting one man interpret true modesty for all the nation, especially when his utility is measured by the "tons of poisoned literature" he destroys annually. Perhaps the time is not far off when it will be a crime to criticise our censors.

JOE THOUNSON, Healdsburg, Cal.—Reading Mr. R. B. Kerr's letter and his evident (to him) favoritism with God, reminded me of a sister equally conceited. One evening about two years ago at her house the conversation turned upon chicken thieves, of which she had no fear, being confident that God would protect her property (he is a watchdog, you see, among his many accomplishments); but at that very moment two "hoboes" were helping themselves to some of her choice Plymouth Rocks. We heard the "pug" barking furiously, but paid no attention. The hoboes were discovered next morning with seven hens in their possession. If Mr. Kerr is acquainted with Mrs. Wermouth he would do well to ask her for an introduction to this God who is so watchful over him. Mrs. Maud Lord Drake had been in the city, but would not allow her husband to remain to complete his business. She felt it coming, but did not claim that God had anything to do with it. Nor did she think it was God when she predicted the Johnstown flood and the Galveston horror. The man who taught me more than any one else, W. H. Chaney, foretold the day of his death and that he would be buried in a blizzard, which prophecy was fulfilled to the letter. I have spent many years in San Francisco during the last thirty-two years, have traveled for months by land and sea, but always happen to be in the right place at the right time, so that I have never even seen anything worse than a shipwreck, and was never in one, and so I do not hesitate to say it will go on for the next twenty-five years or so, but God does not tell me so. All this is foreign to the mission of your little paper, yet I feel that many of your readers would be benefited by a little knowledge along these lines. They would learn to leave the gods to the witch-burners, the Comstocks and persecutors generally. All true reformers leave superstition behind. It makes the angels weep when they look back and see what a belief in God has done for humanity. . . . Directly after the "quake" I was to have been sent to England; had everything packed and made mes adieux, but the best-laid plans, etc. Here I am still, and penniless. Been waiting for a few dollars to share with you. Now I have several personal friends in distress in San Francisco, among whom is Prof. Haddock, editor of "Human Nature" (I believe you know him). He has lost about everything, is partially paralyzed, but there are hopes of his recovery. . . . By waiting a day or two I expect to get a dollar or two to share with you. I expect to inclose $2—one for a renewal of the paper and one for the cause. Although your father has my warmest sympathies I have been unable to prove it, much to my chagrin. I was in full sympathy with the sex question thirty-five years ago, and believe I would have endorsed every idea he has expressed on the subject. I regret that so many journals which sympathize with him disclaim a belief in all his opinions. I think such persons are too conservative, not pioneers in the work of reform.

DISINTEGRATION OF THE OLD MARRIAGE.

Having tried the credentials of average marriage champions and found them spurious we are free to take up marriage de novo and study it as if no lions of prejudice roared against its fair discussion. We brush aside the middle-class family-worshipers who rave when the family is spoken against, but look on meekly as kitchen menials while the rich thieves wreck it. They cry, "Rescue the family, repair it, deliver us from divorce, or society will perish." As Archbishop Farley describes it, "Our national life is already honeycombed by this insidious evil (divorce). In fact, the walls of society have already begun to totter, if they are not actually falling under its attacks." To all of which we are compelled to reply, Buncombe. You are playing a comedy, the family is merely a verbal fetish with you. Are not you all either coward fawners on the rich who are knocking out the props of the family, or hand in glove with them for profit, begging their brothel and graft-got gold to build your churches or to nourish Bourbon universities? In fact, the family knights are likewise heated apostles or willing pillars of the industrial system which is sending the family to perdition. Pardon me if I reject the judgment of such minds.

We must therefore probe the family without fear, since race future is at stake. Without children mankind ends, with poor children it retrogrades, and if the well born are ill reared good birth is defeated, and again we have race retrogression.

Two facts disintegrating marriage are our mode of industrial life and a new intelligence. The industrial formation not only destroys marriage but denies ideal union of the sexes, thus violating intelligence. Intelligence therefore opposes the industrial regime and the marriage system as it is, postulating an industrial form wherein the sexes may unite rationally with a view to personal and race perfection. Present marriage is doomed if the industrial scheme stands and is doomed if it falls, for in the latter event intelligence will replace it with a higher relation.—From "Marriage and Race Death," a new work by Morrison J. Swift.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

President Roosevelt's Gospel of Doom.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

In this open letter the authors shows that large families are injurious to the mother, injurious to the child, and injurious to the community. She attributes Mr. Roosevelt's views on the subject to the influence of "Hebraic dispensations, effete and age-worn superstition." Price 5 cents.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

An Essay on the Duty of Civil Disobedience.

BY HENRY D. THOREAU.

A reprint of this classic essay on the supremacy of the individual conscience. Antique paper; artistic covers, dark green on olivine. 10c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

WANTED—Office help of either sex; good pay to the right person; state age and qualifications and salary wanted; location in the Middle West. Address E., care of LUCIFER office. 1069

CORRESPONDENCE WANTED—From those who appreciate a good home and desire to devote their lives to building up a large estate as a means of aiding in the natural growth and evolution of this continent into a condition of national ownership of all property. Read article in LUCIFER, No. 1068, upon this subject. Address E., care LUCIFER Office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PHRENOLOGY.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

J. H. GREER, M. D.,

53 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

PHILIP G. PEABODY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

DR. OGILVIE RICE,

DENTIST.

1356 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

Note Reductions.

Hampden: 18 size, "Special R.-Way," 23 jls., $26; "New R.-Way," 23 jls., $24; Deuber Watch Co., 21 jls., $17; same, 17 jls., $14.

Elgin: "Veritas," 23 jls., $29; "Father Time," 21 jls., $22.50; "R. W. Raymond," 19 jls., $20; "R. W. Raymond," 17 jls., $18.50.

Waltham: "Vanguard," 23 jls., $29; "Crescent Street," 21 jls., $22.50; "Appleton, Tracy & Co., Premier," 17 jls., $18.50; same, not "Premier," $16.

The above guaranteed to pass R.-Way Inspectors.

Sundries: "Waltham," "P. S. Bartlett," or Elgin "Wheeler," 17 jls., adjusted, nickel, $9; same, gilt, $7; same, Hampden, nickel, $8; same, not adjusted, $7; Elgin, Waltham or Hampden, nickel, 15 jls., $6; same, gilt, $6; Elgin or Waltham, nickel, nonattachable hair spring, 7 jls., $5; Hampden, 7 jls., gilt, $4.50; "Standard" or "Century," 7 jls., $3.

All the above in 2, 3 or 4-ounce silverine cases, prepaid. In silver, or gold filled, screw case, accompanied by manufacturer's and my guarantee for 20 years, $5, or in hunting case, $6 more. In 25-year screw case, $5, or in hunting case, $8.50 more than in silverine case. In solid gold case, $10 to $50 more.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.

Large (6) size Elgin, Waltham or Hampden, 20-year gold filled, latest style, artistic hand-chased, 7 jls., $9; 15 jls., $11; 16 jls., adj., $15. Small (0) size, 7 jls., $11.50; 15 jls., $15; 16 jls., adj., $18. "Riverside," extra fine, $24; in 25-year case, $1 more; in 14-k. solid gold case, $10 to $50 more. Latter with diamonds, all in plush box, prepaid, with guarantee.

Send for prices of Watches not listed, Ingersoll Spoons, Free Thought Badges, Jewelry, Rings, Optical Goods and My Tract, "Thelem in the Crucible," free. OTTO WETTSTEIN, La Grange, Cook Co., Ill.

1068

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS AND PERIODICALS.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man." Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood.

BY AGNES BENHAM.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 16, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Isola: Or, The Disinherited.

A REVOLT FOR WOMAN AND ALL THE DISINHERITED.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

With Colored Frontispiece Portrait of Fortunatus on the Heights of Avenamore, entitled "The Last Watch."

In his characteristics of the drama Mr. G. J. Holyoake writes: "Her conception of womanly independence is original in literature. . . . The moral interest of the drama has great charm. . . . As the tragic death of a woman capable of both heroism and reflection, the last hours of Fortunatus are memorable. . . . The reader will see in The Last Watch on the Heights of Avenamore the beauty, the dignity, the determination, without defiance, of Isola. Intellectual intrepidity in defence of the Right is the Soul of the drama THE DISINHERITED.
Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Songs of a Child.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

In the Coming Day the Rev. J. Page Hopps writes of them: "The writings of this child suggest the presence and inspiration of a master spirit, fierce for freedom, daring in criticism, and splendid in spiritual adventure. The poems are full of dash and fire, whether treating of Nature and her wild delights, or the mind world with all its possibilities of rapture and depression, joy and anguish, trust and horror. But the wonder of it! The strenuous 'dramatic tragedy,' 'Abel Avenged,' was written at fourteen years and a half, and the militant 'Kryptic's Defence' at sixteen—both crammed with the most imaginable heresies. Throughout this whole book there is hardly a line—perhaps not a line—which is mere composition. It is all powder and shot and morning and evening stars. . . . LIAIS is written with singular vivacity and grace, and is as brilliant as it is thoughtful, with an undertone of pathos that wins sympathy and attention."
Price, $1.25.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."
Price, 5c each; 25c a dozen.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Martyrdom of Man.

BY WINWOOD READE.

Contents: An Epitome of Universal History, under Four Heads.

WAR—Egypt. Western Asia. The Persians. The Greeks. The Macedonians. Alexandria. The Phœnicians. Carthage and Rome. Roman Africa. The Arabs.

RELIGION—The Natural History of Religion. The Israelites. The Jews. The Prophets. Character of Jesus. The Christians. Arabia. Mecca. Character of Muhammad. Description of Africa. Muhammadanism in Central Africa.

LIBERTY—Ancient Europe. Invasion of the Germans. The Castle. The Town. The Church. Arab Spain. Venice. The Portuguese Discoveries. The Slave Trade. Abolition in Europe. Abolition in America. Materials of Human History.

INTELLECT—Animal Period of the Earth. Origin of Man, and Early History. Summary of Universal History. The Future of the Human Race. The Religion of Reason and of Love.
Price, cloth, $1. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, JULY 5, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1069

BE THYSELF.

Be thyself! A nobler gospel
Never in the past has been.
Be thyself; 'tis holy scripture,
Though no Bible-lids between.

Dare to shape in thought and language
That is lying in your brain;
Dare to launch it, banners flying,
On the bosom of the main.

Then though coward world may scorn thee,
Friendship fail, and fortune frown,
Earth itself grow dark around thee,
Foes on thee in rage look down.

Heed not; there's a word more potent
Carried in thy manly heart.
Be thyself and do thy duty,—
Thou could'st ask no holier part.

—WILLIAM DENTON.

DIVORCE OR SEPARATION?

Recent public scandals in England have set some of the people thinking about increased facilities for divorce. The law in most American states is probably at variance with British law, which admits as grounds for divorce adultery on the part of a wife and adultery and cruelty on the part of a husband. The chief objections to the British divorce laws are that a divorce suit is too expensive to be within the reach of any but the rich, the grounds for divorce are too restricted, and there is an illogical stipulation that, although the adultery of either party is a reasonable ground, the adultery of both parties, instead of increasing the necessity for a divorce, renders the relief unattainable.

Poor people in England seldom or never think of divorce. There is a "pro forma pauperis" method of procedure, but it is rarely used, the poor quite accurately gauging the true worthlessness of "cheap law." In recent years it has been made possible for police magistrates to grant "judicial separations," and of these facilities full advantage has been taken. In the year 1904 no fewer than 15,500 married people were separated by police magistrates in London alone.

What does this mean? It means the people are finding out that marriage is a failure as an institution. These people have suffered. They have experienced how little marriage can help them and they ask to be made free. The immensity of the figures recently published show in lurid colors what a ghastly fraud is the alleged protection afforded by marriage.

The journalistic and clerical busybodies are beginning to tremble at the result of orthodox objection to divorce. Columns of our newspapers are being filled with jeremiads inspired by recent statistics. It is startling the conventional dovecotes to find how immensely popular these semi-divorces have become. The awful horror felt by the scribes is not brought forth by the nameless cruelties, the daily and nightly outrages and the direct and indirect robbery which have served as the reasons for magisterial interference. The journalistic indignation is reserved for the noteworthy fact that these separated couples are contented with their separations and do not yearn for remarriage. They have had some "protection" and do not want any more. The following extracts from a widely read English journal ("Referee," London) are a fair specimen of many current orthodox comments:

"The one plain question it is our duty to put to ourselves is whether the wholesale granting of judicial separations is likely to conduce to the morality of those concerned or not. Magistrates have no option in the matter. They can advise patience and self-control, they can express their opinion that there are faults on both sides and that a spirit of mutual forbearance and helpfulness may avert the breach that threatens, but if two married people are seriously bent on returning to the ways of bachelorhood and spinsterhood they can have their way. They cannot secure permission to remarry, but they can walk out of each other's lives, and, apart from some pecuniary arrangement into which the husband may or may not be forced to enter, they have no longer a concern with or a control over each other. There are many thousands of persons in this condition now, and their numbers are increasing yearly.

"The only possible answer to the plain question just posed is that, human nature being what it is, the moral tone of the community will not on the whole be raised by this condition of affairs. A married woman who is permanently separated from her husband is not hedged about by some of the protecting sanctities which once sheltered her. She may be, and she is often, a woman of spotless character, who has been deeply injured and whose position commands the delicate respect of all good men. But all separated women are not of this kind, nor are all men chivalrous and honorable. At the very best the woman has lost one protecting influence, however poor and ineffective it may have been, and at the worst she is unavoidably exposed to temptations which were not so great nor so frequent in the days of her bondage. And as for the average man who is separated permanently from his wife, and is by law forbidden to find another, the social hypocrisy which pretends to believe that he will grow into a plaster saint may be dismissed at once. The whole system tends towards a degradation of the sexual relationship, and can tend in no other direction. Judicial separation is a half-way house between household misery and divorce. It may afford relief in many cases, but the relief is never as complete as, in the case of a really deserving subject, it ought to be. It entails a lasting disability which no good man or woman ought to suffer, and in many cases—and these most probably the majority—its balance is in favor of loose living."

So long as state interference in sex relations is to be tolerated at all, it seems eminently sensible for the state to protect from a second blunder those who have already made one sad, serious error. But what an answer it is to the plea of the "Referee" and others that women lose their "protecting influence" if they separate from a scoundrel whose behavior has been sufficient to convince even a London magistrate that the marriage is a failure. The happy "victims" do not grumble—it is only our pharisees on the press and in the pulpit who see any hardship in their lot. "The plain question" is not, as put by the "Referee," the question of conducing to monogamic ideals of morality; it is not, in fact, a question of the future morals of the separated couples—it is merely a recognition of the failure of the marriage already accomplished. The magistrate is not asked to consider the future behavior of the couple—that will depend on the characters of the individuals. The reason for the separation is that freedom from a hateful marriage is admittedly preferable to the pretended "sanctity" of a cruel bondage.

GEORGE BERNSCOUGH.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF MOSES HARMAN.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

"THE JUNGLE" AND ITS CRITICS.

The largest industrial center on earth is formed by the Union stock yards and packing houses of Chicago. Other things being equal, we should expect to find here the most perfect type of capitalism, the most perfect hideousness, most widespread misery, the most highly developed exploitation.

Hence it was but fitting that the great novel of capitalism should be built around this industry. Into Packingtown came Comrade Upton Sinclair, writing as fiercely primitive as the savagery of that locality, as keenly complex as the industry upon which that savagery rests.

The real story of the book is the story of concentrated, crushing industrial exploitation. This story is hung upon a group of Lithuanians, who, in any other book, would be called the "principal characters." But in this book the real characters are social classes and industrial conditions. Jurgis is but a sort of personified Packingtown proletariat. All the hideous conditions under which profit producers in the great Chicago meat factories toil is told with a power that brings the name of Zola again and again to mind. In some ways Zola is surpassed. The social philosophy of Zola was the utopian communism of Fourier; the social philosophy of Sinclair is the international socialism of Karl Marx.

The story of human evolution is photographed for us by contrasting Packingtown with Lithuania, from which Jurgis and his family come. Torn out of a social stage centuries older than that of Chicago, this group of Lithuanian peasants, accustomed to mediæval, communal personal relations, based on status and tradition, suddenly find themselves hurled into a social stage whose only bond of cohesion is the possibility of profit, and where human beings prey upon one another as do the wild beasts in an African jungle, and where, worst of all, even their neighbors and fellow workers have lost the social feeling of caste and fellowship that bound together the peasants of far-off Lithuania.

In such an industrial society such individuals could not but be dwarfed into insignificance by the industrial life that swallowed them up.

"It seemed to them impossible of belief that anything so stupendous could have been devised by mortal man. . . . It was a thing as tremendous as the universe—the laws and ways of its working no more than the universe to be questioned or understood. All that a mere man could do, it seemed to Jurgis, was to take a thing like this as he found it, and do as he was told; to be given a place in it and a share in its wonderful activities was a blessing to be grateful for, as one was grateful for the sunshine and the rain."

Then we watch that machine at work. All its coverings are taken off and its fearful, cruel nakedness exposed. We see the helpless fight for life by the workers—the wearing out and tossing aside of the strong—the grinding up of women and children inch by inch—the terrible accidents and insidious poisoning to which the workers were exposed—the hopelessness of resistance,—until at last the whole family is run through the mill as mercilessly and thoroughly as any dumb animal that ever entered the stock yards gates. But through it all, Jurgis, as the typical proletarian, retains enough strength to enable him at last to grasp the philosophy which the whole industry has been preaching to him while it crushed him—the philosophy of socialism.

The whole point and heart of the book centers around the condition of the workers and their struggle for better conditions. Yet it is safe to say that ninety per cent of the critics have spent a majority of their space on the few pages that are devoted to the abuses in the production of meat that affect the consumer.

Nearly half of the words that have been devoted to "The Jungle" in the reviews that have come under my notice have been with reference to about three pages of the book (pp. 113-115). It is these pages which are most frequently quoted as convicting the author of exaggeration or worse. Yet he introduces these with the words "And there were other things stranger than this, according to the gossip of the men." Certainly any one who knows even a little bit about the yards knows that it is just such things as these that make up the gossip of the men.

Nothing could be more illuminative of the character of capitalism than the way in which this attack upon it has been met. "Ignore what he says about the men; deny his assertions about the meat, but investigate a little to save our stomachs, and abuse the writer," has been the programme of the defenders of exploitation.

Roosevelt had to get "strenuous" over the matter and has sent two commissions to Chicago to "investigate." So far as I am able to learn, and I was in a position to know something about what they were doing, neither found anything they did not want to find. The only strange thing is that any one takes such "investigations" seriously. Capitalism investigating itself would be a roaring farce, were it not, like everything else in capitalism, so close to the terribly tragic.

So far as the facts of "The Jungle" are concerned, I want to bear testimony here that, terrible as is the arraignment, Comrade Sinclair has still fallen far short of the truth. The time which he spent in study was too short to learn the whole truth—indeed it would have taken a lifetime. But a large portion of his facts are notorious. Many of them were published by me six years ago. Since the appearance of "The Jungle" I have taken the trouble to look into those statements made by Comrade Sinclair with which I was not familiar, and I have verified, by men who know whereof they speak, all those which have been challenged, and have learned much more that cannot be told because of the suffering which it would entail upon the workers who are forced to do the sort of work which is denied as existing.

I make this statement after careful consideration of the facts as I know them, and "The Jungle," and its critics, that the person who claims that Sinclair has exaggerated speaks either from mendacity or ignorance—is either a liar or a fool.

The Chicago "Evening Post" sent out a reporter to get opinions on its truthfulness and published several columns of interviews on the subject. Strange as it may seem, the priests, preachers, packers and philanthropists of the stock yards district all agreed that the book was "overdrawn." On the other hand, conversation directly and indirectly with the only people who know what they are talking about—the workers in the yards—has failed to find a man who does not agree that it is a truthful picture.

To take some of the incidents that have been specifically challenged: I know the family whose child was drowned in the gutter; I have helped to treat dozens of cases of infection and blood-poisoning of yards workers; I have known men and their families who have fallen into the rendering vats; I have talked with employes who had helped in the dodging of inspection and the marketing of rotten meat; as agent of the stock yards district of the bureau of charities, and a volunteer inspector of the Chicago health department, I have seen things in the lives of the workers in Packingtown more terrible than any depicted in "The Jungle." Best of all, as a socialist, I have seen the growth of socialism in that locality until today it contains the highest percentage of socialist voters of any large industrial center in the world. I give this personal testimony because of the attacks which have been made upon "The Jungle" by ignorant or corrupt book reviewers and by others who are interested in the maintenance of conditions as they are in Packingtown.—J. M. Simons, in International Socialist Review.

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND SEX EDUCATION.

The following report of a recent session of the American Medical Association held in Boston is sent to LUCIFER by May Clifford Hurd, of Wellesley, Mass. Commenting on it she says: "Very good, but most people wait till they are 'patients' to learn why they became ill. An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of remedy. Why not allow Moses and Lillian Harman to give some prevention in the shape of knowledge?"

In a symposium on the duty of the profession toward womankind, Dr. E. E. Murger, of Iowa, advocated the establishment of a bureau of publicity in order to teach people how to lead happier and longer lives. He said that in his opinion the medical profession has not done its whole duty until it has educated the whole mass of people so that they can detect fraudulent medical advertisements and protect themselves from quacks. Dr. H. O. Marcy, of Boston, said that at present there is too much pretense and fashion in society and that the people should return to the simpler life of their forefathers. Deferred marriages received a rap from Dr. J. Henry Carstens, of Detroit, who accused the women of not being willing to marry a man unless he was making a good deal of money, and that the fair sex also put on too much style. Nearly all the speakers were optimists.

In a paper on the "Protection of the Innocent" Dr. W. Lee Howard, of Westboro, urged a wider dissemination of medical knowledge for the benefit of the general public, and this view was seconded by a number of other speakers. All emphasized the fact that ignorance is not innocence, and that the plainer medical truths are expressed the better. Doctors who see that their patients need to have such truths explained to them, but who shirk the responsibility, are moral cowards. Dr. Howard said too much was left to the minister which should properly come in the province of the physician, and that the latter should do his duty by instructing all who needed a fuller knowledge of medical truths. The keynote of the address was that a knowledge of all the functions of the body is necessary to the proper development and right living of both men and women, and that such information rightly imparted is much better than the lessons learned in the costly school of experience.

The morning session was devoted to a discussion of means by which the public may be reached, as it is the opinion of the doctors that all the papers read would be of great interest and benefit to the general public and should not be relegated to the medical libraries.

SELF-RELIANCE.

[At my latest visit to my father—on June 17—he gave me a copy of Emerson's Essays with passages marked, which he desired to reproduce in LUCIFER. Here are some of them.—L. H.]

A man is relieved and gay when he has put his heart into his work and done his best; but what he has said or done otherwise, shall give him no peace. It is a deliverance which does not deliver. In the attempt his genius deserts him; no muse befriends; no invention, no hope. Trust thyself: every heart vibrates to that iron string.

Society everywhere is in conspiracy against the manhood of every one of its members. Society is a joint stock company in which the members agree, for the better securing of his bread to each shareholder, to surrender the liberty and culture of the eater. The virtue in most request is conformity. Self-reliance is its aversion. It loves not realities and creators, but names and customs.

Whoso would be a man must be a nonconformist. He who would gather immortal palms must not be hindered by the name of goodness, but must explore if it be goodness. Nothing is at last sacred but the integrity of our own mind. Absolve you to yourself, and you shall have the suffrage of the world. . . .

No law can be sacred to me but that of my nature. Good and bad are but names very readily transferable to that or this; the only right is what is after my constitution, the only wrong is what is against it.

A man is to carry himself in the presence of all opposition as if everything were titular and ephemeral but he.

I am ashamed to think how easily we capitulate to badges and names, to large societies and dead institutions. . . . I ought to go upright and vital, and speak the rude truth in all ways. . . .

It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to live after our own; but the great man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude.

A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds, adored by little statesmen and philosophers and divines. With consistency a great soul has simply nothing to do. He may as well concern himself with his shadow on the wall. Out upon your guarded lips! Sew them up with pack thread, do. Else, if you would be a man, speak what you think today in words as hard as cannon balls, and tomorrow speak what tomorrow thinks in hard words again, though it contradict everything you said today. Ah, then, exclaim the aged ladies, you shall be misunderstood. Misunderstood! It is a right fool's word. Is it so bad, then, to be misunderstood? Pythagoras was misunderstood, and Socrates, and Jesus, and Luther, and Copernicus, and Galileo, and Newton, and every pure and wise spirit that ever took flesh. To be great is to be misunderstood.

THE REAL WASHINGTON.

The blistering indictment which the Philadelphia clergyman brought against the memory of George Washington at the Evacuation Day exercises, held at Valley Forge, seems not to have scored a success, as the critics of theatrical performances say. The Philadelphia rector announced nothing particularly novel with regard to the life and character of Washington. He said among other things:

"The true Washington was not a churchman. In examining three volumes on his life by Marshall, Lodge and Ford you will not find religion mentioned in his life. Instead, you will find that he was passionately fond of cards, clubs, clothes, dancing, lottery, theaters, gambling, billiards, dogs, dueling, distilleries, fishing, fox hunting, horses, beautiful women, music, matrimony, raffles and tobacco."

We might even add to this that Washington is commonly reported to have sworn mighty oaths on one or two memorable occasions, and the consequence of this profane report has been increased regard and esteem rather than the contrary. The more that the Rev. Mr. Steele and others like him can do to show that the immortal George was a very human sort of man the more profound will be the respect for the lofty eminence that he attained despite his disadvantages.

The Rev. Mr. Steele had many things against Washington. He was not even confirmed in the church. He was poorly educated. He held slaves. He never won a battle. He was one of the least of the ruling spirits in the country in his time. He inherited and married into his fortune, and so on. The speaker said that he was unable to analyze the elements of Washington's character and find in what his greatness consisted, but he concluded with a characteristic clerical non sequitur: "Nevertheless, he was a great man."—New York Sun.

FLESH-EATING.

In his famous letter to the London "Times," on the land question in Russia, Tolstoi spoke of several ideas as ripe for discussion and action. He spoke of private property in land as the "nearest and most obvious evil." He held that, besides facing this evil, our civilization must also face the problems of capital punishment, prostitution and militarism. And to this category of ripe problems he added the practice of flesh-eating.

The packing-house exposure is the most effective argument ever made for a vegetarian diet. It will be hard for imaginative people to forget those dead rats and amputated fingers. They will reflect that there is already an army of government meat inspectors. If, with all these inspectors, it took a socialist novel to acquaint the public with conditions, how secure will these imaginative people feel when the government has a few more inspectors?

We used to go to the priests for salvation. Now we go to the state. We fly to the arms of the government inspector. Just as if he had not already been tried and found wanting. "Oh," said a lady, "the government is going to put a label on the meat. It will be all right now." Great is government! With a government label on the sausage, and a rabbit's foot around the neck, may luck be with us! At any rate, we may try eating as Governor Pingree used to vote, holding the nose.

Socialists have capitalized this incident. They have a right to—it was a socialist who started it. So they say, "Let us establish government packing houses." And the one recourse which seems to occur to every one—an increase of the inspectors—is socialistic in its tendency.

There is this difference between socialistic people and socialists: The socialists want the government to stick our pigs for us. The socialistic people want the government to tell the packers how to do it.

But the church as well as the state is under indictment. Has not the church been telling us that the individual problem is everything; that if the individual soul is saved, society will save itself? Are not the packers church members? Is not their gold lifted to God every Sabbath day? Do not their pastors encourage them in the idea that their souls are already saved? Has the church lost its effectiveness, or is its philosophy wrong? But while we are waiting for the church to convert the packers, or for socialism to convert the packing business, why not turn vegetarians?

There are weary arguments for and against this course. But "don't argue—try it." This is the time to make the experiment. Perhaps meat-eating is not at all a necessity, as is thought, but only a habit.

We are not responsible for the tooth and claw struggle of the universe. That is the saddest of mysteries. But we remember the words of the prophet: "They shall not hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain." Those words were born in man's soul. Is it not his destiny to give them reality?—Herbert S. Bigelow, in The Public.

Charles the Fifth, they say, repented of having persecuted the Lutherans. He said to himself, I have thirty watches on my table, and no two of them mark precisely the same time: how could I then imagine that in matters of religion I could make all men think alike? What folly and pride.—Helvetius.

The truth, the hope of any time must always be sought in the minorities. . . . Literary history, and all history, is a record of the power of minorities. . . . In politics, mark the importance of minorities of one, as of Cato, Lafayette, Arago.—R. W. Emerson, in "Letters and Social Aims," p. 161.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year.....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months.....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter Lucifer will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive Lucifer.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

THE ISSUE CONCISELY STATED.

"Tell truth and shame the devil."—Shakespeare.

A noted political leader when asked by his friends what they should say to those who assailed his private personal record, replied briefly and tersely, "Tell the truth!"

A hundred years ago Robert Burns, poet, philosopher and hater of shams, wrote:

"Here's Freedom for him that wad read,
Here's Freedom for him that wad write;
There's nane ever feared that the truth should be heard,
Save they wham the truth wad indict."

These memorable lines, these world-renowned aphorisms, most clearly and concisely outline the issue upon which hangs the verdict and sentence in the case to be tried at Topeka next week in which the KANSAS LIGHT-BEARER is defendant and the (alleged) people of the United States of America are plaintiffs.

LUCIFER is contending for the right to tell the "truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth," in regard to the evils (devils) that haunt the basement stories of our social edifice. LUCIFER would tell the truth and shame these devils; it would turn upon them the calcium light of investigation, so that, being seen in all their native hideousness, they may be shunned by the unwary, and so that the abodes where these devils now dwell and where they hold their ghoulish orgies may be cleansed, purified, sanctified and consecrated to the use of the "angels of light"—i. e., the normal, the uplifting impulses of uncorrupted human nature.

If this be the object of LUCIFER'S contention—if LUCIFER is really what its name indicates, a light-bringer, what must be the position, the attitude, the object of those who are now ranged in battle array against it? What must be the aim of the prosecutors who would extinguish LUCIFER'S light? The answer, it would seem, is self-evident. The prosecutors of LUCIFER do not want the lurking devils to be exposed! In plainer words, LUCIFER'S enemies do not want the social evils, the sexual perversions, to be uncovered and shown to be what they are—physical and moral cancers eating away at the vitals of humanity.

Is this latter position untenable? Is it inconceivable that any man or woman of average intelligence could really wish the continuance, the perpetuity of these universally acknowledged evils?

Sad and discouraging as such admission must be to the lover of his race, the conviction has long since forced itself upon the writer of these lines—who, by the way, is by no means a pessimist—that there is a class of men, a very influential class of men, whose interest it is to have these evils perpetuated. Helen H. Gardener, in her late article in the "Arena," speaks of a class of people "who are benefited by the unintelligent increase of an ignorant population." And why or how should any one be benefited by such increase? The answer most evidently is that the increase of an ignorant population gives to the ease-loving and the power-loving class of men greater facilities and more opportunities for the exercise or gratification of their own selfish propensities.

And for a precisely similar reason the power-loving class are interested in keeping intact the vicious practices and the revolting sexual crimes that have been laid bare by LUCIFER'S correspondents. This power-loving class may be personally pure themselves; they may never be guilty of participating themselves in those vices and crimes; but they know that it is through and by sex that the human race is reproduced, and they know, too, that whatever vitiates and debases sex vitiates and debases the product of sex—i. e., the oncoming generations of men and women. This power-loving class know that if all children were born with strong, self-reliant, intelligent natures there would soon be no need or occasion for a governing class, or at least that there would be so many, comparatively, that would be capable of governing themselves, and so few that would need governing by others, that their own chances of retaining power over their fellow men would be greatly diminished. A captain of police in New York City, in speaking of his own vocation, is reported to have said: "About so many arrests must be made anyway." But if there were no ignorant and vicious subjects of arrest and punishment the taxpayers would soon tell the captain of police, the police judges, the sheriffs, the legislators, etc., that their services were no longer needed.

All unconsciously, it may be, to themselves, even, but that these considerations largely influence the men who are now seeking the destruction of the LIGHT-BEARER, there is good reason to believe. But these are not the only considerations and causes that are now at work. Among these causes may be named the old theologic superstitions in regard to sex, and the fear that if too much light is thrown upon the workings of our ecclesiastico-civil laws and customs regulating the relations of the sexes the integrity of these laws and customs themselves would be endangered or destroyed, and thus the whole time-honored fabric come tumbling about our heads.

To sum up in fewer words the issue to be tried at Topeka next week, it is the issue between Truth and Light on the one hand and Deception and Darkness on the other. LUCIFER'S work is to uncover and expose vice and crime, in order that they may be avoided and that their perpetrators may be held to account. The work of the prosecution is to prevent such exposure by imprisoning the man who has had the hardihood to publish to the world the unvarnished facts. All talk about "obscenity" is mere subterfuge. Language, words and phrases, whether spoken or printed, has of itself no character at all, good or bad; its character depends upon the use to which it is put. If the use of words in the exposure of evil, for the purpose of curing that evil, be not a legitimate use of words, then it would certainly be hard to find a legitimate use.—Moses Harman, in LUCIFER, April 11, 1890.

MANNERISMS THAT KILL.

Even a thought of sex life has been considered immodest and unwomanly. Ignorance has been mistaken for innocence and all knowledge of the creative function has been withheld, while a woman's life has been a demonstration of the think not and do not philosophy; books of etiquette are ful of mannerisms that kill. Do not run, do not laugh, do not talk aloud, do not bow or speak first to a gentleman, and of all things do not whistle. These are born of the idea of repressing natural energies and blighting natural tendencies, of a mistaken idea of virtue. The nun's vow and the maiden's sexless virtue alike are morbid conditions; they are the outgrowth of the race condemnation of the sex life. In ignorance suppressed passion has been considered woman's virtue; she must be cold as snow and chaste as ice.—Dr. Alice B. Stockham.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 8 months and 24 days old. He has served 129 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

FROM JOLIET TO FORT LEAVENWORTH.

On Friday, June 29, I received a telegram dated Santa Fe station, Joliet, June 28:

"I am on my way to Kansas City and Fort Leavenworth. Fairly well. MOSES HARMAN."

The change will probably be one for the better. Father desired it, and his son requested it through the congressmen from Kansas. The Joliet prison is said to be full of tuberculosis, and other conditions were unfavorable to the welfare of the prisoner. He will, as always, be glad to receive letter from his friends. Address Moses Harman, Federal Prison, Fort Leavenworth, Kansas.

L. H.

APPLICATION FOR PARDON DENIED.

The following letter was received by my father, and given to me on my last visit to him:

"In re application for executive clemency of Moses Harman.

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, WASHINGTON, June 12, 1906.

"Moses Harman, State Penitentiary, Joliet, Ill.—Sir:

"Acting under instructions from the president, the attorney general has examined the papers in the above-entitled case, and directs me to advise you that the application for executive clemency is so reported by the several officials to whom it has been referred as not to entitle it, under the rules governing pardon cases, to be submitted for the president's consideration.

"This disposes of the case and the papers have been placed on the files of the department.

"Yours respectfully, PEYTON GORDON, Pardon Attorney."

Father said that, so far as he is personally concerned, he is not at all sorry that the application was denied. Of course, he wants his freedom, but not at the price of that which might be construed as a tacit acknowledgment of wrong-doing and an implied bond on his right of judgment in the future. Indeed, the Free Speech League was told that he could not be released, as he would simply go out and repeat the offense. And though he really believed that his life was in peril while in Joliet, he would not ask for a pardon.

He appreciates the efforts made by his friends, and believes much good has been accomplished through the awakening of thought on the subject of freedom of the press. Many who had never given the matter a thought were led to investigate when the petition was presented to them for signature. This is the only good result I personally ever anticipated from the petition. I believe that the real desire of the persons responsible for the prosecution is the suppression of LUCIFER, and have no doubt that its editor would be released if he would promise to discontinue its publication. I do not think that any one would blame him if he should make such a promise, for he has certainly done his share of work of all kinds. Nevertheless, I am very proud of his steadfastness of purpose and his courage.

L. H.

LETTER FROM J. WARNER MILLS.

DENVER, COLO., June 26, 1906.

My Dear Mr. Harman:

There can seldom be a good excuse for neglecting to write a friend in trouble, and especially when such friend is shut up in prison, and I shall not attempt to give any excuse for my apparent indifference and delay in writing you. Suffice it to say that I have thought of you often since you were sentenced to the penitentiary at Joliet, Ill.

Your incarceration is of the same type as that of the men imprisoned for the supposed crime of blasphemy, or for their religious opinions. You suffer as a martyr for a free press, and the prison stripes cannot forfeit the confidence and esteem in which you are held by the men and women who know your loyalty to progress and truth. We may not agree with all the opinions you express, but we do agree, nevertheless, that you ought to be free to express your honest opinions. We know that you are in earnest and have something to say, and that you will say it, not to the end of poisoning, but of helping your fellow men.

I am glad to see that the "Woman's Journal," and Mr. Post's "Public," and "To-Morrow," and the Free Speech League, and many other powerful agencies and many distinguished persons are taking proper note of your martyrdom and imprisonment and are working for your release. I shall deem it a privilege to join with this earnest band of loyal workers and with my relative and friend, the Rev. B. Fay Mills, in securing your early freedom.

In my opinion the lines you wrote on your way to the penitentiary were simply sublime. No man with a criminal taint about him, and especially no man who was not aflame with a passion to improve or save the human race, could have written so calmly and sanely of his hopes and aspirations, and so forgivingly of his persecutors as you then wrote when speeding on the cars to take your place in prison. Your words had the true ring of the persecuted Nazarene and brought vividly to mind the sublime exclamation, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." That is the metal of which martyrs are made, and no man of such metal can suffer alone or suffer in vain. I trust that the same exalted spirit and fortitude you have made so innocently conspicuous on this and other occasions will continue with you to the end.

I recall a conversation I once had with you in reference to your previous imprisonment, when I pointed out that you had never been harmed, even under the Comstock law, by reason of anything you had ever written yourself; that your own writing was of an order too high to expose you to any of the cunning traps set by your enemies. Your first troubles came, as I recall, and the trouble now upon you also came, not from your own pen, but from the pen of a correspondent. You published what your correspondent wrote, even though you may have differed from him in opinion, and you stood as champion for a free press, even though your correspondent, as I believe in one case was true, was writing in criticism of your own views. When will the world ever learn that under such circumstances in applying the bars to you the fetters can only reach your flesh, while your ideas go battling on, with many new recruits to give them aid! At the bottom of all reform, in my judgment, lies the great subject of eugenics, in which you are pioneer, and for which as well as for a free press you are now made martyr. We may differ from your views, as I have remarked above, but we can neither agree nor differ without you are free and in proper form to express your views. Out of agreements and disagreements will the truth emerge. Your special theme of stirpiculture, or eugenics, can never fail to advance as long as President Roosevelt talks of race suicide and Burbank shows what improvement can be made in plants and trees, and the agricultural department at Washington tells us how to breed better horses, cattle, sheep and swine. Judge Lindsey, of our city, has justly obtained high reputation by showing us how to save our neglected or wayward girls and boys, and he is now alive to the question of eugenics and economics as related to juvenile crime and delinquencies, and he and many other publicists frequently discourse in public upon the important subject of marriage and divorce. And so the battle goes on, though for a time you yourself are off on a furlough. In the meantime, however, I hope that all will be serene with you as you reflect that your friends and comrades, even though they do not write, do not forget that you are now made a martyr to suffer for the common cause—not merely for the cause of a more exalted manhood and womanhood, but apart from that, or in addition to that, you suffer for the cause of free speech, and for freedom of the press.

If you have read my "Arena" articles you may be interested in our recent franchise fight in Denver, which is now being fought out in the courts. In a recent letter to Mr. Flower, which contains nothing private, yet is not intended for publication, I have stated with considerable detail the result of our election of May 15 last, and I inclose you a carbon copy of same for your perusal.

As a close student of sociology you will be interested in knowing that the great battle of democracy against privilege is still going on all over the nation. It is represented in part by this local fight over the franchises. It is also represented by President Roosevelt's railroad rate fixing campaign, also by the insurance, meat and other trust exposures, and it is especially represented by the tremendous political tide that is now setting in to sweep Mr. Bryan into the presidential chair, ostensibly, if not avowedly, to save the nation from socialism. Who can read without erring the next page of our nation's history?

Of course I do not expect a personal reply, but shall be interested in hearing from you through LUCIFER or otherwise whenever you are able to speak a word to the outside world. Yours sincerely,

J. WARNER MILLS.

LETTERS TO MOSES HARMAN.

J. HARMAN, Jacksboro, Texas.—My Dear Brother Moses: How I do wish I could see you. I often think of you. I remember that you made up a club of twenty subscribers to the water-cure journal in Crawford county, Missouri, more than fifty years ago and charged nothing for your work, and all along your life I remember many other deeds of kindness and generosity for the uplifting of humanity. I do wish they would give you what you want to eat and not work you too hard. Surely that is not asking too much.

ED W. CHAMBERLAIN, New York.—It is a long lane that has no turning! The May "Cosmopolitan Magazine" (I think it is) has a fine article by Luther Burbank, the plant wizard, of California, the whole point of which is that what he has done in the realm of plant life can be done in the realm of human life for the improvement of the race. And again the statement is going the rounds of the newspapers that Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Hays has developed sagacity enough to see that the principle which his department is applying to animal breeding may be applied to human breeding as well. Whether the human race will ever become so developed that it will refrain from crucifying its Christs and burning its Brunos, is still an open question.

LUCINDA B. CHANDLER, Norwood Park, Ill.—I was glad to see in last LUCIFER that you had received two letters of mine. I had shortly previous mailed the third. I presume your friends mostly find the hours and days none too long for what they wish to accomplish. Surely I do not, and can't reach the goal desired. Yesterday I was at a social meeting of Bahais. I'm in sympathy with the movement, because the great purpose and teaching is the unity of common humanity and of religions. There's no creed, no dogmatism. Monday, the 4th, I went to Lincoln Center, Jenkin Lloyd Jones' church, to meeting of Congress of Religions. Dr. Thomas presided and made the opening address. He came from Florida the week previous. He finds the racket of Chicago very wearisome. On Tuesday the Douglas Park Woman's Club gave me a benefit. It was in the house of a friend; an enjoyable musical program and very pleasant occasion. It will ever be an inspiring remembrance. It has added a nice little addition to my purse, so I'll have no need for a while to be anxious about wherewithal. We are both in health and thankful. Harriet says, "Lucinda does the writing, and them's my sentiments"; sends love. We hope you are enduring fairly well the situation every way. All freedom has been achieved by the martyrdom of great souls.

LOIS WAISBROOKER, Antioch, Cal.—When I wrote last I thought I should write again before this; I was then at Gibbs. Everything I planned there proved a failure, so I came here to my son's. I have no further plans now. At 80 one has not the energy they have at 50, and when the hour comes I shall not be sorry to go. Abner is in his 83d year, and just before his 82d birthday he walked five miles. I walked one and one-half miles last November, and nearly all the way up-hill, but I was about tired out; could not have gone one-quarter mile farther. We still hear from different points of the ruin wrought by the earthquake. Up in Humboldt county a cemetery was shaken till the marble slabs fell and were broken and the ground around looked as if plowed. Another place, I have forgotten where, but up the coast, a small mountain was split in two and half of it fell over. News comes from Manila, in the Philippines, that a small mountain there had sunk and a lake had taken its place. The earth seems to be in convulsions. Today is Memorial Day and hundreds of dollars' worth of flowers have been strewn over where the dust of the departed lie. When I leave this body I hope it will be cremated. My son got 300 Calla lilies over on the island, which he sold for a cent apiece, and could have sold as many more if he had had them. As I said, I have no plans ahead, but I am writing this without glasses. Hope to live to see you again.

LYDIA R. TODD, San Francisco, Cal.—Dear Comrade Harman: Congratulations! How I envy you—serving time for your noble work of the emancipation of woman. Go on, dear, grand, noble brother. Now you are doing more for the cause of freedom than by editing forty LUCIFERS. Try to keep these facts in mind, keep up a good heart, just think of the many friends that are sending out good, pure, loving thoughts of you, think of the good you are doing, and it will give you strength. When you are through with the good, grand work, and your year is up, come out to San Francisco. I have a lovely room for you. It is large, sunny and cozy. You may have a fire if you wish, as there is a stove. I will cook good food for you and you may just do nothing all day long, only please yourself. Oh, we may once in a while give you a little shake, but you will soon get used to that. . . . . Now, you see I am not one bit sorry for you. I think the petition an insult. I would not have you come out on it for many dollars. I would not sign my name to the nasty thing. Pardon, indeed! for what? . . . Our poor freethought society is no more, since the quake, but I suppose it will grow up again. We surely did have a few good old meetings. R. B. Kerr had the platform for many Sundays. He is a good speaker. Whenever the sex question was discussed the hall would be crowded. Many people are awaking to the beauty and purity of our school of thought. Dear friend, my heart goes out to you tonight in a great throb of love and pride. I am proud of you. You are our leader; or, if you don't like the word leader, say teacher instead. Many women think of you with pride now, but in the years to come thousands will rise up and call you blessed.

JAMES F. MORTON, JR., New York.—Well, the months are going by, and I am glad to hear better news of your health than those which alarmed us at first. I hope you will hold out all right during the remainder of your confinement, whether we succeed in having it abridged or not. Your friends here and in other parts of the country have been anything but inactive in letting the truth be known, and awakening interest in the principles at stake, as you will learn more fully when you are free again. We expect years of good work for human progress from you yet; and meanwhile those of us at large are trying to do our share toward making the world a little more rational and a little better home for the generations to come. I sent you my pamphlet, "The Curse of Race Prejudice," a few weeks ago. As there is nothing contraband in it, I trust it was duly delivered to you. If so, would you mind mentioning its arrival when next you write Lillian? Just a line to say you received it will be sufficient, as there is nothing in it for which your censors could possibly hold it up; so that, if you did not get it, I should be glad to send you another copy. I am having quite a sale for it already. Several of the negro leaders, in particular, are pushing it very vigorously, and some of them have characterized it as the best appeal on behalf of a common humanity that has been put in print. I am settled in New York for the next three or four years, but I shall never love this city so well as the West. If you could ever make up your mind to quit Chicago, you would find Tacoma or Seattle far more fit a home for a nature-loving human being, as well as more conducive to health and comfort, and with more tendency toward broad thinking. Suppose you and I go out to the Puget Sound country together and show them what such a pair of young fellows can do in the way of stimulating thought. Even Chicago, however, has more real life than New York. We have many good people here, but somehow there is not the whole-heartedness which I found in Chicago. The mad craze for the dollar dwarfs manhood and womanhood completely in this metropolis. I wonder if the atrocious climate here has anything to do with the demoralizing tendency in New York society. I shall be glad to escape to the New Hampshire hills for a few days this summer, and only wish I could squeeze out a longer vacation. Your friends are growing in number every day, and you will meet with a most hearty welcome when you step out into the sunshine again. Be of good cheer, dear friend, and look forward with courage. We are all with you, now more than ever.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

J. WARNER MILLS, Denver Colo.—Miss Lillian Harman: Writing you some days ago upon the troubles of a friend reminds me, if I need any reminder, that as yet I have not written either you or your father concerning his own recent troubles. I wish you would send him the letter herewith, including also the carbon copy of my letter to Mr. Flower.

You have had some experience with the censor, and if you think my words to your father may not pass muster, please return my letter with suggestions, and I will revise it, as I want it to reach your father's hands. I have already signed a petition for your father's pardon, and shall interest myself still further in trying to induce President Roosevelt to grant this act of justice to a reformer so venerable, honorable and earnest. I suppose money at present is personally of no avail to your father, and it is useless to send it to him. But giving to his cause is giving to him. His work must not stop merely because he is made a martyr to the freedom of the press and is put behind prison bars. We who are still free should turn our freedom into service and help Moses Harman feel at his best, by feeling that he is not forgotten and that his cause goes marching on. Use my inclosed check in any way to promote free speech and free press, and to the worthy end of replacing ignorance with knowledge, and also in promoting social justice through a nobler manhood and womanhood wrought by a thoughtful improvement of the race.

J. W. GIBSON, St. Paul, Minn.—It makes me boil to know these outrages. I trust your father's strength may be equal to the tax laid on it and that he may come forth in time to speak and write more willingly by many, and thus the work go on. I will try and write to him. The paper is excellent each issue. You are doing well. Hope money comes in to keep all going, so as not to have that to worry you. I am sure that this last imprisonment is doing much to call attention to this subject.

PAUL ROBIN, 5 Passage du Surmelin, Paris, XX, France.—I beg to send to my venerable brother, Moses Harman, my most sympathetic feelings and my most sincere wishes to see the end of his atrocious torture. I do not lose an occasion to speak and write about the American tyranny, worse than ours in this case. But I cannot do much outside our own papers. Others are cowardly or indifferent, even the pretended advanced. Inclosed is $1. I should be glad to receive, for myself, the portraits of Harman alone and with his grandson—for exhibition in the public room of "Régénération." I send herewith the translation of a paper printed in the June number of "Régénération" and in the "Novy Kult," of Prag (the best I could). With my best wishes to all your family and my warmest feelings for the noble chief.

T. SAKAI, Tokyo, Japan.—I greatly sympathize with Mr. Moses Harman. I have inserted his portrait in my "Home Magazine," which I send you with this card. I sent a card to him also. With wishes for his good health, from the Far East. Yours fraternally.

[The magazine is received and we are very sorry we are unable to read its sixty-eight pages, which are printed in Japanese characters. The portrait of our editor is reproduced from LUCIFER. We hope our Eastern friend will favor us with a translation of the article accompanying the portrait.]

REINHOLD STARCKE, Beaver Falls, Pa.—Inclosed is $1 to push my number on LUCIFER ahead some again. It almost makes me rage angry every time I think about your father's persecution; I can't look at it calmly. With kindest regards to yourself and family, and if you get the opportunity and happen to think of it at the time remember me to your father. I would like him to think of me at times, as his influence in my life has been a good one only, and I invite his influence always, should he pass from the physical before I do (which, of course, is probable, considering our ages). No personal reply is expected, as you have your hands too full. I hope the children have recovered. Don't forget to put up orange or red tissue paper on windows, and orange or red shades on the lights, during the trouble, and protect eyes from exposure to bright or white light at convalescence.

GEORGE BEDBOROUGH, London, Eng.—By this post I am writing to Moses Harman. I inclose a postal order for $2.50—the best I can do at present. I will write more fully by next mail. LUCIFER comes regularly now—many thanks. Do keep LUCIFER going—it would be terrible if it fell now. It makes my blood run faster to think of your father's brave stand in the face of his and our enemies. He has indeed a dauntless spirit. . . . Your quotation (in No. 1062) from "The Public" is most informing. You did well to reprint it in a single number of LUCIFER, although it was so long. I am amazed at the outrage of vaccination perpetrated on your father, who has survived so much and proved in his own person how needless this filthy practice is. But his spirit is fine. His absence of hate for his persecutors, that, too, is sublime. In a sense I envy you all—you understand, don't you!

PLAYS PLEASANT AND UNPLEASANT.

After you have taken one course in Shaw you are liable to want to take another. For that reason the publishers go on repeating Shaw editions. If you like Shaw, if you think him a beneficent influence, you will bless the phenomenon. If you don't like him, if you think him distinctly a malign influence, you will curse the luck. Some people think Shaw looks up. Some people think he looks down. Strong men always make strong friends and strong enemies. Comrades who think them all to the good. Haters who think them all to the bad. Shaw is a tonic for the people who are afraid of their shadows. There are optimists who contend that they have no shadows. Shaw is of no use to them. But to the average man he has a story to tell which, whether he knows it or not, the average man had best stop and hear. You do not need to swear by Shaw because you refuse to sweat at him. He is a fresh strong wind. He will blow over all your mere shows of virtue. But nothing with honest root will go down in the tempest. Shaw is not dangerous to wisdom. He is merciless to folly. Humbuggery trembles for its life in his presence. There are some things that Shaw does not understand and does not take account of in his plays. But he is not a menace to the thing he does not understand. The best truth can smile down the best alien wit. I would hate to fool round Shaw with half-beliefs or with fraud sentiments. He sniffs them in the air. He is like a man with an extra sense. He fools the unfeelable. He lays low for the unseen. And when the invisible bad pushes out its visible head Shaw is all ready to soak it one. He belongs to critic ages. He comes to treat a special occasion. He is not tonic for all the future. He is jubilant good health for to-day. If I take a walk with one of his plays I wonder what it is that sets me up so. Is it the fresh air of the fields or the fresh air of the play? I don't know. I guess they mix. And I guess they both mean and do me well. Shaw does not lift me. He does good enough and more than good enough on the level. I welcome him each time as if it was his first visit. I am glad to see him no matter how often he comes or what hour he chooses for his call.—The Conservator.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant.

BY GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

Published in two volumes. Contents Vol. I: Widowers' Houses; The Philanderer; Mrs. Warren's Profession. Contents Vol. II: You Never Can Tell; Arms and the Man; Candida; The Man of Destiny.

Mr. Shaw is the foremost dramatist who writes the English language. No other English playwright can properly be classed with Ibsen, Sudermann, Maeterlinck and Hauptmann. He has won supremacy by sheer force of originality and genius, in spite of the unanimous opposition of critics who condemned any departure from old dramatic canons. Shaw's dramas are great because of their significance. Price, $2.50.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. R. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

President Roosevelt's Gospel of Doom.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

In this open letter the authors shows that large families are injurious to the mother, injurious to the child, and injurious to the community. She attributes Mr. Roosevelt's views on the subject to the influence of "Hebraic dispensations, effete and age-worn superstition." Price 5 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

An Essay on the Duty of Civil Disobedience.

BY HENRY D. THOREAU.

A reprint of this classic essay on the supremacy of the individual conscience. Antique paper; artistic covers, dark green on olivine. 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

WANTED—Office help of either sex; good pay to the right person; state age and qualifications and salary wanted; location in the Middle West. Address E., care of LUCIFER office. 1069

CORRESPONDENCE WANTED—From those who appreciate a good home and desire to devote their lives to building up a large estate as a means of aiding in the natural growth and evolution of this continent into a condition of national ownership of all property. Read article in LUCIFER, No. 1068, upon this subject. Address E., care LUCIFER Office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PHRENOLOGY.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

J. H. GREER, M. D.,

52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 4 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 2 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

PHILIP G. PEABODY,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,

15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,

BOSTON, MASS.

DR. OGILVIE RICE,

DENTIST,

1554 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

Note Reductions.

Hampden: 18 size, "Special R.-Way," 23 jls., $26; "New R.-Way," 23 jls., $24; Dueber Watch Co., 21 jls., $17; same, 17 jls., $14.

Elgin: "Veritas," 23 jls., $29; "Father Time," 21 jls., $22.50; "B. W. Raymond," 19 jls., $20; "B. W. Raymond," 17 jls., $18.50.

Waltham: "Vanguard," 23 jls., $29; "Crescent Street," 21 jls., $22.50; "Appleton, Tracey & Co., Premier," 17 jls., $18.50; same, not "Premier," $16.

The above guaranteed to pass R.-Way Inspectors.

Sundries: "Waltham," "J. R. Bartlett," or Elgin "Wheeler," 17 jls., adjusted, nickel, $9; same, gilt, $7; same, Hampden, nickel, $8; same, not adjusted, $7; Elgin, Waltham or Hampden, nickel, 15 jls., $6; same, gilt, $5; Elgin or Waltham, nickel, nonadjustable hair spring, 7 jls., $5; Hampden, 7 jls., gilt, $4.50; "Standard" or "Century," 7 jls., $3.

All the above in 2, 3 or 4-ounce silverine cases, prepaid. In silver, or gold filled, screw case, accompanied by manufacturer's and my guarantee for 20 years, $3, or in hunting case, $5 more. In 25-year screw case, $5, or in hunting case, $8.50 more than in silverine case. In solid gold case, $10 to $50 more.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.

Large (6) size Elgin, Waltham or Hampden, 20-year gold filled, latest style, artistic hand-chased; 7 jls., $9; 15 jls., $11; 16 jls., adj., $15. Small (0) size, 7 jls., $11.50; 15 jls., $13; 16 jls., adj., $18. "Riverside," extra fine, $24; in 25-year case, $1 more; in 14-k. solid gold case, $10 to $50 more. Latter with diamonds, all in plush box, prepaid, with guarantee.

Send for prices of Watches not listed, Ingersoll Spoons, Free Thought Badges, Jewelry, Rings, Optical Goods and My Tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free. OTTO WETTSTEIN, La Grange, Cook Co., Ill.

1069

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS AND PERIODICALS.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood.

BY AGNES BENHAM.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 16, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BUHR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 2 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Isola: Or, The Disinherited.

A REVOLT FOR WOMAN AND ALL THE DISINHERITED.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

With Colored Frontispiece Portrait of Fortunatus on the Heights of Avernmoore, entitled "The Last Watch."

In his characteristics of the drama Mr. G. J. HOLYOAKE writes: "Her conception of womanly independence is original in literature. . . . The moral interest of the drama has great charm. . . . As the tragic death of a woman capable of both heroism and reflection, the last hours of Fortunatus are memorable. . . . The reader will see in The Last Watch on the Heights of Avernmoore the beauty, the dignity, the determination, without defiance, of Isola. Intellectual intrepidity in defence of the Right in the Soul of the drama THE DISINHERITED. Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Songs of a Child.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

In the Coming Day the Rev. J. PAUL HORYS writes of them: "The writings of this child suggest the presence and inspiration of a master spirit, fierce for freedom, daring in criticism, and splendid in spiritual adventure. The poems are full of dash and fire, whether treating of Nature and her wild delights, or the mixed world with all its possibilities of rapture and depression, joy and anguish, trust and horror. But the wonder of it! The strenuous 'dramatic tragedy,' 'Abel Avenged,' was written at fourteen years and a half, and the militant 'Sceptic's Defence' at sixteen—both crammed with the rankest imaginable heresies. Throughout this whole book there is hardly a line—perhaps not a line—which is mere composition. It is all powder and shot and scouring and evening stars. . . . 'IZAIE is written with singular vivacity and grace, and is as brilliant as it is thoughtful, with an undertone of pathos that wins sympathy and attention."

Price, $1.25.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Advansing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Price, 5c each; 25c a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Martyrdom of Man.

BY WINWOOD READE.

Contents: An Epitome of Universal History, under Four Heads.

WAR.—Egypt. Western Asia. The Persians. The Greeks. The Macedonians. Alexandria. The Phœnicians. Carthage and Rome. Roman Africa. The Arabs.

RELIGION.—The Natural History of Religion. The Israelites. The Jews. The Prophets. Character of Jesus. The Christians. Arabia. Mecca. Character of Muhammad. Description of Africa. Muhammadanism in Central Africa.

LIBERTY.—Ancient Europe. Invasion of the Germans. The Castle. The Town. The Church. Arab Spain. Venice. The Portuguese Discoverers. The Slave Trade. Abolition in Europe. Abolition in America. Materials of Human History.

INTELLECT.—Animal Period of the Earth. Origin of Man, and Early History. Summary of Universal History. The Future of the Human Race. The Religion of Reason and of Love.

Price, cloth, $1. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, JULY 19, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1070

TO TOUSSAINT THE EMANCIPATOR.

Whether the whistling rustic tend his plough
Within thy hearing, or thy head be now
Pillowed in some deep dungeon's earless den,
O miserable chieftain! where and when
Wilt thou find patience? Yet die not, do thou
Wear rather in thy bonds a cheerful brow.

Live and take comfort. Thou hast left behind
Powers that will work for thee; air, earth and skies;
There's not a breathing of the common wind
That will forget thee; thou hast great allies,
Thy friends are exultations, agonies,
And love, and Man's unconquerable mind.

—Wordsworth.

COMSTOCKISM AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

"After Bruce Purcell, a janitor, 3747 LaSalle street, admitted attacking Helen Lents, nine years old, and then confessed the details of similar attacks on three other girls to the police in Stanton avenue station today, his wife, Mrs. A. Purcell, turned on him and cried:

"'You scoundrel! You ought to be hanged!'

"Her husband's alleged crimes were utterly unknown to her, she declared, until she heard the story of them from his own lips. . . . Purcell made his confessions in a chatty, nonchalant manner."—Chicago American, July 2.

* * *

"BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 2.—The jury which has been hearing the evidence in the case of Drs. Carson and Kern, charged with being responsible for the death of Miss Nellie Clark, brought in a verdict of not guilty."—Chicago American, July 2.

* * *

"He—It is true that Miss Plutocrat has money, but she is very exacting. If young DeBroke marries her he'll have to give up smoking and drinking.

"She—If he doesn't marry her he will have to give up eating also."—Chicago American, July 2.

* * *

"MEHANOY, PA., July 2.—Despite the protests of her family Miss Rhoda Emily Crosby will on July 10 start for Lomlis, Cal., to become the bride of a man she has never seen."—Chicago American, July 2.

* * *

"The Maid—You believe that the microbes in kisses are really dangerous?

"The Bachelor—Sure thing. They are responsible for a good many marriages."—Chicago American, July 2.

* * *

"Marie Krapudinski, twenty-four years old, died mysteriously early today at the home of Samuel Friedman, 213 Twenty-third street. Her death is being investigated by the police and coroner, in the belief that she committed suicide while despondent over a love affair."—Chicago American, July 2.

* * *

"Efforts are being made by friends of Benjamin C. Cocker, an Adrian (Mich.) millionaire, to suppress the scandal growing out of the charge made against Cocker by an Evanston policeman. The rich man's accuser makes a most serious charge against him. . . . The friends of Cocker were astounded at his arrest and subsequent confession."—Chicago American, July 2.

* * *

"Henry Alford Short, a wealthy clubman, son of a former professor of languages in Columbia university, and brother of Edward Lyman Short, the poet, was arrested this morning on the complaint of two girls, fourteen years of age. He is declared by the police to be one of many rich men who merit punishment on similar charges. . . . The police declare the misfortunes of scores of girls will be charged to Short."—Chicago American, July 2.

* * *

"NEW YORK, July 2.—Harry K. Thaw killed Stanford White to protect, as he believed, the future of an heir to the Thaw name and millions."—Chicago American, July 2.

* * *

"There is no sex in sin. A reformed woman has as good a right to favors of society and the friendship of moral people as a reformed man."—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in Chicago American, July 2.

* * *

There is one day's record from a single issue of one of Mr. Hearst's papers. The first four items are from the first page of the paper. Two of the items are supposed to be humorous, but they throw a significant side light of the average newspaperman's view of the "sacredness" of marriage.

But what has Comstockism to do with it? Everything. In the first place it is safe to assume that none of the principals in the cases mentioned above ever read a single copy of LUCIFER.

It is safe to assume that all of them, with the exception of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, are firm believers in the double standard of sexual morality.

It is safe to assume that all of them were moral "conservatives" and believed thoroughly that sexual knowledge should not be imparted to their children. In fact, the debauchee is almost invariably a strict moralist—that is, he is an abstract moralist, favors condign punishment for the man who attacks the chastity of his wife, sister, mother or daughter, however regardless he may be of the chastity of other women and girls.

Even the homosexualist is almost invariably a moralist. Within the last year four clergymen in Chicago and vicinity have been disgraced by the facts becoming public of their relations with boys. One of the most brilliant preachers in Peoria, the campaign manager of ex-Governor Yates, who is a candidate for United States senator, committed suicide when he was threatened with exposure because of his relations with boys.

Even Oscar Wilde, whose brilliant intellect commanded the admiration of thousands, left a testament, "De Profundis," showing his real, not pretended, belief in the conventional sexual code. He kissed the rod which smote him. His posthumous book was a declaration, "Be sure your sin will find you out." Yet one of his personal friends, a man in whose veracity I have absolute confidence, informed me that after his release from prison Wilde was almost continuously under the influence of intoxicants and was accompanied in his wanderings by a boy (gitou).

These facts are startling. They are psychological phenomena which deserve the study of alienists, physiologists, clergymen and jurists. Nevertheless—and right here is my indictment of Comstock—it is made a penitentiary offense to discuss in print the causes of the aberrations which threaten the annihilation of the human race. It is the Comstock law that is promoting race suicide!

"Criminal statistics," Krafft-Ebing declares in his "Psychopathia Sexualis," "prove the fact that sexual crimes are progressively increasing in our modern civilization. This is particularly the case with immoral acts with children under the age of fourteen.

"The moralist sees in these sad facts nothing but the decay of general morality, and in some instances comes to the conclusion that the present mildness of the laws punishing sexual crimes, in comparison with their severity in past centuries, is in part responsible.

"The medical investigator is driven to the conclusion that this manifestation of modern social life stands in relation to the predominating nervous condition of later generations, in that it begets defective individuals, excites the sexual instinct, leads to sexual abuse."

This being the case, and scarcely any intelligent person will dispute it, the importance of general knowledge of the sexual functions should be apparent. Yet, because of the activity of Comstock and his prurient allies, the statutes make it a crime to impart this knowledge. Because of this vicious law Moses Harman, the nation's greatest champion of the right of the child "to be well born," is sent to a felon's cell. Society has not yet ceased crucifying its saviors.

But here is a still more startling assertion made by the distinguished pathologist and neurologist, Krafft-Ebing:

"The perverse act does not indicate perversion of instinct. At any rate, the most monstrous and most perverse sexual acts have been committed by persons of sound mind."

The italics appear in the English translation of Krafft-Ebing's book, showing that the translator, if not the author, regards this fact as worthy of special emphasis. I quote from "the only authorized translation of the tenth German edition," published by Keener & Co. in 1900.

Laws passed by legislators ignorant of the cause of these sexual aberrations have proved powerless to suppress them. A law might as well be passed against yellow fever or smallpox. In either case the law would be ineffective if not based on knowledge of the cause of phenomena legislated against.

A professor of mental and nervous diseases in one of the most noted medical colleges in America declared in a public lecture a few years ago that sensuality and occultism threatened the destruction of the race. Open discussion followed the lecture and many persons in his audience criticised the lecture by defending their beliefs in Christian Science, theosophy and spiritualism. I was the only person who challenged the speaker's assertion in regard to sensuality.

I cited the fact that some of the greatest men the world had known were grossly sensual—notably Julius Cæsar, Napoleon Bonaparte, Socrates, Plato and Alexander the Great—and mentioned the fact that the world owed its greatest poems, sculpture, music and other works of art to sensualism; that even the greatest religious hymns were little removed from amorous songs; that the Song of Songs in the Bible, the most beautifully picturesque poem which has been preserved in literature, is an erotic song.

In this connection it is worth while to note that Stanford White, the revelation of whose saturnalian orgies has shocked the civilized world, was one of the greatest architects the nineteenth century produced. His works were masterpieces of beauty; he adored beauty, and his adoration of the beauty of young chorus girls was partly the cause of his tragic death. I say partly the cause, but that part in itself was not degrading. It was inspiring and uplifting. The degrading part of his nature was his disregard of the consequences of his treatment of these girls.

It is worthy of attention, also, that Stanford White in his home life was a staunch supporter of the conventional sexual code. It is highly probable that he would have been inclined to shoot any man who would invite his wife or daughter to such orgies as those to which he invited susceptible chorus girls. Such men as Stanford White are strong supporters of Comstock for the protection of their own female relatives—always anxious to show their wives, sisters and daughters "the steep and thorny way to heaven," while they themselves tread "the primrose path of dalliance."

What is the remedy? Laws and sermons have proved ineffective. Then shall we, with the fatuity of the pope who issued a bull against a comet, imagine that there is safety in a Comstock edict forbidding the investigation of an evil which makes women and girls the prey of sexual monsters?

Is it not easy to see that the evil cannot be eradicated by closing our eyes to it and by rearing boys and girls in ignorance of their sexual natures?

Could the terrible ravages of yellow fever and smallpox have been reduced to the degree to which they have been reduced if clergymen and legislators had done everything in their power to forbid the investigation or discussion of those diseases?

Is it not clear that sexual crimes are to a great degree the consequence of Comstockism?

ADDISON TUCKER.

There is nothing more terrible than energetic ignorance.—Goethe (from memory).

A VISIT TO HOME.

Some weeks ago I paid a visit of eleven days to Home, Wash. There may have been single days in my life that I enjoyed as much as any at Home, but certainly I never before had eleven such delightful days in succession. What Rome is to a Catholic, and Mecca to a Mahommedan, Home ought to be to every one who believes in Luciferians; so I need not apologize for giving some account of it.

It is situated on one of the beautiful bays of Puget Sound, about twenty-eight miles by water from Tacoma. It is reached by a steamer which sails from Commercial dock, Tacoma, at 2:30 p. m. every week day and some hours earlier on Sunday, the return boat leaving Home at 7:30 a. m. on week days and on Sunday afternoon. The round trip costs 75 cents.

The village was founded ten years ago by O. A. Verity, G. H. Allen and R. F. Odell. It has grown steadily ever since, and the population is now about 150. As the original land is now all occupied another settlement on similar lines is about to be established a mile away. The early settlers at Home were nearly all English-speaking people, but of late years other races have been coming in very fast, and at present the newcomers are most frequently Russian Jews, a very vigorous and intellectual race.

Home is not a communistic settlement. Each settler is economically independent of the rest, and carries on whatever business he pleases for his own profit. The people live to a very large extent on the produce of their own gardens, cows and poultry. Besides this they earn some money by sending fruit to market at Tacoma. Most of them very decidedly lead the simple life. Not much animal food is eaten, and liquor and tobacco are almost unknown. One Englishman who had lately arrived complained to me that he was deprived of his liberty to smoke, as the children jeered at him whenever he pulled out his pipe. To all appearances, however, the people are as healthy and happy as it is possible to be, and have a considerable amount of leisure.

Some of the Home people do not work there, but go away from time to time to earn their living on the outside, and then return to the village to spend their money. They believe that there is no place like Home. There are also a few residents of independent means who have settled there because of the charming society.

Although the people of Home are economic individualists they have some special economic arrangements of their own. No settler is allowed to have more than two acres of land. This amount is now considered rather little, however, and in the new settlement each person is to be allowed five. The wages of labor are 20 cents an hour for all persons, male or female, skilled or unskilled. This does not seem much, but living is so very cheap at Home that it is equal to a good deal more anywhere else. Any way, there is very little hiring of labor at Home.

It is not from an economic standpoint, however, that Home is interesting. If it has done little for economic freedom it will be forever memorable in the history of social freedom. I think it may safely be said that there has never been any other place in the world that so nearly realized these prophetic lines of Shelley:

> "None talked that common, false, cold, hollow talk
> Which makes the heart deny the yes it breathes,
> Yet question that unmeant hypocrisy
> With such a self-mistrust as has no name.
> And women, too, frank, beautiful, and kind
> As the free heaven which rains fresh light and dew
> On the wide earth, past; gentle radiant forms,
> From custom's evil taint exempt and pure;
> Speaking the wisdom once they could not think,
> Looking emotions once they feared to feel,
> And changed to all which once they dared not be,
> Yet being now, made earth like heaven; nor pride,
> Nor jealousy, nor envy, nor ill shame,
> The bitterest of those drops of treasured gall,
> Spoilt the sweet taste of the nepenthe, love."

I should certainly not take the responsibility of advising any one to settle at Home. No person should do that without going there and staying for a while, if he can possibly do so. But I strongly advise all Luciferites who live on or near the Pacific coast, and wish to have a pleasant outing, to try Home. They will find lively and delightful company there, and will get nearer the twenty-first century than they could anywhere else in the world. It is a very cheap place to spend a holiday. I stayed with friends myself, but I think I am right in saying that board and lodging cost 50 cents a day.

Those who wish to know about Home, and keep in touch with it, should read the "Demonstrator," the local paper, which not only gives information about the place, but has excellent articles on social questions. It is edited by Charles Govan, one of the most charming persons in the community. It comes out twice a month, and the subscription is only 50 cents a year—much too small a subscription for financial success. The address is The Demonstrator, Home, Lakebay, Wash.

R. B. KERR.

LETTERS WITHHELD FROM MOSES HARMAN.

When our prisoner left the solicitous care of his guardians at Joliet the letters which they had considered improper for him to receive were given to him. The following is a list of letters and dates thereof: J. M. A. Spence, March 16; S. T. Hammersmark, March 5; H. A. Libbey, March 8; W. L. Cheney, March 16; Leroy Cummings, March 13; Ernst Ebel, March 10; Lucinda B. Chandler, March 17; C. M. Dyer, March 12; Oscar Schleif and other Philadelphia sympathizers, March 10; Juliet H. Severance, March 13; John Spallone, March 9; Ed W. Chamberlain, April 15; Helen Philbrick, March 28 and April 7; William H. Wilgus, June 25; E. B. Foote, Jr., April 17; J. Al Wilson, June 24; William L. Holt, M. D., March 10; A. Waagenaar, April 27; Bertha Florence Johnson, May 3; C. H. Huffman, April 23; Bisden Stewart Asbury, May 4; J. P. Mitchell, April 16; John Irons, March 19; John E. Boultenhouse, April 7; George K. Bowen, March 25; Annie B. Fish, March 12; Edwin D. Kizer, April 11; Sarah S. Rockhill, March 29; C. N. and E. B. Greene, April 3; May Elmore Benson, April 5; A. C. Williams, M. D., April 6; Paul L. Saulter, April 4; Adeline Champney, March 19; Bolton Hall, April 2; Ada M. Morley, June 25; Emma Wardlaw Best, February 6. It appears that the letters were not so strictly censored after March and April.

Perhaps the friends may wish to read specimens of the letters which could not be admitted to a prisoner. On the envelope containing the following letter from Mr. Hammersmark is indorsed, "Held by order of the warden":

My Dear Harman: Of course it is unnecessary to tell you that although we consider your imprisonment one of the most dastardly and high-handed pieces of governmentalism and persecution that has taken place in America, still we are pleased to know that we have so courageous and willing a martyr for one of the grandest causes that man has ever endeavored to fight for.

I was at 500 Fulton street yesterday morning and spent two very pleasant hours, and all the while I was there I felt myself honored to be in the house that was the home of a modern "William Lloyd Garrison." Three different parties took copies of LUCIFER to the Anthropological Society and I believe about fifty copies were sold there. Naturally the Social Science League asked for hearty support for the paper from its members, and we hope to prove ourselves practical as well as sympathetic friends of LUCIFER.

I almost wish I were in your place, and if I knew of some way that I could get there with as much honor to myself and as great a disgrace to the state and the nation I would feel myself a very lucky man.

Hoping the day is not far off when we may again have the pleasure of seeing you at the various liberal meetings, and that you may retain your health until again free, I am, very truly yours,

SAMUEL T. HAMMERSMARK.

A souvenir card, bearing the picture of the Shakespeare monument in Lincoln Park, Chicago, and this written message, was withheld:

Dear Friend: Passing through the park we saw Mr. Shakespeare. He is glad that he lived in the "Dark Ages" and ceased writing long ago. With love,

MARTHA AND EBEN ST EBEL.

The words of Emerson and Thoreau would, perhaps, be not conducive to prison discipline, so they, too, must be excluded:

OLE TRAIN, April 2, 1906.

Dear Mr. Harman: When I look at your portrait I feel as Emerson did when he went to see H. D. Thoreau in jail for refusing to pay taxes to support a wrong-doing state.

Said Emerson: "What are you doing in there, Henry?"

Said Thoreau: "What are you doing out there, Ralph?"

If you do not know Ernest H. Crosby's poem, "Woe to the cause that has not passed through a prison," I should like to send it to you. Your admiring friend,

BOLTON HALL.

My Dear Mr. Harman: Words are inadequate to express my appreciation of and satisfaction in your heroism. It is a noble and beautiful manifestation of human capacity and grand manhood you are spreading upon the panorama of history for the coming years to glorify. I inclose a circular I prepared twenty-three years ago. It is beyond the stretch of my imagination to conceive why humanity has continued up to the present stage of evolution in intelligence to act, in regard to sex, like beings void of reason. The crimes committed against woman in wifehood and against the unborn child are a shocking record. Though you are a legal prisoner you are not beset with the torments John D. Rockefeller is now enduring. He is now in New Jersey, where the Ohio state's attorney cannot reach him by any process of law. Guards are ordered to shoot any one who attempts to enter his domain. How free and comfortable you are in your prison cell, compared to the "richest man in the world!" I hope you have access to fresh air and sunshine when there is any. I hope you can sleep well. I wish your friends could relieve you by spells and try the life in Joliet and let you have a vacation. I would gladly take a week or two. The law of compensation sooner or later will return amply the reward of your faithful devotion to justice, freedom and the enlightenment which can lift the race above the disastrous effects of bondage to brutal habits and the degrading conduct of ignorance. Ever in esteem and sympathy, yours,

LUCINDA B. CHANDLER.

The fact that the writer of the following letter is a minister of an orthodox Christian church (the Union Congregational, of Green Bay, Wis.) did not avail to gain admission of his words of cheer to the prison cell in Joliet:

Dear Friend Harman: Just a word of hearty greeting and good cheer! This outrage from which you suffer will surely stir the heart and nerve the hand of every lover of justice and hasten the day of emancipation.

But apart from the violation of our constitution in the matter of free speech, I wish to say, after having read LUCIFER for years, that to my mind your discussion of the sex problem, far from being objectionable, has always been conducted on a high moral plane. While not agreeing with many of the views expressed, I cannot understand how any but a debased imagination could find anything "obscene" in the columns of your paper and its teachings concerning sex relationship.

Society is cursed with ignorance on this subject, and this ignorance is the mother of vice and prudishness. Long may LUCIFER live to spread the light and create a more wholesome public sentiment on this vital question.

With every good wish, I remain, yours cordially,

J. M. A. SPENCE.

Dear Mr. Harman: It is pretty hard to obey your request and not write in a revengeful spirit in regard to the men who were instrumental in putting you where you are, as I believe that responsibility cannot be divided, and that individuals have done this thing.

However, I am doing my little to help along the matter of your freedom if possible, and hope we shall see you out long before the year is up. It is well that you are not revengeful. My blood has been boiling ever since the outrage. Yours very truly,

W. L. CHENEY.

Dear Friend Harman: I am very glad to see by an item in a recent paper that the prison keepers have had the decent consideration to give you a cell to yourself. I trust I may interpret this act on their part to mean that they are coming to understand you and to have some appreciation of your true character. When Blue Grass Moore was in prison he won the highest respect from Warden Coffin, who treated him with the utmost kindness and made him the editor of the prisoners' paper. Possibly if your warden is any kind of a decent fellow you can do the same thing with him.

I am glad also to notice by this item that you are at least holding your own as far as health is concerned. Keep up a stout heart. With your vitality you ought to come out of this ordeal with very little if any impairment of your health. Before you receive another letter from me I will have celebrated my sixty-fourth birthday. I see that you are more than eleven years older than I. "Old enough to know better," as Landis would say. Perhaps as he advances in years he may come to "know better." Let us hope so.

LUCIFER is well conducted during your retirement. On that score you have nothing to worry about. I trust your philosophy will induce the same composure and contentment as cheered those illustrious prisoners, Daniel DeFoe and Leigh Hunt, in their confinement. Think of me as remembering you kindly and reverently.

ED W. CHAMBERLAIN.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF MOSES HARMAN.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year.....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months.....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter Lucifer will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive Lucifer.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

THOUGH "SILENCED," HIS WORDS STILL LIVE.

At my last visit with my father he asked me to use in LUCIFER some favorite passages which he had marked in a copy of "Emerson's Essay." While copying some of them for No. 1069 I thought that in those words was a direct message to his friends, and so Emerson's sentences took the place of the "silenced" editor's own expressions. And then the thought occurred to me that in the old copies of LUCIFER exists a treasure-house of my father's work, and I decided to republish in each issue of LUCIFER at least one of the editorials written in the years gone by. They will be entirely new to many of our readers, and I am sure that those who have read them will not be averse to again seeing them. I shall endeavor to select those which are of present-day interest, and trust that this republication will have the approval of our friends. L. H.

WOMAN AND THE HOME IN THE PAST AND FUTURE.

time in the history of this mundane sphere called Earth when there were no individuals, that is to say, no organisms, vegetable or animal, living on its surface or under its surface. The earth was a formless mass of molten lava, gradually cooling and hardening into homogeneous granite. Then came the slow process of disintegration, separation, differentiation (evolution) by and from which, in course of time, came individual plants and animals. These at first were scarcely organisms at all—some of the animals, for instance, seeming to have but one part, one organ—stomach—and propagating by fission or by simple division. Then by slow and almost imperceptible steps came more complex organisms or individualized entities, until in the "fulness of time" came man, woman.

Since the human plane was reached by the animal man, evolutionary progress seems to have moved in cycles—it has had its ebbs as well as its flows. In many lands are to be found remains of a higher culture, a better development than exists there today. Instance Syria, Egypt, Greece, India, Spain, Rome, Central America, Peru, etc. In most of these instances the history of decay and retrogression is so meager that we can only guess at the causes thereof; but so far as we can learn from such sources as we possess, these past and gone civilizations died of too much state socialism, too much centralization—died from and by the failure to preserve a robust and virile individualism among the units. Take the Greeks, for instance. In the progressive period of their history there was but little of state socialism among them—but little of nationalism. They were a congeries of individualized communities (not a nation), in which the individuality of the citizen was strongly marked and carefully guarded. The individuality of woman, as well as of man, was a marked feature of Grecian social life. Divorce was easy and readjustments reputable, not difficult and disreputable as with us. In Music Hall, Topeka, a few years ago, I heard a distinguished lady lecturer and editor, who had apparently devoted much time and thought to the subject, say that Grecian manners were so free and natural that their women were a "nation of courtesans," or words to that effect. Among the Greeks what were called "sons of God," or sons of the gods, were very common. That is to say, whenever a boy or man displayed unusual genius his paternity was at once attributed to some one or other of the popular deities, and this without dishonor to the mother. And this again was but another way of saying that "natural selection" got in its work in those days—that womanhood did not scruple to attract to itself, to select and to fuse with, the best specimens of manhood within its reach, regardless of artificial codes, thus forming chosen unions, love unions, whose resultant product was better than the product of the merely mechanical, enslaving unions of more artificial (man-made) social codes. And thus it is accounted for that in the earlier and better days of the Grecian autonomies, before centralization, nationalism, had destroyed individualism, Greece produced more men of genius, more statesmen, orators, poets, generals, etc., to the square mile or acre than any country of equal area of which we have any authentic history.

With the culmination of the early Grecian culture the evolutionary wave appears to have reached its high-water mark—a mark so high that the waves that have since followed have not been able to reach—and why? Is there a better, a more satisfactory reason to be given than that in all the intervening ages womanhood, motherhood, has been less free? Like mother like son, is a much truer aphorism than like father like son. Womanhood, motherhood, has been cramped by artificial restrictions, and anti-natural standards of morality, and the result has been a dead level mediocrity, or worse, in the most important product that any land or clime can produce, viz: its children—its crop of men and women.

Now, once again, after a lapse of some twenty centuries or more, the human tide seems to be again approaching high-water mark, and to be approaching it in the same way, viz: through an enlarged freedom of womanhood, motherhood. The revolt against ecclesiastic and statutory rule over womanhood is becoming general. The increased frequency of divorce has alarmed the clergy, the self-elected guardians of sex-morality, all along the line, and with one consent they demand more stringent laws against divorce. Marriage-law morality is voted a "failure" by thousands of the best minds of both sexes. Hundreds if not thousands of the purest, the brightest and best of women are now "out on a strike," a strike against monopolistic man-made marriage laws and customs. They say if they cannot get employment as mothers on their own terms, if they cannot have children without putting their necks under the yoke of marital bondage, they will not have children at all. May we not cite as examples of these strikers, the Willards, the Anthonys, de Cleyres, Wixons, et al., of our time?

Of course this "strike of a sex," like all labor strikes, must be settled—settled at some time in some way—but how? Shall it be settled by the yielding of the strikers to the autocratic, monopolistic demands of the robber barons, the priests, the magistrates and the Grundies? Or will the strikers win? . . . .

That we are yet far away from the realization, the practicalization, of this revolution, I am fully aware. That its accomplishment will involve much of suffering, much of anguish, of conflict and of seeming loss, I fully believe. That it will involve "the sundering of 'legal ties' in many homes," must be conceded to begin with. In fact, the complete triumph of the new regime—woman's reign in the domain of Love, and of its fruits, the creation of a better and higher race, a race as much above the present standard as this is above the troglodytic ape—the realization of this dream of a Golden Age yet to be, will involve the complete reorganization of our social and economic systems, even to the substitution of the cooperative individualistic home instead of the segregated monogamic and yet communistic homes that we now have. Many abortive attempts at realizing the very evident advantages of the cooperative home have been made, and yet the hope is growing stronger and more widely spread, as the years go by, that these efforts will yet be crowned with success. The chief cause of failure hitherto doubtless has been the narrow selfishness and jealousies inseparable from the monogamic and polygamic systems of sex association. Abolish these, outgrow these, and let them be replaced by individualism, self-ownership, woman's paramount right of initiative and control in the realm of propagation and of sex association, and the most formidable barrier in the way of the realization of cooperation in the home will have been forever removed.—Moses Harman in Lucifer, 1891.

THE EPITHETS OF HYSTERIA.

A presupposition usually is a prejudice, and a prejudice, as all but those whom it possesses know, is an emotion, inaccessible to reason, oblivious of facts, and hence unable to meet facts with anything more weighty than school-girl ejaculations. To those thus possessed, getting off from the starting-post of an undiscriminating aversion to the word "pardon," it necessarily follows that that term at the head of the paper asking for the release of the editor of LUCIFER blinds them to all that the paper expresses. They, like the traditional rooster of the herd, see nothing but the red signal which they hate.

As a matter of fact, of course, the word "pardon" in the title of the paper which was prepared in Mr. Harman's behalf was a mere incident of form, nonessential in the minds of all who had to do with the drafting of the document, its use one of the preliminary technicalities that cleared the way for the essential, serious, important work that was to be done. In this request for the release of the imprisoned editor there was nothing servile, nothing cringing, nothing humble nor humiliating. It did not ask for the forgiveness of a wrong committed by the prisoner, but for the redress of an injustice committed against the prisoner. It reasoned; it did not implore. It marshalled facts and arguments; it did not grovel. It was dignified; not abject. It showed why Moses Harman as an innocent man should have justice; it did not beg for mercy for a repentant criminal.

All this stood out in letters of light in every line of the paper itself, for all to see whose eyes were not closed by a presupposition, a prejudice. These could read with the mind's eye no farther nor deeper than the surface of the titleline. EDWIN C. WALKER.

244 West 143d street, New York City.

THE BURDEN OF LARGE FAMILIES.

Formerly among people of all conditions and beliefs the idea that a man could deliberately choose to remain single and continent, or that a woman could prefer to employ her time in some other way than in the nursery and the kitchen, seemed too absurd to be believed, and yet this idea was in many cases the direct outgrowth of unhappy experience. How many a gifted boy among a large tribe of ordinary brothers and sisters has been obliged to forego all his hopes and dreams because of the necessity of working for the general subsistence? And with the gifted daughter the case was still more frequent and more fatal. The elder sister of an increasing swarm, however superior she might be, was doomed to be the dry-nurse of all the rest, until, tired out with maternal duties by proxy, she no longer desired maternity for herself. In those days the family was everything, the individual comparatively nothing. In these days the rights of the individual are beginning to be considered, and the change is already working for good, physically, intellectually and morally.—Elizabeth H. Evans, in Truth Seeker.

SUSTAINING FUND.

Joe Trounson, $1; Albert Steinhauser, $1; Lucinda B. Chandler, $1; F. E. Leonard, $1; Minnie Lothringer, $4; C. N. Greene, 50c; Paul Robin, $1; E. S., $1; S. Gehr, $1.50; A. B. Fish, 50c; F. Bielefeld, $2; a Chicago Friend, $5; C. S. Darrow, $10; Dr. R. M., $5; a Chicago Friend, $5; C. S. Darrow, $10; Dr. R. M., $5; feld, $2; a Chicago Friend, $5; C. S. Darrow, $10; Dr. R. M., $5; J. W. Kelley, $5; a Peoria Friend, 75c; Martin Nortvedt, $1; O. L. Harvey, $1; Louis Roser, $5.

Sex-life, too, is struggling toward perfection; the problems besetting it are many, and cannot be fully answered today, but the future will certainly answer them fully and to the highest good of the race.—Margaret Morley, in "Life and Love."

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 9 months and 8 days old. He has served 143 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan. Purely private subjects should be avoided, as all letters are read by prison officials and withheld if not approved. Do not ask questions requiring answer. All such questions, matter pertaining to LUCIFER, changes of addresses, etc., should be sent to the office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago. The following are the prison rules concerning visits and correspondence:

To the person receiving this letter: Do not come to visit prisoners on Sundays, Washington's Birthday, Lincoln's Birthday, Decoration Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day, Christmas or Saturday afternoon. You will not be admitted. Parties corresponding with prisoners must carefully comply with the following directions, viz.: Write plainly in the English language only. Confine yourself strictly to family or business affairs. Correspondence about criminal and indecent matters will not be tolerated. In addressing letters and newspapers, write the prisoner's full name and register number plainly in ink on the envelope or newspaper wrapper in order to insure the prisoner receiving them. All letters and newspapers improperly addressed will be returned to the post-office. Do not write anything on newspapers, magazines, books, etc. Postage stamps and stamped envelopes will not be admitted. Postage stamps are furnished by the government. Daily and weekly newspapers of a respectable character, magazines, religious papers and books, family photographs, comb, brush, tooth powder or soap, tooth brush, small hand mirror, suspenders and plain white handkerchiefs are admitted during the prisoner's good conduct. In sending letters, newspapers, books, etc., use postage stamps enough to insure delivery. All letters, papers, magazines, etc., are closely examined before being delivered to prisoners. Money may be sent by draft or postal order. If sent in any other way it will be at sender's risk. All moneys received will be kept in the office to the prisoner's credit and paid to him on his release, or it may be sent on his order, upon the approval of the warden, to his relatives and friends. No eatables, liquids, tobacco or cigars will be admitted, nor any articles except those mentioned above. Chewing tobacco and toilet soap are furnished by the government. No smoking permitted. Prisoners can write letters but once every two weeks and see their friends or relatives not oftener than once every four weeks, except on special written permit of the warden obtained before coming to the penitentiary. All letters and newspapers addressed to prisoners, with the full name and register number written plainly in ink on the envelope or wrapper, should be sent in care of P. O. Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan.

To the prisoner: Write plainly in English. Do not interline. Put but one line of writing on each ruled line. Letters addressed to "General Delivery" in cities of 10,000 inhabitants and over will not be mailed. Letters addressed to prisoners and received from prisoners in penitentiaries, reformatories and jails will not be mailed or admitted. Correspondence with prisoners discharged from this penitentiary not permitted.

ANOTHER BRIEF GREETING FROM THE U. S. PRISONER.

On Train, June 29, E. M. 306.

After a lapse of four months and two days I find myself again on the Santa Fe train, in charge of the same deputy marshal that conducted me from LUCIFER'S office to the state prison at Joliet, bound for the United States penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. I know not whether the change from state to national management will be an improvement or not, but am optimist enough to hope for better conditions at Fort Leavenworth. And now that I am free for a few hours to write letters that will not have to pass the ordeal of a prison censor, I will try to tell the faithful friends who remembered the prisoner in bonds by writing to him or calling upon him, also those who may have sent him messages of cheer and hope over unseen wires, something of what I have experienced during the four months since my letter entitled "Greeting and Farewell," written under the same difficulties as now—the shaking of the train, added to the temptation to talk to my fellow passengers, several of whom have expressed much interest in my case.

My main trouble has been the failure to get a cell to myself—except for five days—and the condition, body and mind, of the men with whom I was doomed to inhabit a stone cell 4 feet wide, 6½ feet high and about 6½ feet long. These men are both physical wrecks and much of the time mentally deranged. The first is a Polander, speaking very little English and reading still less. He is now in the hospital slowly dying of tuberculosis. I was with him nine weeks. His cough was simply terrible to hear, so hard and so nearly incessant, especially at night. My bunk was less than two feet above his. I was not allowed to sleep with my head at the opposite end of the bunk, consequently was compelled to inhale the air thrown off from his lungs. This was only half the trouble. His consumption of tobacco was unusually constant, and his use of the night vessel to relieve a chronic dysentery—from three to six times per night—continued without intermission the whole of the nine weeks—to the best of my recollection. He was morose and misanthropic, often to the verge of downright insanity, repelling all advances towards friendship or civility on my part. The second cell-mate was different—a strong man in muscle, weighing 225 pounds, and yet a physical wreck—a tobacco fiend; 55 years old, but so shaky in his nerves that he could seldom thread a needle; a man who, when not under the influence of passion, could talk rationally, even pesitently, yet when the humor seized him was a very devil incarnate for unreasoning abuse, tongue-lashing or vituperation. Whatever I did or did not do was nearly always wrong. If I held my tongue and was silent, then I was accused of "sulking"; and if I answered, in any way, whatever I might say was met with a fresh outbreak on his part. He killed a man in Chicago last summer and was sentenced to ten years in Joliet; said he had no friends, either outside or inside the prison; had no money to buy even a tooth-brush or tooth-soap. Twice I supplied him with these articles—he lost the first brush and box of soap—at a cost of $1; gave him a pair of eye-glasses for which I had paid $1; gave him a picture of myself and grandchild, for which he had frequently asked and which he declared he must have, else he would kill himself or do some other desperate thing; and yet when I began to cough at night and disturb his rest he scored me unmercifully because I would not be guided by him in matters of hygiene, declaring that I "knew too much" to keep myself well, that I was a d—ned old crank on the questions of diet, bathing, etc., and if I would not cough and disturb his sleep.

Finally, after nine weeks of purgatorial life with my second cell-mate I succeeded in getting a divorce from him and was given a cell to myself—just two days before the order came for my transfer to Fort Leavenworth.

From this hasty description of my two cell-mates I hope my readers will not infer that I am leaving Joliet with feelings of hatred or revenge in my heart for these two unfortunately organized men and for the officers who shut me up with them, in a living tomb, and who persistently turned a deaf ear to my requests for a separate cell or for a change of some sort. If I can now get rid of the harassing cough referred to in the last two paragraphs I shall freely forgive and try hard to forget whatever cause of revengeful feeling I may have suffered at Joliet.

M. HARMAN.

* * *

Kansas City, Mo., June 29, 1906, 9:30 P. M.

On leaving Joliet I hoped to be able to write a long letter for publication in LUCIFER, but after writing a letter to Daughter Lillian I met so many people on train who wanted a part of my time that before I was really aware of how the hours were passing the afternoon was gone and my letter for LUCIFER hardly begun. The train shook and rocked so badly that it was very difficult to write. Moreover, the marshal and others have encouraged me to hope that the warden at Fort Leavenworth will grant me writing privileges similar to those allowed me by Warden French at the same institution ten years ago, and that it is not really necessary for me to write a long letter now for publication in LUCIFER.

At the Union Depot, Kansas City, Mo., we were lucky enough to meet Son George, from Valley Falls, to whom I had sent a telegram from Joliet to meet us here. Now we find a delay of nearly an hour must be endured before a train can be had to take us to Fort Leavenworth. This gives time for a few more lines—time all too short in which to give even a synopsis of experiences of the four months at the Illinois state prison.

That the prevailing spirit animating the officials at Joliet is a very different one from the spirit shown by the wardens and other officers of Kansas state prison, and also of the federal prison at Fort Leavenworth, was clearly impressed upon my consciousness during the past four months. By thus saying I do not mean that my experiences with the Joliet officials were all of an unpleasant character—not so, but rather that there was much less of the brotherhood spirit shown by the Illinois management than by the men in similar positions I have met with in Kansas twelve to fifteen years ago. How I shall find the Kansas officials now, after the lapse of a decade, remains to be seen.

The light is so poor on the train, the Missouri Pacific train, on which we are now riding, I shall have to bring this greeting to a close. With best wishes and hopes for the future, and with sincerest thanks for all favors shown to myself and to Daughter Lillian and other workers in LUCIFER'S office, I once more say, Greeting and Farewell.

M. HARMAN.

* * *

The information concerning the treatment received by my father at Joliet, and its effect on his health, will bring pain to his many friends. They may, perhaps, wonder why so little has been said concerning the situation while he was enduring it. I myself did not realize how bad it was until my last visit to him, two weeks before his removal to Leavenworth. He then told me that at the time he entered Joliet the deputy warden said to him: "We have a place up on the hill here where we plant such fellows as you, and the sooner you go there the better." At another time, when he was working on the rock pile and had, through exposure, contracted a bad cough, and asked the same man, who was passing, to allow him to go to the hospital to see the doctor, he was gruffly told that he ought to die. On each occasion that his friends asked that he be assigned to a cell alone, they were told that it had been or and would be given him—with the result as given in his l Nothing, seemingly, could avail for better treatment at Joliet, we could only hope for the transfer, the order for which probe arrived only in time to save his life. No other commentary on difference in treatment is necessary than the fact that the man was required by the officials at Joliet to break stone for long hou every day, exposed to physical and mental strain both by day and night, is, by the officials at Leavenworth, recognized as in need of hospital nursing and care.

It is difficult to fairly judge the motives of others, but I cannot avoid feeling that there was a positive determination to break his spirit and, if not a desire to kill him, there was certainly no reasonable care taken that he should continue to live. And yet, while telling me of these things, he said, in commenting on the denial of the application for pardon, that he could not feel sorry that such had been the result. He would not and could not himself ask for release. He did not want liberty with an implied head on the future. As long as he lives he will certainly publish LUCIFER, and if he dies it will be in furtherance of this life work.

L. H.

LETTERS FROM LEAVENWORTH.

The following letters have been received since LUCIFER No. 1069 went to press. Some personal matter is omitted. As the federal prisoners at Leavenworth are allowed to write a letter at intervals of two weeks, it is probable that a letter will appear in each issue hereafter.

U. S. P., Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan., July 4, 1906.

My Dear Lillian: Was put into the hospital here Saturday last and have been well treated in hospital by physician and attendants to date. My chief trouble is the cough, which is quite severe at times, but not constant. The food I get here suits me better than that at Joliet. I get milk—sweet and clabber; stewed peaches; corn bread twice a week. The hospital is well arranged, on the third floor of the building, well lighted and well ventilated. There are about fifty beds, about half of which are now occupied by patients. All the guards and other officers I have met, including deputy warden, chaplain and surgeon, have treated me kindly, considerately; not a harsh or unkind word have I yet heard. Among the attendants and patients in hospital there is manifested a spirit of kindness, civility and courtesy that is gratifying, as contrasted with certain experiences I have met with elsewhere.

Since this letter was begun I have had a little outing in the prison yards, heard some music, some recitations, funny stories, etc. The prisoners were allowed to mix and talk freely for an hour or two. At dinner there was cake and bananas, besides the usual fare. Weather showery since I came here and not uncomfortably hot, day or night (in the hospital). Altogether, I am very well pleased with the change from the state prison at Joliet to the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kan.—not Fort Leavenworth, which is the address of the old United States prison, from which I was discharged, after nine months' confinement therein, on the fourth day of April, 1896, a little more than ten years ago. Since my arrival here I have met four or five of the guards who knew me during my term at the old prison, and who now have each a kindly word of greeting for me.

As already indicated, I am much disappointed in getting no letters—or almost none, since the change of address. This is my fifth day here and only two letters and one card—one letter from Myra Pepper, inclosing a photo of herself and also a copy of the song beginning, "O what is the use of sighing." The other letter is from Mrs. J. N. Lake, inclosing copies of the "Carrier Dove" and of "Sweet Afton." Please write to these dear, good friends, thanking them for me for their words of sympathy, courage and love, and for the copies of the good, old songs, the music of which I have retained in memory since childhood, but whose words in great measure been forgotten. The card is from George and Lo e Bedborough, of London, who have not failed to remember me once a week in the same way for many weeks. As the Bedboroughs are special friends of yours also ever since your visit to them at their home, eight years ago—I hope you will not fail to write them a good letter and convey to them my hearty acknowledgments for their many kindly fraternal remembrances. While I am duly thankful for these letters and card I cannot help wondering what has become of the rest—when it is recalled that the average number of letters and cards received by me while in the Joliet state prison each day was not less than three or four—sometimes seven or eight. Perhaps you had better write to the chaplain at Fort Leavenworth federal prison and ask him if there are no letters sent by mistake in his care, intended for me at this place.

I shall hope that you can answer the letters sent to me—as well as those sent direct to you—and that you will, as soon as may be, write to all who have so kindly remembered me and say that next to personal visits—of which I am allowed but few—the receipt of letters is the greatest relief from the tedium and monotony of prison life.

Hoping your health will not fail under the strain of your manifold duties and hoping to hear from you often, if only a card, I once more bid you, my dear faithful daughter, an affectionate good-bye.

M. HARMAN.

Best regards and love to all the household.

* * *

U. S. P., Leavenworth, Kan., July 8, 1906.

My Dear Lillian: Once more I am permitted to write to you, for which privilege I try to be duly thankful.

Please thank Brother Wheeler for me for the help he is giving you in your routine work, also for his good letter, and say I hope that he and Hulda will continue to remember me with letters, as before my removal to Kansas. Also please thank the following named persons, whose letters have been forwarded to me since I wrote you, July 4, and say I hope to hear from them again and as often as is convenient or agreeable to them to write to me: T. F. Lee, Bolton Hall, Gertie Vose, George Bedborough, H. Hanson (Colo.), inclosing copy of resolutions and letter from Senator Patterson; Belle Chappel, Lois Waisbrooker, "Justice," Sarah Stone Rockhill. Thank Brother Shepard for clippings inclosed, also for his promise to visit me if permission can be obtained from the warden, and also for his promise to meet me at the prison gate and conduct me to his Leavenworth home when the time comes for my release, as he did ten years ago when I was released from the old federal prison at Fort Leavenworth.

In regard to this proposed meeting, however, at the prison gate at the expiration of my term of sentence, while I most certainly hope to live till that date—December 26, 1906—it is by no means certain that I shall do so. I am now an inmate of the prison hospital, under medical treatment for bronchitis, complicated with catarrh of the stomach and other physical ailments. Whether these ailments are to have a fatal termination inside of six months is a question none can predict with certainty. Hitherto I have said but little respecting my physical troubles, not wishing to alarm my good friends who hope to see me survive my present incarceration, but sometimes it is well to look the facts squarely in the face. If I could command the conditions that I have found by experience to be best adapted to recuperation of health and energy, there is little doubt of a favorable turn in my symptoms, as I verily believe, before many days or weeks. Of course, this is not intended to mean an impeachment of the treatment I am receiving at the prison hospital. Physician and nurses are kind and considerate, and evidently wish to do all they can for me, bound as they are by the prison regulations. But while this is true, and thankfully acknowledged, the fact remains that life within prison walls, even in a well-regulated prison hospital, cannot supply the invalid with means of recovery such as he could command if at liberty.

I have said much more in regard to the condition of my health than I meant to say, and, after all, it may be that I am in a pessimistic mood today, and will take a much more optimistic view of the environment tomorrow. Whatever the result, however, of my present physical ailments, I try, as always, to take a philosophic view of the situation and console myself with the reflection that it matters little whether my individual life be prolonged another year, another decade of years, or not. The work to which I have devoted my very limited powers will be carried forward by others, is now carried forward by others, in a more effective manner than I could hope to do.

Please don't let anything I have said worry you, dear daughter. I am comfortably situated and do not suffer pain, except in my fits of coughing, which are not frequent. Love to all the household.

M. H.

SCIENCE VERSUS METAPHYSICS.

For thousands of years the race lingered in the early or art-period of knowledge. This was not for lack of intellectual activity, but from its misapplication. The ancient philosophers, disdaining nature, retired into the ideal world of pure meditation, and holding that mind is the measure of the universe, they believed they could reason out all truths from the depths of the soul. Despising matter, they were not drawn to observe and study it; despising labor as mental and degrading, they would not experiment; consequently they lacked the first conditions of science—observation, experiment and induction. They reason from fanciful notions to worthless conclusions, and the intellectual power of ages was thus wasted. Genius spent itself in beating the air; the philosophers wrestled with shadows, they chased each other round the circles of verbal disputation, they pursued the rainbow, disdaining the priceless gems which abound in the earth beneath. It was the period of inexperience, and their mistake was perhaps natural, but it was an error that paralyzed the world. The first step of progress was impossible. There was no command of nature or liberation of man from the drudgeries of endless toil; no spirit of inquiry, no products of education or hope of improvement.—Prof. E. L. Youmans.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant.

BY GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

Published in two volumes. Contents Vol. 1: Widowers' Houses; The Philanderer; Mrs. Warren's Profession. Contents Vol. II: You Never Can Tell; Arms and the Man; Candida; The Man of Destiny.

Mr. Shaw is the foremost dramatist who writes the English language. No other English playwright can properly be classed with them. Sudermann, Maeterlinck and Hauptmann. He has won supremacy by sheer force of originality and genius, in spite of the unanimous opposition of critics who condemned any departure from old dramatic canons. Shaw's dramas are great because of their significance. Price, $2.50.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

President Roosevelt's Gospel of Doom.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

In this open letter the authors shows that large families are injurious to the mother, injurious to the child, and injurious to the community. She attributes Mr. Roosevelt's views on the subject to the influence of "Hebraic dispensations, effete and age-worn superstition." Price 5 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

An Essay on the Duty of Civil Disobedience.

BY HENRY D. THOREAU.

A reprint of this classic essay on the supremacy of the individual conscience. Antique paper; artistic covers, dark green on olivine, 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

WANTED—Office help of either sex; good pay to the right person; state age and qualifications and salary wanted; location in the Middle West. Address E., care of LUCIFER office. 1069

CORRESPONDENCE WANTED—From those who appreciate a good home and desire to devote their lives to building up a large estate as a means of aiding in the natural growth and evolution of this continent into a condition of national ownership of all property. Read article in LUCIFER, No. 1068, upon this subject. Address E., care LUCIFER Office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PHRENOLOGY.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

J. H. GREER, M. D.,
52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.
Office Hours—9 a. m. to 4 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

PHILIP G. PEABODY,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61.
BOSTON, MASS.

DR. OGILVIE RICE,
DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

Note Reductions.

Hampden: 18 size, "Special R-Way," 23 jls., $26; "New R-Way," 23 jls., $24; Dueber Watch Co., 21 jls., $17; same, 17 jls., $14.

Elgin: "Veritas," 23 jls., $29; "Father Time," 21 jls., $22.50; "B. W. Raymond," 19 jls., $20; "B. W. Raymond," 17 jls., $18.50.

Waltham: "Vanguard," 23 jls., $29; "Crescent Street," 21 jls., $22.50; "Appleton, Tracy & Co., Premier," 17 jls., $18.50; same, not "Premier," $16.

The above guaranteed to pass R-Way Inspectors.

Sundries: "Waltham," "P. S. Bartlett," or Elgin "Wheeler," 17 jls., adjusted, nickel, $9; same, gilt, $7; same, Hampden, nickel, $8; same, not adjusted, $7; Elgin, Waltham or Hampden, nickel, 15 jls., $6; same, gilt, $8; Elgin or Waltham, nickel, noncatchable hair spring, 7 jls., $5; Hampden, 7 jls., gilt, $4.50; "Standard" or "Century," 7 jls., $5.

All the above in 3, 5 or 4-ounce silverine cases, prepaid. In silver, or gold filled, screw case, accompanied by manufacturer's and my guarantee for 20 years, $2, or in hunting case, $5 more. In 25-year screw case, $5, or in hunting case, $8.50 more than in silverine case. In solid gold case, $10 to $50 more.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.

Large (6) size Elgin, Waltham or Hampden, 20-year gold filled, latest style, artistic hand-chased, 7 jls., $9; 15 jls., $11; 16 jls., adj., $15. Small (0) size, 7 jls., $17.50; 15 jls., $15; 16 jls., adj., $18. "Riverside," extra fine, $24; in 25-year case, $1 more; in 14-k. solid gold case, $10 to $50 more. Latter with diamonds, all in plush box, prepaid, with guarantee.

Send for prices of Watches not listed, Ingersoll Spoons, Free Thought Badges, Jewelry, Rings, Optical Goods and My Tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free. OTTO WETTSTEIN, La Grange, Cook Co., Ill.

1070

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS AND PERIODICALS.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood.

BY AGNES BENHAM.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 76, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Isola: Or, The Disinherited.

A REVOLT FOR WOMAN AND ALL THE DISINHERITED.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

With Colored Frontispiece Portrait of Fortunatus on the Heights of Avenamore, entitled "The Last Watch."

In his characteristics of the drama Mr. G. J. HOLYOAKE writes: "Her conception of womanly independence is original in literature. . . . The moral interest of the drama has great charm. . . . . As the tragic death of a woman capable of both heroism and reflection, the last hours of Fortunatus are memorable. . . . . The reader will see in The Last Watch on the Heights of Avenamore the beauty, the dignity, the determination, without declamation, of Isola. . . . Intellectual intrepidity in defence of the Right is the Seal of the drama THE DISINHERITED. Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Songs of a Child.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

In the Coming Day the REV. J. PAGE HOPPS writes of them: "The writings of this child suggest the presence and inspiration of a master spirit, fierce for freedom, daring in criticism, and splendid in spiritual adventure. The poems are full of dash and fire, whether treating of Nature and her wild delights, or the mind world with all its possibilities of rapture and depression, joy and anguish, trust and horror. But the wonder of it! The strenuous 'dramatic tragedy,' 'Abel Avenged,' was written at fourteen years and a half, and the militant 'Sceptic's Defiance' at sixteen—both crammed with the rankest imaginable heresies. Throughout this whole book there is hardly a line—perhaps not a line—which is mere composition. It is all powder and shot and morning and evening stars. . . . LIAIN is written with singular vivacity and grace, and is as brilliant as it is thoughtful, with an undertone of pathos that wins sympathy and attention."

Price, $1.25.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Price, 5c each; 25c a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Martyrdom of Man.

BY WINWOOD READE.

Contents: An Epitome of Universal History, under Four Heads.

WAR—Egypt. Western Asia. The Persians. The Greeks. The Macedonians. Alexandria. The Phœnicians. Carthage and Rome. Roman Africa. The Arabs.

RELIGION—The Natural History of Religion. The Israelites. The Jews. The Prophets. Character of Jesus. The Christians. Arabia. Mecca. Character of Mohammad. Description of Africa. Mohammedanism in Central Africa.

LIBERTY—Ancient Europe. Invasion of the Germans. The Castle. The Town. The Church. Arab Spain. Venice. The Portuguese Discoveries. The Slave Trade. Abolition in Europe. Abolition in America. Materials of Human History.

INTELLECT—Animal Period of the Earth. Origin of Man, and Early History. Summary of Universal History. The Future of the Human Race. The Religion of Reason and of Love.

Price, cloth, $1. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, AUGUST 2, E. M. 506 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1071

THE GREAT CONSPIRACY.

In a circular sent out to the public to show up some of the outrages perpetrated against the freedom of the press the writer says:

"There is more in this obscenity law than appears on the surface. It is the work of the church, professedly in the interest of good morals, but really to get control of the postal department of the government and establish a censorship which will aid it in perpetuating its own power."

That there has been a deliberate conspiracy is evidently true, but the church is not alone in it. It is the combined effort of the enemies of liberty in both church and state, and the people at large have been kept in ignorance of the same. True, the obscenity law is the legitimate child of New England puritanism, but Protestants themselves have, for the most part, grown entirely away from the narrowness of their puritanic ancestors. Only a few of the relicts, like Anthony Comstock, remain, and they have succeeded because the church at large has no idea of the purpose involved.

Even the Catholic leaders dare not trust the masses of their membership with their real purpose, and, being aware of the liberalizing tendency of a free atmosphere, they all make false accusations and by the aid of the law keep the great public from knowing what it is they have called obscene. With money at their command to buy judges and jurors, they practically say: We have pronounced the matter obscene, and you dare not undeceive the public by republishing and sending it broadcast.

Therefore, obscenity trials are in that sense secret tribunals, and lying ones at that, as the condemned matter is not what has been considered obscene, but by declaring it so the great public believes it to be the same.

But present events demand a review of the past, of the steps taken to secure our present censorship. I had thought the obscenity law the first step, but when I learned that congress had given the right of private judgment to postal officials as to what might and might not pass through the mails I knew that that, if not the first step, was a very important one. It is a direct bid to the opponents of a free press to seek official places in the postal department.

But whatever the first step may have been, there is one which none but the plotters themselves could even have dreamed that it led in the direction of suppression, and yet without it there would have been no excuse for such censorship as we now have, and that is the cent a pound postage law. This was said to be in the line of the public good, and all went well for a time. Publishers deposited their papers in the mail without question or criticism.

But it was soon found that business men were establishing advertising sheets; that in this and other ways the cheap postage law was being taken advantage of, and this furnished the excuse for a series of questions which must be satisfactorily answered and sworn to before a cheap postage permit could be had. This result was just what the plotters expected and planned for; they understood the greed of the business world. The scheme worked to a charm; it furnished, as has been said, a satisfactory excuse for the series of questions which were the beginning of our present censorship.

This, as far as I know, was the first attempt of the government to regulate the business of newspaper publishers, but with their postage of cheap postage the general press was blind to its far-reaching significance, and even liberal thinkers failed to realise that it was a trap. They failed to see that in giving the number of subscribers and sending copy of paper to Washington, as they must before being allowed second-class rate of postage, they thus furnished the enemies of freedom the name, character and strength of every radical paper in the nation.

Time is showing the meaning of all this, for now, if a publisher is known to be opposed to the prevailing religious, political or social regime, the subscription list must not only be sworn to but must be verified. The list is demanded, names taken therefrom, the parties written to asking if they are subscribers, and the applicant is required to show the letters written by subscribers ordering the paper and sending remittances for the same, as is shown by Benj. F. Tucker in giving an account in "Liberty" of his struggle to get second-class postage for it.

Upon presenting his request he was asked: "What proof have you that this is a bona fide list of paying subscribers? Can you show the letters containing remittances in which your subscribers ordered the paper?" When furnished with such letters, many of which were from personal friends and contained much personal matter, this tool of the plotters read them from beginning to end in Mr. Tucker's presence. One from an old friend began with: "I send you $3 for a year's subscription."

"How is this?" he was asked. "Three dollars is not the subscription price."

"The gentleman sent an excess, desiring to contribute to the paper's growth," replied Mr. Tucker.

Prompt came the next question, "And what did you do with the money?"

"Placed it with the paper's receipts."

"You did not appropriate it to sending the paper to other individuals?"

"Not in special; all receipts are used in paying the general expenses," and thus this petty examination continued to the end.

Mr. Tucker says: "This occurred early in January. I heard nothing more until near the middle of February. Then I began to receive from my subscribers in different parts of the country elaborate, regularly printed circulars which had been sent to them from Washington by the department asking them a set series of questions concerning their subscription to 'Liberty,' how much they paid, how they paid it, if any extra inducements were held out to secure their subscriptions, etc., etc."

Quite a difference between now and when the cent a pound rate was first established. Then, as before said, it only needed to take your papers to the office, have them weighed and pay the postage. Now second-class postage means the right to demand of a publisher his private letters for official inspection; it means the right to demand what a publisher does with extra money sent by friends; it means the right to demand for official inspection the subscription list; it means the right to insult a publisher by refusing to accept his sworn statement and of appealing to his subscribers as to the truth of what he says.

Had all this been claimed at first the people would have been so indignant that the whole matter would have been overhauled at the very next session of congress, but little by little the cords have been tightened until now, unless all questions are satisfactorily answered, sworn to and confirmed by outside testimony, it means the highest postage paid or the suppression of all radical papers. Yes, the highest postage paid, for letter postage is only 32 cents per pound, and to pay a cent a copy for some of our small radical papers would be from 36 to 40 cents per pound. And if, after the publisher has been sufficiently humiliated, he succeeds in obtaining second-class rates, he must still be subjected to the same degrading espionage.

It is a direct discrimination, not in law but in fact, against publishers of radical thought; an indirect but none the less real attempt to suppress all such papers as far as is possible. The law, it is true, applies to all, but the general press would not stand such espionage for a moment, and as congress has given postal officials the right of private judgment they of course leave all papers alone but such as they wish to annoy.

It is because they can so handle the sex question as to arouse the prejudices of the people that they have made use of that as the first step toward press censorship, and not because they are seeking sex purity. When shown an extract from Alice B. Stockham's "Tokology," "Of course it's obscene," said the attorney for the postal department; "all discussion of sex is obscene; there is no need to talk of such matters except between physicians and their patients." Mrs. Stockham is a physician, and what she has written is between her and that great, suffering patient, Humanity.

Attorney-General Goodwin, in saying what he did, practically tells every postal clerk in the nation that all works on sex may be thrown out. He is as rabid as the slaveholder was against anti-slavery publications, and in the end his efforts will be equally fruitless. The pioneers of progress are searching for the laws of nature, which, if obeyed, will give us heaven on earth, and neither the prison nor the gallows will deter them from trying to find what it is that poisons the life-fountain.

But our postal censors were not satisfied in getting the number and strength of all "heretic" papers—they wanted also the names of the subscribers. It was several years before this was called for, but now they are getting them through the law which gives the postmaster the right to demand the subscription list for inspection.

Do you think all this has been a happen-so? Do you think there is no plan, no plotting behind it? There certainly is and has been from the first, and there are other steps contemplated. What they are I do not clearly see, but I should as soon think of a serpent stopping on its way to its intended victim as of these conspirators leaving things as they are. There is a time coming, unless there is a stop put to the onward march of this imperialistic power, when no letter, book or package can be sent through the mail unless it has upon it the name of the sender.

This would be all right if the postal department was simply a public carrier, but as a moral censor it is quite another thing. There are many in San Francisco, Cal., who remember the case of young Price, who was sent to San Quintin for a year for mailing an obscene pamphlet, and he positively asserts that he never saw the pamphlet until he saw it in court; did not know till then that there was such a pamphlet in existence.

Now, what is to be done about this state of things? It seems to me sometimes as if our revolutionary fathers must rise from their graves to confront their degenerate sons—such servility, such a rendering up of the people's individual rights for a few cents postage! Where is the self-respect of our newspaper fraternity, that they submit to such a degradation of their manhood—degradation so long as such a law stands upon the statute book, whether enforced or not!

As I see things there should be a concerted effort to place the postal department where it belongs as a public carrier, a public servant. Its moral sponsorship should be taken from it and left with the states. Then there could be no censorship to destroy the freedom of the press. Friends of freedom, wake up and act if you wish even a shadow of our liberties to be preserved.

LOIS WAISBROOKER.

EXCESSIVE MULTIPLICATION.

Little improvement can be expected in morality until the production of large families is regarded with the same feeling as drunkenness or any other physical excess. When persons are once married, the idea in this country never seems to enter any one's mind that having or not having a family, or the number of which it shall consist, is amenable to their own control. One would imagine that children were raised down upon married people direct from heaven, without their having art or part in the matter; that it was really, as the common phrases have it, God's will, and not their own, which decided the number of their offspring.—John Stuart Mill.

The misery of the people is not caused by individuals, but by an order of society by which they are bound together in a way that puts them in the power of a few.—Leo Tolstoi.

VARIOUS REMARKS.

In the "Woman's Journal" of June 30 Henry B. Blackwell has an article headed "Variety the Spice of Life." He thinks that women have very dull lives, and that they need variety to make them happy. He quotes a Burman, who says: "In Burmah for breakfast we eat rice; for dinner we eat rice; for supper, rice; and for dessert—rice. When we want a change of diet we eat—rice." Mr. Blackwell thinks that this is like a woman's life, and that great changes are needed, but he does not mention the particular things that he would like to see women have variety in. Mr. Blackwell is getting on to dangerous ground. He had better be careful if he does not wish the "Woman's Journal" to be excluded from the mails.

* * *

The disturbances which the suffragettes are making in England are a great event in the history of women. Never before has such an insubordinate disposition been publicly displayed by a number of women. Until lately the woman suffrage movement in England was as respectable and feeble an affair as that of the United States. It was composed of "ladies." At the election in February, however, a new organization composed of "women" appeared upon the scene, invaded all the meetings, and insisted on getting a precise statement from each candidate as to how he stood on woman suffrage. Some eminent personages refused to answer, and when the women insisted they were forcibly removed from the meetings. This excited wide sympathy among male voters, and resulted in some of the leading politicians being hooted off the platform, while others were held up until they gave a definite answer. The upshot was that 407 of the 670 members of the house of commons were frightened into promising to vote for woman suffrage, including the leaders of all the four parties in the house. When the matter came up in the house, however, there was very little time for discussion, and several obstructionists tried to talk it out. When it was clear that it could not go through a number of women in the gallery made a noisy demonstration, waving a flag and hurling epithets of opprobrium at their opponents down below, greatly to the horror of the British people.

Since then the suffragettes have been active all the time, until now four of them have been sent to jail. Teresa Billington got two months for striking a policeman. She refused to make any defense in court, on the ground that she did not recognize man-made laws and courts as having any authority over her. Annie Kenney, who was sent to jail during the election, has again got six weeks.

Every one admits that woman suffrage is now inevitable, and the agitation has spread all over Europe. It is red hot in France. In Finland all men and women over 24 have just been given votes, and the Russian duma has unanimously demanded the same thing for Russia.

I hope the women of England will get the suffrage, but I hope they will not get it soon. An agitation like this is just what women need. It is teaching them to think and to rebel, which Bakunin truly said were the two most important things in the world. No saying what they will soon be thinking about. Now that they do not recognize man-made law some very bold ones may begin to get a little doubtful about man-made morality. Shocking thought!

* * *

Another event is the formation of the Anti-Puritan League in England, which has already been joined by many persons. I understand it will take up a good many subjects, but the sex question will not be overlooked. I do not expect anything very radical from it, but it will at least hold in check anything like Comstockism.

The more one knows about Europe the more one deplores the miserable incapacity of American radicals for organization. In England, France, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, and I think Switzerland, there are neo-Malthusian leagues under one name or another. The result is that in most of those countries there is perfect freedom to advertise and sell preventives. In England they are displayed in the windows of stores, with a description of their object in large letters. In Spain, the America of Europe, a desperate struggle is going on over this matter, but a Spanish jury has lately acquitted a man charged with obscenity for advertising preventives. But after all, Spain is not the United States, it is only the nearest European approach to it.

* * *

Dear LUCIFER: In No. 1068 Joe Trounson pounces on me for my conceit in claiming that God watches over me. From this I gather that in No. 1065, which I have never seen, there must have been an extract from the letter in which I said that God kept me from going to San Francisco the night of the earthquake. In explanation let me say that that letter was not intended for publication, but was a private one to Lillian Harman, who knows me personally, and knows just how to take anything I say about God.

Some readers may think this explanation unnecessary, but I realize how important it is. Nowadays the preachers are trying to prove that Washington and Jefferson were deeply religious men, and in another hundred years there will be great controversies about the religious beliefs of Moses and Lillian Harman, and the other free-lovers of our time. I can see what a splendid chance my letter would give to some Talmage or Torrey of the twenty-first century to preach a sermon on "The Piety of the Early Varietists." What a fine opening it would give for a passage like this:

"That LUCIFER held the same views as many of the early Christians, and some of the religious sects of the Renaissance and the Reformation, should convince the most sceptical that Moses Harman and his assistants were humble and earnest Christians. But if further evidence is needed it is found in the letter of R. B. Kerr, which appeared in LUCIFER just after the San Francisco earthquake. There had been a series of debates on free-love at the San Francisco free-thought meetings, which were attended by great multitudes, and at which devout men and women of God, like Lydia Todd, Lois Waisbrooker, Dora Forster and R. B. Kerr, made speeches; but they were vehemently opposed by all the leading freethinkers in San Francisco, who held that any and all discussion of the sex question was utterly opposed to freethought principles. As a result the majority of San Franciscans remained unconverted to free-love (except on the sly), at which God was so angry that three days after the last of these discussions he destroyed San Francisco, that great city, with fire and brimstone. Howbeit R. B. Kerr, one of the Noahs or Lots of that time, had intended to go over to San Francisco the night of the earthquake, but God warned him not to, and he desisted. This shows plainly that all the Luciferites were pious Christian men and women, and that their persecution was caused entirely by ungodly men like John Most, Eugene Macdonald and the San Francisco freethinkers, who dominated the public opinion of that day." To prevent such a serious perversion of history let me explain that when I speak of God I do so just as I should speak of Santa Claus or Father Christmas.

R. B. KERR.

Victoria, B. C.

RECENT PHASES OF THE BATTLE FOR FREEDOM.

The battle over freedom of speech has recently assumed new and interesting forms. A New York state court dismissed charges against a theatrical company for producing the Bernard Shaw play, "Mrs. Warren's Profession," on the ground that it was not obscene within the meaning of the law. The trial judge took occasion to intimate that, as a disagreeable presentation of a disagreeable subject, it was not good art—a criticism which applies with equal (that is, considerable) force to the best known writings of the greatest modern novelists, as Zola and Tolstoy. But "obscene" means adapted to excite lasciviousness in susceptible minds; and "Mrs. Warren's Profession" is not adapted to excite lasciviousness, but only disgust. This just and important distinction would have vindicated the Markland letter if it had been drawn. The federal courts are less scrupulous than those of the states. Since they have, as Senator Carpenter said, "no jury trial," irresponsibility makes them arrogant and subservient, two qualities which go admirably together. Hence their favor with promoters of the Movement in Favor of Ignorance.

It seems, however, that even the federal courts, when a Phillips or a Benedict is not on the bench, are a little averse to pronouncing that obscene whose treatment of disagreeable subjects most excite, not lasciviousness, but horror, indignation, or disgust; for promoters of the Movement in Favor of Ignorance are trying to have the word "disgusting" inserted in the list of methods tabooed by federal law. The way in which such legislation usually goes through makes it probable they may succeed.

* * *

We do not expect as much good or harm from laws as most of our neighbors. But laws for the promotion of ignorance at least cause individual suffering; and every check they encounter is at least an index of awakening public intelligence. It is therefore encouraging to note that since holding up LUCIFER was discontinued the censorship has received another black eye. The banker Lewis, whose new enterprise, the People's Bank, was destroyed last year by a fraud order, has received an amount of public support which compelled Cortelyou to put him again commsicado (May, 1906), and to order an investigation, which Mr. Lewis promises us, through his paper, the "Woman's Magazine," will startle the country.

Evidently no radical results are to be expected from this. But Congressman Crumpacker, of Indiana, has introduced a bill guaranteeing the common law right of jury trial in fraud cases, notwithstanding the infamous decision of a Roosevelt judge in Lewis' demurrer. It is opposed by the yellow press (see a recent article in "Collier's Weekly"). We ought to back it. For purposes of this sort I advise addressing members of both houses, and do so myself upon occasion. The distinguished Minnesota physician, Maldow, convicted under the Comstock law, has not only been refused justice by Roosevelt, but this insolent ignoramus and demagogue took the occasion to blackguard the two senators from Minnesota in characteristic fashion for presenting the petition (signed by the governor and other principal citizens of their state). The result of my correspondence with them is to ascertain that one of the senators (Clapp) took his kicking like a cur; but the other (Nelson) shows a proper spirit. He thanked me for giving him a full history of "Comstockery, the world's joke at expense of the United States"; and is a good man to interest. As for Roosevelt, the advantages of appeals to his intelligence are fully described in the sixth verse of the seventh chapter of the gospel according to St. Matthew.

C. L. JAMES.

PRUDERY EXPLAINED.

Why the bees should pamper their mothers whilst we pamper only our operatic prima donnas is a question worth reflecting on. Our notion of treating a mother is not to increase her supply of food, but to cut it off by forbidding her to work in a factory for a month after her confinement. Everything that can make birth a misfortune to the parents as well as a danger to the mother is conscientiously done. When a great French writer, Emil Zola, alarmed at the sterilization of his nation, wrote an eloquent and powerful book to restore prestige of parentage, it was at once assumed in England that a work of this character, with such a title as "Fecundity," was too abominable to be translated, and that any attempt to deal with the relations of the sexes from any other than the voluptuary or romantic point of view must be sternly put down. Now, if this assumption were really founded on public opinion, it would indicate an attitude of disgust and resentment towards the life force that could only arise in a diseased and moribund community in which Ibsen's Hedda Gabler would be the typical woman. But it has no vital foundation at all. The prudery of the newspapers is, like the prudery of the dinner table, a mere difficulty of education and language. We are not taught to think decently on these subjects, and consequently, we have no language for them, except indecent language. We, therefore, have to declare them unfit for public discussion, because the only terms in which we can conduct the discussion are unfit for public use. Physiologists, who have a technical vocabulary at their disposal, find no difficulty; and masters of language who think decently can write popular stories like Zola's "Fecundity" or Tolstoi's "Resurrection" without giving the smallest offense to readers who can also think decently. But the ordinary modern journalist, who has never discussed such matters, except in ribaldry, cannot write a simple comment on a divorce case without a conscious shamefulness or a furtive facetiousness that makes it impossible to read the comment aloud in company. All this ribaldry and prudery (the two are the same) does not mean that people do not feel decently on the subject; on the contrary, it is just the depth and seriousness of our feeling that makes its desecration by vile language and coarse humor intolerable; so that at last we cannot bear to have it spoken of at all because only one in a thousand can speak of it without wounding our self-respect, especially the self-respect of women. Add to the horrors of popular language the horrors of popular poverty. In crowded populations poverty destroys the possibility of cleanliness; and in the absence of cleanliness many of the natural conditions of life become offensive and noxious, with the result that at last the association of uncleanliness with these natural conditions becomes so overpowering that among civilized people (that is, people massed in the labyrinths of slums we call cities), half their bodily life becomes a guilty secret, unmentionable except to the doctor in emergencies; and Hedda Gabler shoots herself because maternity is so unladylike. In short, popular prudery is only a mere incident of popular squalor: the subjects which it taboos remain the most interesting and earnest of subjects in spite of it.—G. Bernard Shaw.

Without hearts there is no home.—Byron.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF WOMAN.

If a woman wants marriage, and wants to make her marriage a religious sacrament, let her do so. If another woman wishes to have the sanction of a magistrate or a judge of probate, let her have it. If she wishes to make an individualistic contract with a man without witnesses, it is her right to do so. If she wishes to claim her natural right to motherhood or to sex-association without any contract whatever, holding herself responsible to natural law, natural justice, for the consequences of such association, it is nobody's business but her own. From my point of view, our marriage laws are all wrong; they are the mediate or immediate cause of more suffering, debasement and crime than any other laws or class of laws; but I recognize also that, like all other laws and superstitions, they are the result of natural evolution, and that by natural evolution must they be eliminated or destroyed. As in the elimination of our iniquitous land laws, money laws, tariff laws, etc., the first thing to do is to create a desire for something better. Next, to show that something better can only be obtained by a recognition of the demands of natural right, natural justice. To create such a desire, and to show what the demands of natural justice mean or require, is the present mission of LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER.

The address of Joseph Errant in Chicago raises several questions of much importance as well as of much difficulty of solution.

First, and somewhat incidentally to the main question, we would ask, if it be right and proper that the law should make provision whereby the "unmarried mother may take proceedings, either before or after the child is born, to place the father under bonds to pay money for the support of the child"—if the unmarried mother can lawfully and rightfully do this, would it not also be proper and right and should it not be lawful for the married mother to do so too? The common impression seems to be that the marriage bond supersedes the necessity of placing the putative father under other bonds for the support of his child or his children—that his promise to the priest or magistrate to love, cherish and protect his wife includes the obligation to properly support his child or his children if any should be born to him, and that his solemn promise or oath is a sufficient guarantee to the woman for its fulfillment.

But how does this theory work in practice? Let the thousands of half-starved, half-clad, uneducated children of married mothers give answer. When the husband plays truant and deserts his family, or, worse still, when he proves himself a loafer, a deadbeat, consuming upon his vices most of his scanty earnings, what recourse have the injured wife and children? If the mother were not married to the shiftless spendthrift or vicious sponge in the shape of a man, she could at least refuse longer to be his sex slave—could refuse to bear him any more children to grow up in poverty and vice or to die from neglect. She might be able, if unmarried, even under our unjustly discriminative industrial system, to support herself and one child, but what can she do with four, five, six or more children, all under ten years of age, as often happens in marriage?

It is true that in some states a divorce is allowed the married woman whose husband notoriously fails to provide for his family, but how many wronged women will avail themselves of such relief? Marriage to most women is a sacrament, an oath, a bond to be dissolved only by death, or by dishonor, to them worse than death. "For better or for worse, till death do you part," are words of fearful import, and rather than seek relief by divorce most women will be true to that bond till death brings release.

But all this is incidental rather than vitally important to the main questions that are just now receiving much attention from the Society for Ethical Culture in Chicago, and from the clergy and newspapers of that and other cities. The lecture of Mr. Errant is only one of hundreds that have lately been delivered by eminent men and women in regard to the various forms of sexual and social evils. Mr. Errant seems to have much faith in "law" as a cure for these evils, but thinks the laws, as well as public opinion, "need great revision on these questions." As the law now stands, he says, when an unmarried woman seeks to place the responsibility upon the father of her child, "the attack is always made upon the woman's chastity, because, forsooth, the policy of the law has been to virtually compel a woman who brought a charge against a man to prove herself chaste."

To determine, then, whether public opinion and the laws need revision or not it would seem that some definition is necessary. We must know what is meant by "a woman's chastity." And upon this definition, as upon a pivot, turns the whole controversy of woman's rights and wrongs in the sex-relations.

The lecturer himself has given us a pointer or two, perhaps unwittingly, that leads at once, as we think, to the correct definition of the terms "chaste" and "chastity," as applied to woman, as when he says: "The law and public opinion should unite in recognizing the sacredness of motherhood wherever it may be found."

Now, if motherhood is always sacred, then such words as "bastard," "whoredom," etc., must lose their present meaning, and a woman cannot be considered unchaste, lewd or impure simply because she becomes a mother outside of wedlock. If motherhood be always sacred, then the necessary processes or acts that lead to or culminate in motherhood cannot be unholy or "unchaste" processes or acts.

Follow this simple statement or proposition as to the "sacredness of motherhood wherever found" to its logical sequences and it means neither more nor less than the sacredness of womanhood—sacredness of woman as the mother of humanity. It means also the sovereignty of woman over her own person, for in no other way can the sacredness of womanhood, of motherhood, be properly maintained and defended. Self-ownership of woman means or includes the right to dispose of her selfhood—of her entire person—as she may think proper, without consulting any one but the individual whose equal right to self-ownership may be jeopardized or imperiled by her election; and the right to dispose of her person or to choose once, involves and includes the right to dispose and to choose an indefinite number of times.

If the sacredness of motherhood includes and requires self-ownership, self-control, it also includes and requires the ownership and control of the offspring of her person, of her body. When man endures half the pain, the labor, the peril of bringing a child into the world he can then claim half-ownership in the offspring of which he may be the actual or the putative father, and not till then. This view would seem to settle the question of "responsibility" for the parentage and for the support of the child. Without ownership of some sort, responsibility for care and for support cannot be justly predicated or charged. Natural affection will prompt the father to assist in the support of both mother and child, but natural justice will give him no control over either because of or in reward for such aid. It is this claim to authority over mother and child, because of the alleged support given them in their helplessness and because of the assumed superiority of fatherhood over motherhood, that has made slaves and drudges of women and children in all past times.

Our solution, then, of the question of "responsibility" for the birth of a child and for its support and proper education (the fixing of which responsibility seems to be the chief concern of Mr. Errant and his brother reformers) would be simply this:

First.—The repeal or abolition of all artificial (man-made) restrictions or control of the sex relations of women and men, thus allowing natural selection, natural affection, to do its legitimate work.

To secure this repeal, this abolition, woman must lead the way—man will not, simply because these artificial restrictions were made by man for his own benefit—that is, for the purpose of perpetuating his power over woman. In the language of Laura Cummings, "woman must save woman," and the only way to save woman from the hells to which man has assigned her is—as all great reforms in the past have been won—by ignoring, by repudiating and trampling under foot these man-made restrictions. Woman must be a rebel and must be sustained in her rebellion by her sister woman. No bad laws ever were repealed until they were ignored and disregarded by the victims of these laws.

Second.—Constructively: To take the place of the artificial laws and customs thus abolished, let education and a sense of responsibility to self and to natural law be substituted. Let girls (and boys, too) be taught, as soon as they can understand language, all that is known or can be known in regard to "motherhood," in regard to the use and the natural consequences of the abuse of their bodies—including, as the most important, the reproductive system.—Moses Harman, in Lucifer, Feb. 8, 1889.

LIBERTY AND LICENTIOUSNESS.

The utmost concern is expressed for the liberty of the press, and the utmost horror for its licentiousness; but then, by the licentiousness of the press is meant every disclosure by which any abuse is brought to light and exposed to shame; by the liberty of the press is meant only publications from which no such inconvenience is to be apprehended; and the fallacy consists in employing the sham approbation of liberty as a mask for the real opposition to all free discussion.

To write a pamphlet so ill that nobody will read it; to animadvert in terms so weak and insipid upon great evils, that no disgust is excited at the vice, and no apprehension in the evil-doer, is a fair use of the liberty of the press, and is not only pardoned by the friends of government, but draws from them the most fervent eulogises. The licentiousness of the press consists in doing the thing boldly and well, in striking terror unto the guilty, and in rousing the attention of the public to the defense of their highest interests. This is the licentiousness of the press held in the greatest horror by timid and corrupt men, and punished, by semi-animous, semi-cadaverous judges, with a captivity of many years.—Jeremy Bentham.

When Jeremy Bentham, a learned English jurist of the last century, said, "By the licentiousness of the press is meant every disclosure by which any abuse is brought to light and exposed to shame," he must have had in his prophetic eye the men who are now trying to put LUCIFER'S editors and publishers behind prison bars for plain speaking against the horrible abuses of the present day.—Moses Harman, in Lucifer, Feb. 8, 1889.

THE CONSOLATIONS OF RELIGION.

When children succumb to inhospitable conditions of life in this world, religion offers consolation in the assurance that God has called these little ones to join the angelic hosts around his throne; if they live to grow up to continued deprivation, religion exhorts them to be content "in that state of life unto which it hath pleased God to call" them, thus throwing all the responsibility for the world's misery upon an unknown creator, just as the Mormons are said to justify their peculiar institution by the theory that innumerable souls are waiting to be born that they may glorify God and enjoy him forever, and therefore it is well-pleasing to him for human beings to furnish these spirits with mortal bodies as rapidly as possibly.—Elizabeth H. Evans.

All the selfish propensities, the self-worship, the unjust self-preference, which exists among mankind, have their source and root in and derive their principal nourishment from the present constitution of the relation between men and women.—John Stuart Mill.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 9 months and 22 days old. He has served 157 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kas. Purely private subjects should be avoided, as all letters are read by prison officials and withheld if not approved. Do not ask questions requiring answer. All such questions, matter pertaining to LUCIFER, changes of addresses, etc., should be sent to the office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

U. S. P., LEAVENWORTH, KAN., July 22, 1906.

Many thanks, dear daughter, for good letters since I wrote you two weeks ago—the last dated July 19. Glad to hear that everything is going on so well at home. Though not allowed to see its radiant face, I rejoice to know that our Son of the Morning continues to make its appearance prompt to time every other week. This is more than could be said of it when I was manager. Glad to know that friends far and near are doing their part so well that there is no lack of the needful to meet current expenses of publication. Glad to know that your health continues normal notwithstanding unusual strain, from sickness in family and lack of usual help.

Hope the summer in Chicago will not be uncomfortably or unhealthfully warm. Here at the U. S. P. the weather has been pleasantly cool most of the time since my transfer from Joliet, Ill. The hospital, of which I am still an inmate, occupies part of the third floor of the main building, and the prison itself is located on a bluff or high ridge, hence we get good circulation of air most of the time.

My report of health, two weeks ago, was of the pessimistic rather than optimistic order, if I mistake not. Since that date there has been decided improvement in my physical condition. I cough but little now and the catarrh of stomach is less constantly in evidence. My appetite is normal, for my one meal a day—dinner. I get milk, sweet and sour; some raw fruit, and nearly always stewed peaches; rice, potatoes, etc. Old-fashioned corn bread (maize) twice a week, of which, as you know, I am very fond. Altogether I have good reason to feel optimistic once more, and to hope that my present term of imprisonment will not kill me, nor leave me so near dead that I cannot do a little more work, with hand or brain or both.

Much of this improvement is due, as I think, to the kindness of friends, far and near, who continue to send letters—hopeful, cheerful, loving letters—full of encouragement to hold out bravely till old Father Time shall give the order to the prison keepers to open the gate for U. S. "Convict" No. 3326—which order is now set for December 26 of this current year. When I contrast the fate of the average prisoner here and at Joliet, in regard to letters and visits, with my own, I feel almost guilty of selfish monopoly. Many prisoners get no letters at all, for months or years; others do not average one letter per month. Some never get a visit from friends. When an inmate of the U. S. P. eleven years ago I had many visitors —several visits per week, often; but now the rule is one visit in four weeks, except by special permission of the warden. Thus far, and by special privilege, I have had two visits of half hour each from Son George, whose home is at Valley Falls, Kan., thirty-five miles west of the U. S. P.

How many letters have knocked at the prison door, written for my eye, and failed to gain admittance, in the two weeks just past, I have no means of knowing, but here is the list of those that reached my hand: Susan Swaysgood, 1; Philip G. Peabody, 2; Bert Griffin, 1; Elizabeth H. Russell, 1; N. C. Greene, 1; Emma Greene, 1; S. O. Bishop, 1; Sarah C. Campbell, 1; Frank D. Blue, 1; "The Chaplain" (A. Johnson), 1; Carrie Gross, 1; Otto Bobsien, 1; Ada Morley, 2; M. R. Leverson, M. D., 1; Ed. W. Chamberlain, 1; Lois Waisbrooker, 2; Lydia L. Lamb, 1; George P. Patch, 1; Annie B. Fish, 1; H. Hansen (Colo.), 1; Lulu McClarke, 1; Ella Slater, 1; Hulda P. Loomis, 1; George B. Wheeler, 1; Ella Kautz, 1; Maggie Dimmick, 1; Fannie Bellis, 1; Virgie C. Moon, 1; Ollie Steedman, 1; H. W. Boozer, 1; H. M. Addison, 1; Annie E. Parkhurst, 1; George Bedborough, 2; Lillian Harman, 6. J. Francis Ruggles, of Bronson, Mich., writes that he sent me a book of songs. It has not been delivered to me. Please thank Brother Ruggles for me, and if possible, write a few lines to each of the writers just named, thanking them in my name, and asking them to kindly continue to remember the "prisoner of hope" in the U. S. P. at Leavenworth, not Fort Leavenworth, as first stated. Many of these writers sent copies of the songs I asked for while at Joliet, also copies of songs I did not ask for, but which are appreciated all the same—so many, in fact, that I shall have to ask the writers to wait till I am free again, when I hope to answer, personally, all who responded to my request for songs that I hoped would help to break the monotony of breaking stone with a steel hammer in a close yard without shelter from the sun except a straw hat. The promised canopy failed to materialize while I helped to furnish broken stone for the Illinois railways.

Please thank Oscar Schleif for the very fine photo of himself, and say no letter came with the photo. It was sent from Clarendon, N. J.

Dr. Immanuel Pfeiffer, vice-president and general manager of the Postal Reform League, sent me a registered letter dated July 3. It reached my hand two days ago, on the 20th, having been delayed and reëntered at Joliet, Ill. He enclosed an important clipping from a New York paper and suggests that I register my replies to his letters. Please thank him for me and say I will try to comply with his suggestion, but that I fail to see how registration will help me to reach him, though it may help him to reach me.

After long waiting I am now getting the daily and Sunday "Tribune" and weekly "Public" (Chicago), but the "Scientific American" (New York), paid ahead six months, does not come. Neither does "Progressive Thinker" (Chicago), nor several weeklies and monthlies that came to me regularly at Joliet.

Shoot full.

Hopefully, gratefully ever, M. H.

The reasonable man adapts himself to the world; the unreasonable one persists in trying to adapt the world to himself. Therefore all progress depends on the unreasonable man.—Shaw.

FRAUD ORDERS.

Our Washington correspondent, in recently synopsising the Crumpacker bill to limit the power of the postoffice department in issuing "fraud orders," so called, noted that the sentiment of congress in favor of providing a judicial review of the edicts under which the use of the mails is denied is steadily growing. Mr. Crumpacker's proposal is to make the issuing of a fraud order dependent on the approval of a court. The postmaster general must give notice of intention to cut off the privilege of the mails, and the party affected has fifteen days within which to go into court to prove, if he can, his right to continued postal facilities. The court will hear all the evidence and if it concurs in the opinion of the postmaster general will make an order accordingly. If it finds that party whose correspondence it is proposed to exclude is not engaged in any fraudulent enterprise it will prohibit the issuance of a fraud order.

Mr. Crumpacker, in the document accompanying his bill, which has been favorably reported to the house, severely criticises the methods now in practice as compelling the citizen to prove his innocence of fraud without affording him an opportunity to see the evidence against him. This evidence is confidential and has been brought together by postoffice inspectors, and inspectors are apt to consider success as a duty and conviction as success. Moreover, it is an act of grace in the postmaster general to accord a hearing. It is a privilege granted; not a right recognized. At present the only remedy within the reach of the citizen who feels himself aggrieved is to go into court and seek an injunction against the enforcement, not the issuance, of a "fraud order." Usually the quest is fruitless, as the burden of judicial decisions is that the use of the mails is not a vested or property right. The methods of the postoffice department in executing one of the attributes of sovereignty can, however, be regulated by statute. Hence, Mr. Crumpacker seeks to curtail the autocratic tendency in the way proposed.

That the government has a right to protect the citizen and itself against the employment of the mails for the purpose of working a fraud may be admitted without the admission conceding the propriety of all the methods followed in the pursuance of this purpose. The power the postmaster general now has in the matter may be lodged in safe hands, but a successor might be moved by a spirit of inquisitorial autocracy that would lead to the gravest public inconvenience. If there should be no tribunal to appeal to, it might be possible for a postmaster general to hold that all speculation was stock gambling and that an inducement to investment attended only by the adverse chances that are liable in the most promising market was a fraudulent prospectus and to be cast out of the mails entirely. It must be remembered, too, that the denial of the privilege of the mails extends to all the correspondence of the party affected, and that letters having no relation to the business charged with being fraudulent come under the interdiction. The man against whom a fraud order is issued is, as Mr. Crumpacker in effect says, isolated from his kind, so far as the postoffice department can accomplish his isolation. He is thenceforth under a stigma.

The question considered in its broadest sense concerns more than the prosperity or expediency of the methods of an executive department of the government. As the law stands now it may easily infringe the rights of the citizens, the liberty of the individual. If a citizen desires to try some panacea for his real or fancied ills, if he chooses to purchase it through the mails, he has offended no law, and where in the constitution is there found any obligation on him to accept as final the verdict of a postoffice inspector that the assumed remedy is "fraudulent"? His money comes back to him, to be sure, but that circumstance is little likely to reconcile him to the paternalism that tells him the government will not facilitate the purchase of somebody's sure cure for indigestion. Protection against efforts to work deliberate fraud through the mails may be a legitimate function of the government, but the progress of paternalism in this country is so rapid, and the transition to autocracy is so easy, that the adoption of Mr. Crumpacker's proposal may be but a timely measure for checking a dangerous tendency. Judges are fallible, but they are free from the influences to which postoffice inspectors are liable. The inspectors are removable, and it is nothing wonderful if they are inspired by an earnest desire to report in harmony with the policy of him who possesses the power of removal.—Boston Evening Transcript.

Truth does not do so much good in the world as its appearances do evil. * * * Our wisdom is not less at the mercy of fortune than our property.—Rochefoucauld's "Maxims and Reflections upon Man."

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, slighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

J. M. CRANE, Chicago.—I send you $5 for five copies of LUCIFER for one year. I want the four extra copies for distribution among persons who never have seen the paper.

MRS. NELLIE PITCHER, Rapid City, S. D.—Enclosed find $1 to apply on my subscription. Wish I could make it $100,000 instead, as my deepest sympathy is ever with you, your noble father and the cause you advocate.

F. E. LEONARD, Cestos, Okla.—I wish to express my approval of the plan to print Moses Harman's portrait in each issue of LUCIFER while he is serving his sentence in prison, and will agree to contribute at least $2 towards the extra expense of such printing.

FRED H. BERGMANN, Chicago.—Please find enclosed $3 for LUCIFER and its cause. I beg you to forward my fraternal greeting to your esteemed father. Words cannot express my admiration for this gallant fighter for liberty. His persecutors and enemies have my full contempt!

C. F. CIAMPA, Boston.—Enclosed find $2, for which you may renew my subscription to LUCIFER for one year and use the other dollar to help along the cause for which your father is now suffering in prison. I hope that Mr. Harman will come out of his torture just as strong as ever to continue his brilliant work of education.

DR. GEORGE A. BRADFORD, Columbia, Mo.—A man called at my office the other day to consult me about his sick child. I afterwards showed him the picture of Moses Harman, and read him some short notices in LUCIFER. He immediately gave me one dollar and said: "I want you to write and have that paper sent me at once." So please find enclosed postoffice order for $1. After this I will certainly show the paper to others.

F. FROMMEL, Charleston, Ill.—I am in sympathy with your father and his writings. I know him personally. I heard him make a talk in St. Louis at the convention during the world's fair. I admired then his pluck and courage to express his convictions for the cause he stands for, and send you my sincere thanks for what you do for your dear father and his cause. I would like to say more, but find my pen too weak to express my thoughts and feelings in letters. I enclose $1, for which I wish you would send your dear father something he is fond of. I hope to be able to see him again at our next convention in Chicago. I will be a subscriber to LUCIFER as long as I live. I am only sorry I did not get acquainted sooner with the publication. I shall try and get some friends to subscribe for LUCIFER.

J. L., Abilene, Texas.—I see my figures on the wrapper label are up and I must "come across." Find enclosed 50 cents to keep LUCIFER coming a while longer. It is simply outrageous that your good old father has to suffer incarceration and bear the punishment of physical labor for trying to do good. I am almost ready to say that the wages of righteousness is death. I wish I were financially able to help relieve the situation.

P. S.—I inclose a humorous clipping in which there is a point:

The Gardener (tendering his resignation)—No, sir. It's the missus I can't abide. She's got inter the 'abit o' talkin' ter me jest like wot she does ter you. She fergits I can leave when I wants ter. —Pick Me Up.

J. FRANCIS RUGGLES, Bronson, Mich.—It is some years since I have read LUCIFER until recently, but I observe that you still keep the watch fires of liberty and genius brightly burning. Progress progresses slowly but surely, and we see the once "awful doctrine" of equal moral responsibility of the sexes being championed and popularized by thinkers of various cults, and even a reverend doctor of divinity has published a series of invaluable works for the sexual education and betterment of all man and womankind. I have never perused anything vile, course or indecent from your editor's pen, and unless the proscribed articles are much different from the general trend of matter in your columns they can't be exceedingly bad. At any rate it is really very cruel that your aged father must suffer so vicariously for the writings of others, and for possible error of judgment in admitting their contributions to his columns. Other editors, however, err occasionally, but are not incarcerated or persecuted for a lifetime in consequence thereof. Upon the great question of respectful free discussion of all subjects, and the right to be heard on the topic of sexual enlightenment, your father is radically right, though at enmity with the fossilized superstitions, prejudices and pruderies of the ages. I enclose copy of a letter written him, also $1 for your paper beginning with No. 1069.

J. D. WILBITE, San Francisco, Cal.—Some years ago I was a subscriber to LUCIFER and enjoyed most of it very much, but became offended at what I considered the hostile attitude of Moses Harman toward the socialist propaganda, and so hastily and, as I now realize, rudely ordered the paper discontinued. But I have remained intensely devoted to the central idea of LUCIFER—i. e., intelligent freedom in the sexual relations—and have also admired the stand of Moses and Lillian Harman on many other points. My sympathies have been strongly aroused by the present imprisonment of Mr. Harman, though I have been up to the present unable to extend any financial assistance. I now desire to express my sincere regret for my former letter ordering the discontinuance of the paper, and to be again enrolled in LUCIFER'S family. Enclosed herewith find money order for $1, for which please send LUCIFER to the address given below for one year.

* * *

[This letter was withheld by the prison authorities at Joliet.]

My Dear Mr. Harman: As this letter has to pass through the hands of the man of "god," I will refrain from expressing the resentment natural to one who learns that one of his best and most respected friends is in the clutches of the Beast. Moreover, I am firmly convinced that anger which expresses itself merely in hot-mouthed denunciation and abuse is unphilosophical and inadequate. If we all follow the line of least resistance and do the things we are forced to by our heredity and environment, then why should we feel contempt or bitter hatred for those who do malicious and unjust acts? Rather should we endeavor to make our persecutors and those who support them see the evil effects of their conduct, and by this process of education (which is, of course, a part of their environment) inspire them with higher ideals than throttling free speech and murdering or imprisoning men and women.

I shall never forget your kindness to me when I first came to Chicago. I regret that I am unable to reciprocate as I would wish. Verily, what the clericals would have us believe are Christian virtues —viz.: kindness and brotherly love—are practised only by Atheists and Anarchists.

I receive LUCIFER regularly and it is well filled with interesting and instructive reading matter, so you need have no fear that the light from the Light-Bearer will become dim while you are in gaol.

I attend the Manhattan Liberal Club regularly and see Mr. Walker always at his post by the door. He looks to be in fine health. From time to time I meet friends from Chicago at the club. Barnard gave a fine lecture a couple of months or so ago, and I have met a number of other Chicago radicals. Since she returned to New York, Mrs. Johnson gave me the news from your household. I was glad to hear that your courage and spirits were still good, and I feel as long as this is so your imprisonment will not break you down.

The picture of yourself that is being published in LUCIFER is certainly a fine one. I wasn't surprised at your looking so happy after Mrs. Johnson told me what a fine grandchild you had.

I am surprised that you are not allowed to write articles for your paper, or letters. I don't know much about prisons, but I supposed the guests were allowed to write as much as they wished. I am not surprised, however, that they forbid criticism of the prison rule. I do not suppose any of us are overfond of criticism under some circumstances. Hoping that your health may continue good, and with best wishes, I remain, sincerely your friend,

JOHN E. BOULTENHOUSE.

Nothing, indeed, is much more curious than to reflect that if the pope himself had been born a savage he would now have been asking the blessing of strange gods over cannibal banquets; and if Mr. Spurgeon had been born in Islam he would now have been defending polygamy, and holding forth as a Mohammedan apostle.—Lewis Thornton. And if Anthony Comstock had been born in Southern China he would now be exhibiting the beauties of his human form in the nudities which are there customary.—S.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Price, 3c each; 25c a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood.

BY AGNES BENHAM.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 76, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

A collection of verse which will be sure to attract attention among those who are looking for new poetry. The author has been a contributor to American magazines for several years, and is well known as a poet of modernity with a remarkable gift of imaginative expression. 12mo cloth; gilt title; 160 pages. $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

An Essay on the Duty of Civil Disobedience.

BY HENRY D. THOREAU.

A reprint of this classic essay on the supremacy of the individual conscience. Antique paper; artistic covers, dark green on olivine. 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

The American Institute of Phrenology.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,

52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.
1554 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1071

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

THE BOOK EXCHANGE.

I HAVE AN IDEA.

Most of us have good ideas now and then, but how few of us ever go any further than having the idea!

Now if you think my plan a good one help me to help you.

MY IDEA:

Make a list of all the books, pamphlets, magazines and radical papers you have to sell, exchange or give away and send me that list.

Some one has that missing number of LUCIFER, or that book you have been looking for so long is growing dusty on the shelf of some one who would rather have one of your books in exchange.

I KNOW BOOKS,

their prices and publishers, and can help you get that book and perhaps sell some of your books at the same time.

THE EXCHANGE

will be made through me and I can save you money and perhaps add to your library at the same time.

MAKE THAT LIST TODAY

if possible. Do it this week without fail and mail to

SAMUEL T. HAMMERSMARK,

288 LINCOLN PLACE, NORWOOD PARK, CHICAGO, ILL.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

Woman's Source of Power.

LOVE ATTRACTION, THE FEMININE PRINCIPLE, is the builder of all living forms. LOVE IS THE CREATOR.

In the inception of human life the first step is destructive of a previous condition, but when the work is given into woman's keeping the action is reversed, becomes constructive; from then on till growth ceases the feminine is the predominating power. Here is where the principle which can continue youth should begin its work.

By LOIS WAISBROOKER.

Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

Do You Want Free Speech?

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Concentrated, but comprehensive. It is specially valuable at the present crisis, since it is the only pamphlet exposing the entire conspiracy against free speech in America. The facts it cites are startling, but absolutely verifiable. The brochure is needed by all who would realize whither we are drifting, the magnitude of the issue we are called on to face, the fundamental principles involved in the battle for free speech, and the means of combatting the enemies of liberty. Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Free America.

BY BOLTON HALL.

Dedicated "To Those Who Are Poor and Wish to Become Rich, or Who Are Rich and Wish to Become Richer."

The book shows, in an interesting and amusing way, the evils from which we suffer as individuals and as a society, the causes of them and their cure—which is liberty. The illustrations are by Ivan Beard. Two hundred and fifteen pages, 18mo. Price, postpaid: Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Origin of the Family, Private Property, and the State.

BY FREDERICK ENGELS.

Chapter titles: Prehistoric Stages; The Family; The Iroquois Gens; The Grecian Gens; Origin of the Attic State; Gens and State in Rome; The Gens Among Celts and Germans; The Rise of the State Among Germans.

217 pages; bound in cloth. Price 60c; postage 5c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasburg Geese. Broad Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, AUGUST 16, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1072

TO THE MORNING STAR.

Son of the Morning, I behold thee shine!
Reared on thy towers of splendor o'er the hill.
How could men hate thee, Lucifer divine?
Thou borest light to them; thou bearest still.
Though the sick globe in damps and darkness pine,
There lives but sorrow in thine eye, not ill;
Thy vast unquenchable effulgence gleams
To build the world anew from out its beams.

Our paths hold blindness, and the night is long,
The winds roam bitter o'er the stricken lands.
Oh! might men clasp thy light and bear thy song,
And break a road for thee with human hands.
Then might thy giant lance wreck crescent Wrong,
And rend the black oppression of our bands.
Shine on! Thy glory, ere the veil be drawn,
Seems presage of the soaring of the dawn.

Hate cannot blot thy ray, nor Greed defeat
The eternal Truth whose kingdom is thy light;
The airs that swathe the earth shall yet be sweet,
Her face reflect thy love-born luster bright,
So men with whiter hands and gentler feet
May walk through fairer mornings won from night,
By fields of love that clothe the future years
And drink the rains of old, memorial tears.

—Herman Scheffauer, in the Clarion (London, Eng.).

"WHO TOLD THEE THAT THOU WAST NAKED?"

How long will it be until enough of the American people awake to the realization that Anthony Comstock is a national nuisance, to deprive him of his legal power to commit outrages on the intelligence of the general public? His recent raid on a big art school in New York city, in which he seized several wagonloads of the school's fall catalogues and confiscated them on the ground that they were indecent, should be sufficient proof of the nastiness of his mind.

The pictures in the catalogue to which he objected were drawings from the nude by members of the life classes in the school. Similar pictures are shown in all the catalogues of the Chicago Art Institute and other art schools. In almost every instance each picture is labeled with the name of the young man or young woman who drew it. It is a well-known fact that members of life classes in art schools have no more thought of obscenity in their work than medical students have in the dissecting room. As a matter of fact, artistic pictures and sculpture of the human form have done much to refine the minds of the public and eradicate the absurd notion that there is something essentially indecent about the undraped body.

At a stereopticon exhibition given recently in the parlor of a private residence several views of nude statuary were shown. The pictures were artistic and probably excited no indecent thoughts in the minds of any person present except one young man, who proved his own nastiness of mind by remarking audibly, "Where are the fig leaves?" It is the calling attention to the nudity that betrays the nasty mind. "Who told thee that thou wast naked?" The writer of that question, attributed in the Bible to the Lord God, must have known from observation that children are never ashamed of any part of their persons until they are taught to be.

"Who told thee that thou wast naked?" That question is perhaps the oldest recorded rebuke of Comstockism. The implication that the human form is obscene is the beginning of the cultivation of nastiness of mind.

In this connection the following special dispatch, published in the Chicago "Tribune" of August 8, is well worth reading:

NEW HAVEN, Conn., August 7.—In a vigorous denunciation of Anthony Comstock's recent raid on art at New York, Charles Henry Smith, professor of American history at Yale university, said today the moral reform of the future could come by giving publicity to the thing Comstock was trying to suppress. He also held statues of human figures should be placed in public schools and familiarity with the appearance of the healthy human body should be encouraged instead of forbidden, as is the case. Prof. Smith continued:

"Official censorship is apt to change the normal desire for proper information into unhealthy curiosity, and in that and other ways do more harm than good. The most successful way to fight evil is to put good in its place. For instance, Luna Park and Dreamland have cleaned up Coney Island. They have succeeded where laws and police punishment had failed. The best way, when the case admits it, is to change one's attitude toward the practice, make it legitimate, and thus remove it from the category of offenses.

"This has been done on a large scale in the changed modern attitude toward heresy or worship of God other than in the prescribed way. The greater part of the civilized Christian world for a long time honestly believed this to be a crime and punished it as such.

"A capital illustration of good government comes to hand in the history of Yale college. Visitors at morning chapel formerly were seated in the rear gallery. When the great body of students stood up at singing they would turn around and look at the girls in the gallery. This made some disturbance, was embarrassing to guests, and had to be stopped. How was this done? Simply by changing the location of the visitors, putting them downstairs, inside the seats at the front, so students could look at them without making their curiosity obtrusive.

"It is evident in this case that the college officers had the good sense to recognize the natural impulse and furnish a legitimate channel for its exercise.

"The change in the attitude of the public toward sculptured representations of the human body at once would remove the occasion for the questionable part of Comstock's activity, while leaving the useful part intact. This especially is desirable in the interest of good government and morality.

"Familiarity with the appearance of the healthy human body should be encouraged instead of practically forbidden, as now. No material structure is more worthy of general study and admiration. If well selected pictures and statues of the best human figures could be put in our schoolhouses children would be led by their teachers to look upon and think of them in the right way, and contaminating influences would have much less chance of doing harm than now is the case.

"I firmly believe the successful moral reform of the future will come along that line. For the present we have a general system of indiscriminate repression and suppression which occasionally is brought to public notice by some sensational performance of Comstock's. This system professedly is protection of the children and purity of the home, but its natural and common result is to poison the foundations of life.

"Competent physicians tell us of the widespread physical and moral suffering resulting from the present policy of preventing sex knowledge from being acquired in a legitimate way."

* * *

Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, wore a look of mingled perplexity and scorn as he discussed Andrew Comstock's raid on the Art Students' League yesterday.

"It is absurd," he said. "Really, I can't understand it. What is the idea? What good can he do?

"I have never heard of such a thing in all my experience. There are art schools all over Europe in almost every city of any importance, and they employ models and have life classes. In the national competition in England the winning studies from the nude are published every year along with the others. Yet they never think in Europe of molesting the art schools. . . .

"I suppose the offending publication of the art students was intended for circulation among the art students and persons interested in their work. But even if it did get into the hands of one child, does the sight of the human body possess some remarkable influence to injure a child? How can it? I'm sure I don't understand."

Several letters have been received since Sir Purdon became director complaining of some of the nude figures in oils exhibited in the museum, but the letters themselves for the most part showed that they had been written by persons who were mentally unbalanced, or at least fanatic, on that subject.—New York World.

* * *

Having experienced another of the shocks that afford solace to his soul, Anthony Comstock has raided the Art Students' League in New York. The raid can be viewed as the expression of the pruriency that wells and bubbles in the Comstockian personality. Comstock sees evil everywhere, unconscious that all he sees is, to his vision, colored by the veil of his own nastiness.

As agent for the Society for the Suppression of Vice, there is no doubt that Comstock, did he possess a clean mind and normal judgment, might find something useful to do. Whatever he may have been in the beginning of a career the later stages of which excite disgust, he is now a nuisance and a menace to decency. He has himself become vicious. His presence is a threat against good morals. In all he says there is the manifestation of baseness. So delighted is he to revel in pollution that he perceives his environment to be polluted, and does not realize that this seeming condition is symptomatic of himself. His activities are to be regretted, for if they have effect beyond their capacity to annoy, it is to set up in the mind a train of undesirable thought.

The raid upon the Art Students' League embodied a principle which, widely applied, would strip the galleries of their treasures, create gaps in the library shelves where now repose the works of masters, and snatch the text-book from the hand of the student. It would bring to an end the study and practice of art. It was nothing more than lewdness exercising the right to be censor, and in doing this, to expose its bogus virtue, its grotesque zeal and its crass ignorance.

If the Society for the Suppression of Vice wants to suppress something the absence of which would be elevating to morals and cheering to intelligence, let it suppress its man Comstock.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

* * *

In every community there are human elements which appear to be designed for the express purpose of making virtue odious. Anthony Comstock is such a force in New York. He follows with unfailing vigor the pursuit of imparting to the best the complexion of the worst.

Comstock has disturbed again and again the patience and dignity of courts. A cause which might be well served by an agent with discretion he has often brought into contempt. For vigilance he substitutes meddling; in place of guardianship he gives the activities of a busybody. The good things he does are forgotten in the light of his amazing blunders.

Comstock's latest venture, his outrageous descent upon the preserves of the Art Students' League, might well be accepted as the straw to break finally the endurance of the society whose delegated public powers he has so often abused.—New York World (editorial).

THE DEGENERATION OF THE AMERICAN IDEAL.

The attack on Moses Harman and LUCIFER has been threefold:

1. By criticism, fair and unfair; the unfair at times going to the farthest extreme of abuse and misrepresentation. This could be met, and was met, by persistent and patient argument and presentation of facts, and was not more than every reformer expects to encounter, and which he welcomes in so far as it is based on sincere doubt and fear of the effects of the innovations suggested. This form of attack, even when using the weapon of falsehood, could do no more than temporarily retard a movement having its sources in scientific induction and equity.

2. By prosecutions in the courts, under the Comstock postal statutes. At first, this was said to be aimed at obscenity in language, as in the famous "Markland letter" case; but, as had been foreseen from the beginning by those familiar with the trend of suppressive legislation and adjudication in all ages and countries, it was not long before evolution in persecution had worked out as usual, and ideas rather than unconventional or alleged unconventional phraseology were the direct objects of attack, as in the counts of the indictment through which Mr. Harman is now serving a sentence in the federal penitentiary. However, bad as the procedure had now become, it had not wholly departed from the high standard established by the labor and sufferings of the past. The traditions and precedents of English-speaking communities had not been entirely forgotten; the safeguards gathered about the accused by the struggles of a thousand years had not all been set aside. Technically, Moses Harman was held to be innocent until his prosecutors should prove him to be guilty. He had still the benefit of counsel, of compulsory attendance of witnesses; still the defense inhering in the right of cross-examination, in the right to be informed of the exact charge against him, in trial by jury, and in appeal.

3. Yet other and alien influences were at work against him. Conterminous with the transmutation of the federal statute into a statute for the suppression of unorthodox ideas, there had grown up in the postoffice department a system of clerk-law, executive-order condemnation and confiscation, against which the persons aggrieved had no defense even in form. Every guarantee of fair play for a man charged with a crime was lightly brushed aside; the administrative process long familiar in Russia and other countries was successfully imitated in a land accustomed to a jurisprudence fundamentally different, and Mr. Harman and others were delivered bound and gagged into the hands of their enemies. Issue after issue of LUCIFER was denied second-class rights in the mails, and there was no remedy; the power of the postoffice appointees was absolute; no appeal could be taken. The courts had ceased to be jealous for their own prerogatives and their dignity; they had divested themselves of all right of review of the acts of the postoffice officials. No counsel could be of use to a man whose property was seized and destroyed in the postoffice of the people; he was denied all knowledge of the particulars of his alleged offense; he was not confronted with his accusers, and so he could not cross-examine them as to fact and motive; he could not demand the presence and questioning of witnesses; he could not have a jury trial, nor could he present his cause to a mind trained in the administration of the law from the seat of the judge; no appeal could be made save to the country, and not to the country except most inadequately, because to make it fully he must lay before these judges the incriminating articles, and this he could not do, first, because he did not know in detail what was banned, and, second, if he had known, to reprint it was to subject himself to the danger of fresh prosecutions in the courts and further exploitation by the postal department. His property was confiscated and his reputation wantonly assailed, and he could not defend himself in any way provided by the constitution of his country.

The United States senate, after protracted and exhaustive debate, has just refused to take away the right of judicial review in cases where the interests of common carriers may be affected by the orders of executive officials. Many of the senators have shown that they have a very clear comprehension of the fundamental issues involved, that they keenly realize the vital necessity of maintaining inviolate the constitutional muniments of citizen rights. Is it possible that not one of these representatives of the states is aware that the postoffice department has already done without statutory authority precisely what he has said by his reasoning and vote the government should not, shall not, do even under the protection of a statute? The common carrier, if the senate has its way—and it should—is not to be deprived of the right of judicial review of the edict of federal appointees. The publisher has lost that right de facto, and no member of either house of congress, so far as I am aware, has taken cognizance of this gross defiance of the constitution, this wanton outrage of the citizen, committed by the federal appointees in the postoffice department.

And the outlook? Is the sky brightening in the least? I am not hopeful for the immediate future. Neither the people nor the leaders in agitation for some kind of change have any clear conception of the needs of the nation. That is to say, but few of them know anything about the basic principles upon which alone enduring peace, order and prosperity can rest. Most of them are engaged in lopping the outgrowing twigs of the tree of evil instead of digging deep to tear out its roots. They have forgotten the priceless lessons of the past. They are eager to increase the very regulations and suppression which have caused so much of the trouble, instead of striving to abrogate those regulations, to supplant that suppression by wise and tactful guidance. Official socialism is committed logically to an extension of the protective and prohibitive ideas and practice of the politicians of the long-dominant school of social doctrinaires. To paraphrase the words of Jane Porter, the defection from the principles of individual self-government has extended even to many who have followed the splendid standard of liberty. As an instance of this surrender, take a recent utterance of Mr. Hugh O. Pentecost, at the close of a long plea for collectivism. A hypothetical person, assumed not to be willing to "give himself up a small portion of the time for the benefit of the community" in the particular way decreed by the majority of his neighbors, was pointed to the door in the old, old fashion. He was told he might "find some hole in the ground, some secluded place, some uninhabited island, and go there." Ah! that "uninhabited island"; what a part it has played in religious, moral and sociological polemics! At one time or another, all classes of reformers have been told to go there if institutions here were not liked. The Christian and theocrat has sent the freethinker and secularist there; the marriageist has put the free-lover on a junk bound for that vague spot; the ordinary governmentalist has shipped both the socialist and the anarchist there; and now comes the socialist—who only last week was an anarchist himself, and only last evening was leagues off on the anarchist left flank on an "absolute freedom" scout—and suggests the like deportation of the anarchists and other dissenters! And if these should land there and settle down, how long would it be before some "collectivity," socialist or other, would disembark a detachment of marines, fling out a banner, and "benevolently assimilate" the ex-convicts?

No; we are not yet out of the desert, nor likely to be in this or the next generation. The tattered and discredited flags of freedom drag and shrivel in the hot volcanic mud as we are borne on the eruption of stupidity and passion into an epoch of lynching—of lynching by petty servants, through the administrative process; of lynching by the mob with rope and knife and torch. The restraints long exerting influence, restraints good and bad alike, have broken down or are in process of disintegration, while the adaptation to new conditions of the salutary among the old restraints and the emerging of new principles of direction and defense await the reaction against the mad dervish dance of the priests of misdirected legislation on the one hand and of the priests of the vengeance-seeking crowd on the other.

There will be martyrs like Moses Harman until the people are educated back to the simple principles of equal rights and fair play which the creators of the constitution sought to make operative and which have been trampled and nullified by the beneficiaries of privilege and the brief-holders for partialism, prudery, absolutism and economic interference and close-communionism.—Edwin C. Walker, in Soundview.

* * *

The treatment received by Moses Harman, the imprisoned editor of LUCIFER, while in the prison at Joliet, reveals a determination on the part of the keepers of that institution to put an end to his life. He was for some time kept in a cell with a man who was dying with tuberculosis, and later he had as a cell mate a violent murderer who subjected him to constant abuse. For long hours he was kept at work on the rock pile, and was told by a keeper: "We have a place up on the hill where we plant such fellows as you, and the sooner you go there the better." Thus exposed to physical and mental strain by day and night, the prisoner, who is approaching seventy-six years of age, failed rapidly, contracting bronchitis, catarrh of the stomach, and other physical ailments, for which he is now under treatment in the hospital at Leavenworth. Mr. Harman, in his last letter to LUCIFER, expresses a hope, but no confidence, that he may live out his term of sentence, which expires in December; the one medicine he needs is liberty. The case is too atrocious to be fitly characterized—this spectacle of an old man whose life's labor has been that of making the world better, as he thought, locked in a fetid cell or compelled to do work beyond his strength, slowly dying from the effects of his imprisonment, and the hand that might save his life by the stroke of a pen turned to sports that amuse the idle rich. Pursued by filthy-minded vice-hunters, condemned by a court subservient to church influence, insulted by his keepers, and refused him by an exalted official, Moses Harman is a victim of the conditions that for decades he has striven to abolish or correct—a martyr to the hypocrisy, the cant, the brutality, and the scoundrelism of his day and generation. Words do not hold the scorn and contempt, of men who are men, that if expressed would wither these braggart henchmen and gyrating swash-bucklers of church and government who have brought this fate on an old hero so much their superior that he excuses and pities them.—The Truth Seeker (New York), Aug. 4.

LUCIFER IN SOUTH AFRICA.

[The following is a copy of printed letter and selected paragraphs which is sent with LUCIFER to friends by one of our subscribers in South Africa. He has been a staunch supporter of this paper for years, and has helped materially in extending its circulation. He sent us several hundred copies of this letter, which will be sent to friends desiring them on application.]

Sir: The copy of journal herewith I request you to read, and give careful consideration to. It seems to me that if you take the slightest notice of it, your curiosity (not to say interest) will be so aroused that you will wish to give it a more earnest perusal. I believe the objects and principles of the publication will appeal to you, as it must and should to every sensible, thoughtful, freedom-loving individual; but, lest its objects be misconstrued by a hasty, thoughtless inspection, I beg to offer a few words of introduction and explanation:

The publication is nearing its quarter-century of life and usefulness; but, notwithstanding this fact, it experiences a most severe struggle for existence—owing to the bigotry, hypocrisy, ignorance, intolerance, superstition and stupidity of the human race—and it needs men and women of thought, of sense, of judgment, of education, of influence, of power, to sustain and defend it. For this reason I am appealing to this class of individuals, and this must be my apology (if apology be needed) for bringing it to your notice.

I have myself been a subscriber to the paper for fifteen years, and can conscientiously and earnestly recommend it as being distinctly moral, honorable, upright, just and fair, and withal fearless in its teachings; and this last attribute has been the cause of all its trouble, as you will readily grasp, in this sycophantic and hypocritical age. Furthermore, its editor is known to me personally, and I can thus vouch for his conduct and deportment in private life. He has never been heard to utter an indecent word by his closest associates, either in joke, innuendo, story, conversation, or in any other manner, notwithstanding the ridiculously untrue accusation of the American postal authorities concerning the obscenity of the publication.

If this sample paper proves to be in accord with your principles and ideas, and if you desire in your heart to assist the people of America, and all English-speaking countries, to retain their constitutional right of free speech and free press, I hope you will assist the cause to the extent of subscribing to the paper, either directly or through me, as you prefer.

If, on the other hand, the doctrines of liberty advocated at so much personal sacrifice by the editor do not accord with your own opinions, of course neither he nor I would wish to force upon your time and attention anything that might be objectionable. Should I not hear from you in return, I shall take it for granted you do not enthuse in the matter sufficiently to secure your aid and valued cooperation.

Trusting you will pardon my having brought this matter to your notice, whether my suggestion prove agreeable or not, I remain, sir, yours for human progress. E. MANCIPER.

3 Amalinda Road, East London, Cape Colony.

* * *

Thou must now at last perceive that a limit of time is fixed for thee; which if thou dost not use for clearing away the clouds from the mind, it will go, and thou wilt go, and it will never return.—Marcus Aurelius.

* * *

Men in earnest have no time to waste in patching fig leaves for the naked truth.—Lovell.

* * *

Unless individuals are permitted to reflect and communicate their sentiments upon every topic, it is impossible that they should progress in knowledge.—Wortman.

* * *

Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it.—Thomas Jefferson.

* * *

He that will not reason is a bigot; he that cannot reason is a fool; he that dares not reason is a slave.—Sir William Drummond.

* * *

Surely the individual who devotes his time to fearless and unrestricted inquiry into the grand questions arising out of our moral nature ought rather to receive the patronage than encounter the vengeance of an enlightened legislation.—Percy B. Shelley.

* * *

It is so easy to become more thick-skinned in conscience, more tolerant of evil, more hopeless of good, more careful of one's own comfort and one's own property, more self-satisfied in leaving high aims and great deeds to enthusiasts, and then to believe that one is growing older and wiser.—Mrs. Ewing.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.
THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.
MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.
PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 3727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Krmz.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

PILOT-HOUSE OBSERVATIONS.

During the great Civil War, when it was urged that to free the slaves by government authority would violate the constitution of the United States, James Russell Lowell wrote these stirring lines:

"Tho' we break our fathers' promise, we have nobler duties first;
The traitor to humanity is the traitor most accursed;
Man is more than constitutions; better rot beneath the sod
Than be true to church and state while we're doubly false to God.
We owe allegiance to the state, but deeper, truer, more,
To the sympathies that God hath set within our spirit's core;
Our country claims our fealty; we grant it so, but then—
Before man made us citizens, great Nature made us men.
He's true to God who's true to man; whatever wrong is done
To the humblest and the weakest, 'neath the all-beholding sun,
That wrong is also done to us; and they are slaves most base
Whose love of right is for themselves, and not for all their race."

The fact that we fear to "break our fathers' promise" shows that we have not evolved out of the plane of "ancestor worship." We seem afraid to seriously ask ourselves the question, Why should one generation have power to bind a succeeding generation, any more than the people of one country should have power to bind the people of another country? I once heard an orthodox minister say from his pulpit, "We owe God nothing; we can owe him nothing; he can and does owe us everything"—or words to that effect. And this, as I take it, is the proper attitude of one generation of people toward the generations that preceded it. And such also, it seems to me, should be our attitude toward "the state," "the church," or any other human institution. Lowell says, "We owe allegiance to the state," and "fealty to our country." Most emphatically I say No! The allegiance, the fealty, is just the other way. The state should be our servant, not our lord. Fealty to country is a form of ancestor-worship, fetich-worship, and as such it enslaves, degrades the worshiper and prevents rational development and progress.

If the last five lines of the poem just quoted should be made the motto, the rule of action, of all peoples, what would then become of nationalism, of statesmanship, statecraft, diplomacy, patriotism, etc., to say nothing of the older institution called the family—the patriarchate and the matriarchate? Major Esterhazy would shoot his own brother if commanded to do so by his superior officer. He would do this not willingly but because duty compelled him, but he would not afterwards boast of his deed, as he would when, in war, he shoots a German, an Englishman, or an Abyssinian. He never thinks of these as being his brothers. And how many of us who now rejoice over our recent national victories think of the fact that our hands are red with brothers' blood? Lowell wrote many fine things in advocacy of human solidarity, but it is doubtful if he realised that the greatest obstacle in the way of practicalizing human brotherhood is the family institution itself, as defined, made rigid and non-progressive by canon-law and statute-law marriage.

* * *

Major Count Esterhazy is said to have admitted to two or three persons that he wrote the famous bordereau. It may be added that the general opinion seems to be that Esterhazy is about the kind of man he is said to have acknowledged himself to be.—Chicago Evening News.

And this is what Major Count Esterhazy is reported to have said of himself (see New York World, Sept. 19):

"Everything I did was in blind, unquestioning obedience to my superior officer. I am a professional soldier. I know no law but the law of absolute obedience to my superiors. If I were ordered to take a gun and shoot my own brother I would do so without the slightest hesitation."

Not long since this same Evening News said editorially: "The first duty a soldier has to learn is obedience." Why, then, should Count Esterhazy be censured for having learned his lesson well? The major is eminently in the right. The best soldier is he who makes the most complete surrender of his individuality, his own personality, and becomes most nearly an animated automaton, machine, for the use of his superior in command. Such is "militarism."

The Public Ownership Review has a word to say on this subject:

"Militarism tends directly to stamp out the spirit of freedom. In a military country like Germany most private citizens are overawed and contemptible. The multitude of officers strut through the streets like birds of paradise, with all the superior airs of bulldogs and American policemen. What can the Russian people do for liberty against the army? See how in France recently the honor of the army has almost been the rallying cry of a new revolution which would overthrow the republic, and how that honor was deemed so paramount that all civilized forms of trial were waived as to Dreyfus and Zola. Great Britain alone of the great nations does not seem army-ridden, because, being an island, her army is small, and little remains at home to bully by its proximity."

* * *

In his article on "Free Marriage," in this week's issue, Mr. H. M. Parkhurst says: "Marriage is a contract; and like every other contract, it is an agreement made by the parties thereto in every respect that is not covered by statute law." The Encyclopedia Britannica says that "in marriage every right and duty is fixed by law," and that "its complete isolation from all other contracts is constantly recognized by the courts." If every right and duty is fixed by law, how is it possible for the parties to a marriage contract to put into it an article of agreement permitting either contractor to associate sexually with any one other than the conjugal mate? It is true that such a private agreement could be made and kept, but would a law court recognize the validity of such a provision? Would not the fact of such agreement be held by the court as evidence of intentional fraud, just as the courts now hold that an attempt to procure divorce by agreement is fraudulent "collusion," and therefore invalid? Is not exclusive sex-association, exclusive sex-ownership, the most vitally important of all marital rights and duties?

If Henry Ward Beecher had "knocked hell out" of Plymouth church, then certainly he would have knocked out its orthodoxy, and if H. M. Parkhurst can knock exclusive sex-ownership out of marriage, then orthodox marriage will be a thing of the past. A few court decisions sustaining the right of a man and woman to make a marriage contract in which exclusive devotion to each other sexually was neither expressed nor implied would make interesting reading.

* * *

Let him try who will, the task of conducting a journalistic craft through the narrow channel that separates Scylla from Charybdis is by no means an easy one. Changing the metaphor—the pathway of an editor and publisher is beset on either hand by thorns and briers. To illustrate my meaning an instance or two are herewith offered. In a recent LUCIFER an old contributor used this language:

"My critics, of course, know this, and their criticisms are, therefore, not honest," etc. An editor, like the chairman of a public meeting, is expected to keep order by ruling out from discussions needlessly offensive language. To accuse a man of dishonest criticism is much like accusing him of dishonesty in business transactions, which accusation, as we all know, is the most serious that one person can make against another. This method of argument seems to me wholly needless—needlessly offensive. Why not show the absurdity and the inconsistency of the alleged critic, then let the readers or hearers judge as to the honesty or dishonesty of the respective disputants? To my thinking, it is always in order to challenge the truthfulness of any statement, and to show wherein the untruthfulness lies. This is a very different thing from challenging the honesty of an opponent. While it is not in all cases correct, probably, to say that he who accuses another of dishonesty is himself dishonest—consciously or unconsciously so—it is doubtless true as a general statement. It is impossible for any of us to get away from ourselves when judging of the motives of others. The man who is conscious of none but honest motives will not hastily attribute dishonesty to others. Hence the wisdom of the old admonition, "Judge not—for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged."

Here, then, arises one of the difficulties above alluded to. If such language as that just quoted is allowed to go into LUCIFER's columns the editor is censured. If, on the other hand, the objectionable language should be eliminated, or the article returned to the writer, the editor will be accused of denying the right or principle known as freedom of speech—denying to others the right that he claims for himself—the right to say one's say in one's own way.—Moses Harman, in Lucifer, Oct. 1, 1898.

ANOTHER DENIAL OF THE RIGHT OF FREE SPEECH.

Carl Mattson, originator of a new religious sect, is having trouble with the Chicago police. Mattson had been holding meetings in a large tent, in which he preached in the Swedish language. His doctrines were offensive to some of the other Swedish preachers in Chicago and they caused the police to suppress his meeting on the ground that he was teaching "polygamy and free-love."

Mattson secured a temporary injunction restraining the police from interfering with his meetings, but after hearing the testimony of the other Swedish preachers a judge dissolved the injunction. After consulting with his lawyer Mattson attempted to resume his meetings on Sunday, August 5, when he and four of his disciples were arrested. Mattson was charged with preaching polygamy and his disciples with resisting the police officers.

"I do not preach polygamy," said Mattson after his arrest. "The Bible does not command polygamy, although it permitted it. All I preach is based on the teachings of the Bible. I do preach against the belief in a literal hell of fire and against the belief in a personal devil. My meetings drew people away from the Swedish churches, and that is why the other preachers had me arrested. I intend to fight in the courts for my rights. The police had no right to arrest me."

Any person, even the most stupid policeman, ought to know that a man who really believes in any doctrine and preaches it would not deny it if arrested for it, but on the contrary would justify himself by defending that doctrine. So it is evident that Mattson told the truth when he said, "I do not preach polygamy." But even if he did preach it, why should he be arrested for it? It is true the laws of the United States forbid the practice of polygamy, but the constitution declares that free speech shall not be denied to anyone, and it surely is not a crime to advocate a change in any law.

Changes in the laws of taxation and many other laws are advocated continually, and frequently are made the basis of the candidacy of aspirants to various political offices. It is not a violation of a law to criticise or condemn it. From all appearances Mattson is a modern victim of the obsolete laws against heresy and was arrested merely because his teachings are not in accord with the religious views held by orthodox Swedish preachers.

Little do men perceive what solitude is, and how far it extendeth; for a crowd is not company, and faces are but a gallery of pictures, and talk but a tinkling cymbal, where there is no love.—Bacon.

History is full of religious wars; but we must take care to observe it was not the multiplicity of religions that produced these wars; it was the intolerating spirit which animated that which thought she had the power of governing.—Montesquieu.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 10 months and 6 days old. He has served 157 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan. Purely private subjects should be avoided, as all letters are read by prison officials and withheld if not approved. Do not ask questions requiring answer. All such questions, matter pertaining to LUCIFER, changes of addresses, etc., should be sent to the office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

U. S. P., LEAVENWORTH, KAN., August 5, 1906.

My Dear Daughter: Thanks for letters. The last was dated July 31. Received the copy of Chicago "Journal" and clippings from "Record-Herald" sent by Wheeler. Please thank him for me. Glad to know you continue well and that business is going on all right. I sent you about seventy-five letters and cards on August 1st by mail. Hope you got them all right. If you or your good helpers can write a short letter to each of the writers you would greatly oblige me, as well as them. At all events please look them over and if you find paragraphs that seem important, perhaps you can use them at some future time. Hope you have sufficient help to enable you to do this. Most of the bundle of letters had been mentioned in my previous letters. A few had reached me since my last report, as follows: Ella Slater, 1; E. L. Small, 2; Carl Nold, 1; Philip G. Peabody, 2; Dr. M. R. Leverson, 1; Annie E. and H. M. Parkhurst, 2; John F. Paulson, 1; Lucinda B. Chandler,

1; A. Wangeman (with clipping), 1; Ernest H. Crosby, 1; John E. Boultenhouse, 1; Dr. Bertha Florence Johnson, 1; Emma Greene, 1; C. N. Greene, 1; James Myers, 1; Ida B. Robinson, 1; W. W. Miller, 1; Flora W. Fox, 1; Elizabeth H. Russell, 1; Annie E. Cummings, 1; Sadie A. and W. P. Magoon, 1; Lois Waisbrooker, 1; Cornelia Boecklin, 1; W. C. James, 1; W. P. Ward, 1; Ross F. Larson, 1; M. Florence Johnson, 1. Since sending you the bunch of letters I have received: Joshua Harmon, 1; E. L. Small, 1; Joseph and Lydia Holler, 1; Sarah Stone Rockhill, 1; Bertha Moore, 1; O. C. Romer, 1; Thirza Rathbun (with original poem), 1; Bettie M. Roberts, 1; Parker H. Sercombe, 1; A. Johnson ("The Chaplain"), 1; Clarence L. Swartz, 1. I may have mislaid or overlooked letters that should be listed in this acknowledgment, but I hope not many.

Am now inclined to believe that the letter of Paul Hull, superintendent of second-class mails, Chicago, was never acknowledged, having sent said letter home by the hand of a friend. If no acknowledgment of this letter was made, please be sure to write Mr. Hull, thanking him most sincerely for the sympathy expressed and for the very excellent typewritten copy of the poem "Sweet Afton," which Mr. Hull said is his favorite.

Since my last letter to you I have received two numbers of the "Public," the August "Tomorrow," the July "Fellowship" (Los Angeles), the June "Arena," but no "Scientific American," no "Physical Culture," no "Soundview," no "Stuffed Club," no "Ghourki," no "Phrenological Journal," and no copies of other magazines such as "Everybody's Magazine," "Tom Watson's Magazine" and others that were not denied to me while in the Joliet S. P., nor the weekly "Progressive Thinker," that came to me regularly each week while there. Will you kindly ask Warden McLaury if these papers and magazines are on the "prohibited" list?

A few days ago I received from Louis Roser, Maysville, Ky., four very superior white linen handkerchiefs, with my name and his neatly imprinted on the corner of each. Please write and thank him for the beautiful and valuable present.

The name Roser reminds me that Editor Sercombe, of "Tomorrow" magazine, requests me to send him the names of a few of what he calls the "Old Guard," now sixty-five years or more young. I will mention a few, as they occur to me, of our venerable helpers. You can add their present address and add more names if you wish and send them to Sercombe—Elizabeth H. Russell and Dr. G. W. Brown, each about 89; Abner J. Pope and E. M. Dewey, about 85, I think; Prof. J. C. Loveland, 87; A. H. Frank, about the same; T. C. Deuel and wife, Harriet Garner and A. J. Davis, all above 80, I think; Dr. E. B. Foote, Lucinda B. Chandler, Mr. Buxton and Dr. Juliet H. Severance, about 75; Dr. M. R. Leverson, Dr. Pfeiffer and Moses Hull, about 73; Dr. L. Mann Hammond, Louis Roser and S. R. Shepherd, about 70, if I mistake not. These are not all that deserve a place in this list, by any means; please add such as occur to you, and send to Sercombe.

Am still in hospital; no material change in my symptoms; no cough now; am somewhat weaker than usual today on account of a somewhat prolonged fast to rid myself of bilious symptoms. Am getting more fruit than when first entering the hospital. Had one visitor since last writing—nephew Colfax Harman, of Oskaloosa, Kan.

It may interest you to know that Warden McLaury submitted the question of allowing me to read LUCIFER to the department of justice at Washington, and I received answer in the negative. The answer closes in these words:

"To permit this prisoner to receive this paper would be contrary to the spirit of the rules and regulations of the United States penitentiary and subversive of its disciplinary system. You are directed to withhold this paper and not to deliver it to the prisoner. Respectfully, H. M. HOYT, Acting Attorney General."

This would seem to settle the question as to whether it is worth while to send copies of LUCIFER to me.

Showers are cooling the air here today. How is the temperature with you? With hope and love always, M. H.

COMSTOCKISM IN AUSTRALIA.

SOUTH WAUDIN, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, July 9, 1906.

Moses Harman—Dear Sir and Comrade: Just a hurried line to catch the outgoing mail. I have just learned that you are permitted to receive letters from sympathizers. I have a fellow-feeling toward you now, as I am appealing to the supreme court against a sentence of three months' imprisonment for distributing my wife's (Dr. Rosamond Benham) books on sex subjects. Public opinion is strongly upholding our right of free speech and we are confident of getting the lower court decision reversed. If so, we expect that an expression of Australian people's indignation with the invasion of your natural rights will be sent to the president of the free Columbian republic. Never fear that the Light-Bearer will be suppressed. If the postal prudes seize your mails and the police confiscate your press, yet will be found ways and means of spreading the light of sex-reform. Readers of LUCIFER here are determined that in all quarters of the earth shall be preached the gospel of eugenics.

Here in Victoria we have commenced a campaign of lecture propaganda. I have lectured upon "Sense About Sex" in one of Melbourne's theaters on Sunday evening, July 1. Yesterday the police prohibited the lecture upon "Marriage and Free-Love" as a contravention of Sunday-observance laws. We are petitioning for use of town hall, which if refused we shall organize indoor and outdoor meetings for open public discussion of the subjects condemned.

We are in the first of the fight for freedom in sex relations here. The battle has just begun for freedom of speech. We shall win in the long run. You will hear of our progress by next mail. With best wishes and great admiration, I am yours fraternally,

T. GILBERT TAYLOR.

* * *

Australia is about as far away from the United States as it is possible for anybody to be. Yet the spirit of Comstock is there. A little magazine, "Free Speech," Vol. I, No. 2, June 16, 1906, containing an account of a sentence to three months' hard labor in jail imposed on T. Gilbert Taylor, organizing secretary of the Free Speech and Social Liberty League in Australia, because he and two friends distributed two pamphlets—"Free Speech" and "Sense About Sex"—has reached this office.

Taylor, who is a native of Scotland and only 26 years old, judging from the account given, is a zealous and able reformer. He was a baby when his parents emigrated with him to Australia, and has lived there ever since. At an early age he took an interest in the conditions of wage workers, and when only 20 years old he organized the clerks and hotel employes of Perth. Less than a year later he became manager of the Free Labor Bureau in Perth and organized the coastal circulation of a labor paper. Five years ago he organized the Social Democratic Federation of Western Australia and was unanimously elected its first secretary. Two years later he married a talented woman physician and went to live in Adelaide. They have two children.

Five months ago he went to New South Wales on a special propaganda tour in which he spoke twice daily. He is regarded as one of the ablest public speakers in Australia. Last May he went to Melbourne, at the request of the unemployed in that city, and spoke twice each Sunday. He was arrested there on June 3 for distributing the pamphlets mentioned above. He took an appeal to the July term of the general sessions and was released on bail. No word of the outcome of the appeal has been received here.

Under the heading "The Crime of Gilbert Taylor" the following article appears in "Free Speech" of June 16:

"When a reformer sets out to break down some of society's ideals he is immediately put down as a crank and a criminal. You may touch society on all its loathsome sores, and nothing is said; but just say one dare to touch on the subject of sex relations, then you ignite the fuse of wrath, which culminates in a mighty crash of injured pride.

"The white man is terribly sensitive when spoken to about sex relations, and he defies any one to interfere in his family affairs. He maintains that woman is sent to him to be his slave, to be violated at his will, and to carry to the grave the cursed marks of his brutality.

"According to man's belief, woman is a mere empty-headed person, without a soul or a brain.

"There came to Melbourne one Gilbert Taylor, a powerful and brilliant orator and—a man. He dared to lecture on sex relations. It was like throwing a bomb of new truths into pious Melbourne, and, bursting, scattered far and wide fragmentary pieces of a new gospel, causing the big, red eyes of the police force to focus the danger signal on him!

"Melbourne has its 'Truth,' its 'Hawklet,' to report in detail all the filth and slush of divorce proceedings. Melbourne has its bookshops where young people may purchase vile books galore. Yet nothing is done to prosecute those people. Why?

"And the crime of Gilbert Taylor? What is it? Simply this—that he dared to sell a book, written by a lady doctor and entitled 'Sense About Sex'!

"The creating of ideal children should be first and foremost in the minds of all nations. It should be above the silliness of politics. Why should people be allowed to produce unhealthy, puny and hideous children? Does not Australia demand that her sons and daughters shall produce rosy-faced, healthy children? Again, a woman has a perfect right to her own body. Why should she forever be at the mercy of a man (good Lord!) who violates her just when he likes, and she—poor, patient creature—is afraid, afraid, afraid to strike out for her liberty?

"If man were taught the holiness and sacredness of marital ties, and young men and women shown the terrible effects of illicit love, then there would be no prostitutes, no broken-down women, and no evil-looking men to mar the beauty of this great sunny Australia.

"And it is for advocating a splendid ideal of manhood that Gilbert Taylor is now being persecuted by the police.

"The advice given in 'Sense About Sex' is much better than the advice given in some parts of the Bible. Yet we are told that the Bible was inspired by God. Therefore, if the authorities convict Gilbert Taylor they must follow up their trail and prosecute every one selling or reading the Bible; then finally prosecute God for being the author of an immoral book."

Most socialists are emphatic in their declarations that under socialism woman's condition would be much better than it is now; some socialists declare that under socialism women would be economically as free as men. Almost all anarchists hold that under anarchism both women and men would have the fullest opportunity for social development. Yet P. J. Proudhon, the originator of the word anarchy in the sense used by anarchists, declared that woman is not a social factor, but is practically a domestic animal which must be supported and cared for by man. This view of Proudhon's, however, it is safe to say, is held by few avowed anarchists. In this connection the following cable dispatch from Vienna, dated July 23, is of interest:

"A meeting of women at Kloshseep, in Northern Bohemia, to protest against woman suffrage, was broken up today by socialists. The women fought the men, who tried to stop their meeting, and the socialists resorted to the use of revolvers. Twenty persons, including several women, were wounded."

Commenting on this dispatch, the Woman's Journal, of Boston, Mass., says: "Our readers will do well to postpone giving credit to this unlikely tale until further particulars are received."

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

MAY CLIFFORD HUED, Wellesley, Mass.—Glad your father has found better conditions, but it is awful what he has endured. Some one ought to write up "prisons" as Upton Sinclair has "Packingtown," for such conditions and treatment ought not to be allowed for any prisoner.

W. H. B., Peoria, Ill.—I inclose subscription to LUCIFER. Yes, I believe the work of your father is worth the sacrifice, though I regret the outcome of his good intent. Hope his health will be good and that he will again be able to show the postal authorities that he is still Moses Harman.

WALTER BEKEN, Omaha, Neb.—I do hope that when Moses Harman is able to be out he will take up his autobiography and bring it to completion as soon as possible, but call it by another name, say, "A History of the Inquisition in the Twentieth Century." Yours, with the best of good wishes for LUCIFER and its circle.

PETER GRAHAM, Sydney, Australia.—Many thanks for your kind letter and copies of LUCIFER. I indeed hope that soon some radical changes may be made in your country and that your brave father may be made free and honored as he deserves to be. I inclose a dollar for my subscription and will endeavor, by giving away the copies, to encourage others to subscribe.

BETTIE M. ROBERTS, Miller, Mo.—Indeed I think that the work of Moses Harman is "worth the doing," and that he is in prison for me, for every woman in the land, and for every unborn child; and while he is so nobly doing his work for woman's emancipation and while he is so nobly doing his work for woman's emancipation in prison—and he surely is—I only wish I could do more to help along his work on the outside. I admire beyond words to express his noble determination to not buy his freedom by his silence, and sincerely hope he will soon be well. I see how thorough his faith must have been. I sent for some blank petitions for his pardon, and Mr. Roberts obtained quite a number of names. Strange, but women, I believe, are his worst foes. One woman, proclaiming herself as quite intellectual and a great reader, had received some sample papers. She read only one copy, and when Mr. Roberts requested her signature she said: "Anybody who would publish such a paper ought to be in prison." Three ministers—all we asked—signed the petition, but one infidel refused; so it would seem all the liberal thinking is not among freethought people. It is difficult to see how one can claim the right to be free in matters of religion and not grant others the right to choose their own morals unless some one is wronged. . . . I appreciate very much the editorial you reproduced in last issue and think the idea a splendid one. . . . I had an article on divorce in one of our country papers in reply to a minister. The minister used words repeatedly for which your father's paper was held up. I related that fact, and that your father was in prison for using words that were delicate and refined in comparison to some of the minister's. Mr. Roberts afterward requested another editor of the town to sign the petition; he remembered the name of your father in my reference and signed the petition, and said he never heard of him until he read my article. This shows what even a little thing can do, as the editor is conservative.

P. F. CHAMBARD, Fayette, Ohio.—I herewith inclose $2. I only wish I was able to give all the support the cause needs; I would do it willingly, but my means are limited and I am 84 years of age, so you see my time is short; but will do what I can to help to better the condition of the human race. The money is for the continuation of my subscription and for a new subscriber.

HENRY C. ROBERTS, Bennington, Kan.—We all sympathize deeply with you in the trouble which the postoffice authorities have caused you, and hope your father's health will not suffer so much in confinement as has been feared it would. We know nothing can break his spirit. He will have his reward in the consciousness of the service he has rendered humanity and the gratitude of future generations.

EMIL F. RUDEBUSCH, Mayville, Wis.—Inclosed please find $1 to extend my subscription to LUCIFER and a few stamps for extra postage. I am very busy now writing a German drama—the most modern of modern dramas, of course! I had intended to write to your father, but gave it up because I could not find the right tone. My letter would not pass. Please remember me to him in your next letter.

AUBIN F. HILL, General Secretary American Press Writers' Association, 13 Isabella street, Boston, Mass.—I desire to hear from each member of the American Press Writers' Association. When money is obtained to pay for printing and mailing a directory of members, do you desire your address and name in it? Sending targets in form of papers to persons is an effective system of education. Moses Harman is No. 577, A. P. W. A.

LYDIA TODD, 248 Bonwell street, San Francisco, Cal.—Have been looking all through all my books, and all I could borrow, for an ex. Can't find it, so give it up. Said to myself, Lydia, you are nothing but a scrubwoman, and, although you may be a first-class worker, you are not a scholar, and maybe the word pardon does not mean what it did when you went to school. On looking, find it means same old thing—remission of a penalty. Words are things; means to convey thoughts. I would be willing to demand our editor's freedom, but to ask pardon—never! I am not highly educated, and cannot write or make flowery speeches, but have the greatest contempt for men-made laws, and would rot in prison before I would hire a lawyer to talk me out or let a friend bail me out. I am ashamed of my ignorance and do all I can to improve my mind, but, if given my choice of an idiot or a coward, would choose the idiot. Yes, indeed, I detest the word pardon. It belongs in the vocabulary of cowards.

FLAVIUS J. VAN VORHIS, Indianapolis, Ind.—I only wish I was in a position to assist LUCIFER in a substantial way, at least more than I have yet done, as it certainly seems to me to be worth doing. There can be nothing but admiration for the man who is so devoted to what he believes to be right and suffers for what he believes to be the right in the cause of humanity. I was at a national political meeting a short time ago and was gratified to find quite a sentiment against the censorship of the postoffice department, so much so that I had no difficulty in securing the insertion in the address sent out of a sentence or two condemning the law under which a censorship is possible. I can appreciate, I think, the struggle you have to keep the paper going, and I hope you may find it easier for the next year, and that Mr. Harman may not only survive his prison term but that he may have many years to give to the paper he has so much interest in. I send you herewith my check for $1 in renewal of my subscription.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Price, 5c each; 25c a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood.

BY AGNES BENHAM.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 76, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Do You Want Free Speech?

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Concentrated, but comprehensive. It is specially valuable at the present crisis, since it is the only pamphlet exposing the entire conspiracy against free speech in America. The facts it cites are startling, but absolutely verifiable. The brochure is needed by all who would realize whither we are drifting, the magnitude of the issue we are called on to face, the fundamental principles involved in the battle for free speech, and the means of combatting the enemies of liberty. Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY B. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

PERSONAL—Our readers in Boston and vicinity are invited to correspond with F. J. Stiles, Box 1441, Beverly, Mass., for several years a subscriber to LUCIFER and thoroughly in sympathy with its teachings.

Address, with stamps, the General Secretary of "The World's Brotherhood," Wm. W. Martin, Mobleton, Ga.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

The American Institute of Phrenology.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,

52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.
1456 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1072

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

THE BOOK EXCHANGE

I HAVE AN IDEA.

Most of us have good ideas now and then, but how few of us ever go any further than having the idea!

Now if you think my plan a good one help me to help you.

MY IDEA:

Make a list of all the books, pamphlets, magazines and radical papers you have to sell, exchange or give away and send me that list.

Some one has that missing number of LUCIFER, or that book you have been looking for so long is growing dusty on the shelf of some one who would rather have one of your books in exchange.

I KNOW BOOKS,

their prices and publishers, and can help you get that book and perhaps sell some of your books at the same time.

THE EXCHANGE

will be made through me and I can save you money and perhaps add to your library at the same time.

MAKE THAT LIST TODAY

if possible. Do it this week without fail and mail to

SAMUEL T. HAMMERSMARK,

326 LINCOLN PLACE, NORWOOD PARK, CHICAGO, ILL.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00
POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,
For the Supermen and Supergirls and The New Civilization.
2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

The Naturopath and Herald of Health.

$1 A YEAR, 10 CENTS A COPY.

A magazine devoted to everything that is true in Nature. It stands for freedom of thought and speech in everything that is of vital importance for the development and perfection of the human race. Send for sample copy.

Our other publications: "The Kneipp Cure," 50c; cloth, $1. "Baby's Kneipp Cure," 50c; cloth, $1. "Return to Nature," vol. 1, $1.50; cloth, $2. "The Philosophy of Fasting," $1. "Ills's Natural Methods of Healing," in 2 vols., 2,000 pages, 700 illustrations, cloth, $5. "The Abuse of the Marriage Relations," 25c. "Insomnia," 15c.

Send 25c for a three months' trial subscription and we will also send you our literature.

B. LUST, N. D., 1124 East 59th street, New York.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, AUGUST 30, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1073

THE COMSTOCKIAN RENAISSANCE.

In our study of New York art we have now come to its culminating point—the early part of the twentieth century. Looking backward as we do, down the centuries, we are apt to confuse the three great periods of artistic activity in the blurred perspective of the past. We must bear in mind that more than a thousand years intervened between the classic age of Greece and Rome and the Italian Renaissance. Again, between the birth of Michelangelo and that of Anthony Comstock nearly 400 years intervened. Each of these great men, it might be said, began his labors at the dawn of a new century, the former with the sixteenth, the latter with the twentieth. But between the two we find a difference. In Buonarotti the Italian Renaissance reached its culmination, and after him came a long period of decadence. Comstock marked the beginning of the Manhattan Renaissance. Preceding him was no slow revival of artistic activity, of patient study of the classic form and method, combining with religious inspiration to create a new conception of the Beautiful, finding its perfect expression in the brushes of Correggio, Titian, Raphael, and a host of others. Comstock was a Revolution. Preceding him was a long period of destruction and decadence, not of creation and advance. Arising in a night, waving the flaming torch of Modesty, he founded a new school, the Pant-theistic. Tradition was swept away. Himself no master of the brush or chisel, he brought to the artist who had been working in slavish imitation of bygone standards of the Beautiful a new ideal, a nobler conception of Art and its purpose.

Bufferty's Famous Fresco in the Charley Murphy Palace. It is the closing scene, illustrating the story of Cupid and Psyche, and shows the flight of the engaged pair into the clouds.

The Greek sought with his chisel to imbue the cold marble with life and soul; in the human form, created in the image of the divine, he found his ideal of beauty and worked with almost religious fervor to adorn his cities with his marvelous but unclothed figures. Today we shudder when we think what must have been the streets of Athens, and a walk through the Roman Forum would have been a nightmare to our modern cultured mind. We forgive the ancients because they were pagans and the light of reason burned very dimly. We cannot but marvel when we consider that after a lapse of 2,000 years, as late as the twentieth century, these pagan figures were shown publicly in their original form in the galleries of Europe and the stock exchanges of America. And this with a people whom we learn from ancient prints never allowed themselves to appear even partially unclothed except on formal occasions, such as dinners, dances and operas! Moreover, to a certain extent they boasted themselves a Christian people. Their artists, blind to light of reason and progress, were still groping in pagan darkness, slavishly following the methods of bygone centuries. Working thus, they were working to their own ruin, cultivating a back lot when the whole world lay open to them. Pant-theism they did not dream of. But Comstock arose. Like a breath of pure, fresh air from the Jersey meadows, he came. The artistic world was aroused to the canker worm that was eating at its very heart. The public conscience was awakened. Men who had looked upon Michelangelo's "David" unblinkingly now turned from it blushing. The reform was far reaching. The "Venus de Milo" was removed to a cellar of the Louvre, and a gigantic Rogers group was put in its place.

The Apollo Belvedere Now Jersey. Ascribed to Phidias until it was found that the palm-leaf fan was peculiar to the sculpture of the Comstockian period.

Comstock! The very word has become a synonym of sweetness and light.

Now, it is not in the province of this paper to deal with dates and facts pertaining to the work of this great critic of art, interesting though they are, particularly in view of the new light recently thrown on them by the excavations on the site of the ancient Yorkville Police Court. Rather it is our purpose to speak critically of the effect of Anthony and the work of his followers, that the student of the Comstockian Renaissance may come to a true appreciation of the debt humanity owes him. He taught indirectly. To use a phrase of the day, he put down the lid on paganism. To find expression, the artist of the time had to seek new fields. Unable longer to study the beauty of limbs and flesh tints, he came to an appreciation of the lines of a well fitting sleeve or the expression of coattails, and sought to copy perfectly the tints of a porcelain bathtub. Clothes became his ideal. Hence the term Pant-theism, which is now applied to the school. Clothes he found in endless variety, and his imagination had fuller swing and to his genius was offered a far wider range of artistic Hertzsky's Masterpiece, Entitled at the Bath. The tints of the porcelain tub are still fresh and perfect. As a painter of tubs he had no peer.

The Colonial Runway, now in Van Cortlandt Park. It is ascribed to St. Gaudens and celebrates the victory of a member of the Yale Athletic School over a Harvard rival. The ankles are daringly shown.

achievement than on the monotonous drawing of classic arms and legs.

As an illustration we point to the superb frescoes on the walls of the Charley Murphy palace on Fifth avenue, which have been recently restored. They are by Rafferty, one of the most famous of the Comstock school, and are still bright and fresh. They illustrate the story of Cupid and Psyche, and in beauty of conception and execution far surpass the work of Raphael in the same line in Farnese villa in Rome, which has long been closed except to physicians. The tints of Psyche's shirtwaists are perfect. We can almost feel the nap on Cupid's derby hat. As we move around the great hall, going from panel to panel, we are almost overwhelmed by the power of this great artist in drawing and coloring clothes of every kind. In the first panel (on the right of the entrance) we see Cupid dressed for eyeing in a long fur coat and opera hat, about to ring the front doorbell of the home of Psyche's parents. In the next we see her sitting with her mother, clad in khaki outing suit of marvelous brown, thinking of her fiancé. And so we go from panel to panel till we come to that masterpiece of painting, that apotheosis of the Beautiful, the last panel, showing "The Flight of the Engaged Pair Into the Clouds." Our reproduction of this last panel gives a fairly adequate idea of its beauty.

As a painter of clothes Rafferty had no superior in the twentieth century. His wonderful imagery had full swing in the checks and stripes of the times, and we find all his canvases crowded with brilliantly clad figures. Had he been born fifty years earlier his genius would have been stunted by the conventions which would have been imposed upon him by the indelicate conception of the Beautiful then in vogue. We shudder to think of it. What, too, would his compatriot, the divine and spirituelle McClusky, have been with his genius dwarfed in like fashion? We should have lost those superb bathtubs which are now the pride of our great galleries.

Patrick McClusky was born in the latter part of the nineteenth century and began life as a policeman; but, having early shown a predilection for art, he attended the Art Students' League school on his days off. It was by a fortunate circumstance that he was driven to abandon the studies then in vogue in that ancient institution and to turn his genius to new fields. He it was who discovered the beauty of a bathtub, the graceful sweep of its lines, the delicate tints of its metallic surface. We find him in 1907 exhibiting his famous "Susanna at the Bath," a work which was hailed with such applause by not only the critics but by the police and public that he at once laid down the billy and took up the brush. For twenty years he painted bathtubs assiduously, until on an untimely automobile ride he departed this life in the full flower of his fame. His loss to Art was immeasurable, though hundreds of his bathtubs are still extant. Had he been spared he would doubtless have developed them in form and tint to a perfection still more marvelous. To comprehend our meaning you have only to study his world-famed "Susanna," which hangs today in the one finished nave of the Cathedral on Morningside Park. It is true that the window has been badly restored, but the coloring of the porcelain tub and the tiled floor is today as clean and fresh as when the inspired brush laid the pigments. Look, too, at his "Susanna." Did a pagan brush ever show her more beautiful, even though we do see less of her? "For centuries poets and philosophers have puzzled over that inscrutable smile," says Baedeker's Guide Book to Central Manhattan. Inscrutable? To our view the mind of the artist was to express perfect contentment. We divine at once that the day is the hottest August 5 in the record of the local weather bureau. Looking upon this modest masterpiece, and comparing it with some of the bathtub and soap canvases recovered from the ancient subway, evidently the works of masters of an earlier period, we can comprehend still more fully the debt we owe to the colossal critic whose raid wrought the change.

To a later paper we must leave the study of the works of the other masters of the twentieth century. The two named stand preeminent in power and execution. Yet in naïve simplicity McClusky has a worthy rival in August Himmelbacher, and Rafferty's imagery is hardly less rich than that of Henderson J. Pipp. In the originality of his bathrobe designs Erastus Johnson is without a peer, and none could crease trousers so perfectly as the strong and virile Thomas Jones. But, leaving them for a moment, we must turn to the Comstockian influence in sculpture.

Of the statues existing in the pagan period our sense of delicacy allows only to speak in case of necessity. We mention the once famous Apollo Belvedere in the Vatican simply to compare it with the Apollo Belvedere New Jersey, which was unearthed on the line of the Lackawanna road and now adorns St. Patrick's Cathedral. At the first discovery of this masterpiece of marble it was thought to be a work of Phidias. Later savants ascribed it to Michelangelo, but in the light of our recently acquired knowledge of the Renaissance we cannot ascribe it to other than either Mazmannio or St. Gaudens. As to which of the two, critics differ. It is now definitely known that the palm-leaf fan in sculpture was an accessory of the Comstockian era. It is not found in any works of an earlier period. Again, the marble itself is not real, but the figure is carved from the imitation stone which was so freely used in the sumptuous hotels of the Renaissance. These facts alone fix it as a work of the twentieth century. Would that we could settle as easily the mooted question of its creator! In its pose it is a Mazmannio; in its modesty a St. Gaudens.

As to the master to whom we owe the heroic statue of a sprinter which rises in Van Cortlandt Park, there can be no doubt. It is a St. Gaudens. Badly restored as the left leg is, we recognize at once the splendid sweeping movement of the runner's gown. The same is seen in the only other known work of the sculptor now in existence, the figure of Victory running ahead of Admiral Sherman, a marine symphony in bronze which has recently been appropriately removed from Central Park to the Battery wall. In the "Apollo Belvedere New Jersey" we have repose—beautiful, somber, lifelike. The cold marble seems infused with soul. We look to the mouth to open and utter some philosophic thought. In the Titanic runner we have action, physical beauty, the man perfectly developed in the great Yale athletic school. He is almost crossing the tape ahead of a Harvard rival, and we can see the strained tendons of the ankles daringly shown and almost hear his rapid breathing as he makes his final leap to victory in the 100-yard dash. Similar power of representing muscular action in marble is found in William Mulligan's "Hercules in Jumpers," where the right arm is boldly bared to the shoulder. But the student of art wishing to study this masterpiece in proper detail had best refer to our recent volume, "The Revival of Delicacy in the Twentieth Century."—New York Sun.

EXCLUSIVENESS IN LOVE.

DRYDEN, Mich., July 25, 1906.

Dear Helen: Your two letters reached me safely, the last one finding me in Detroit, the "City Beautiful," as it is called. I enjoyed both your letters and the article from LUCIFER, and that article unintentionally got into my trunk and I am sorry I cannot send it to you till I return to the Windy City, where my belongings are. It impressed me as being written by a thoughtful, sensible woman. If I remember rightly, she brought up the thought that the idea of one's yielding to all desires was erroneous. Certainly one should know the "whenness" and "whyness" of the actions that make for happiness and well-being—and to be sure it is not always best to satisfy desires, even the desire for celibacy included!

Will this old question ever be settled? The problem of what is best for all—what sexual relationship is the best and only sane evolutionary one? I have ceased to be interested in it as a national question. Let me but find the way for myself—find the conditions under which I can grow, and know the reasons for such wishes as I have gathered in the past—and I will not ask any one to follow the same plan, tread the same footpath. And I do not want a formula or creed to live by. Let the churches have that. When we get to a state where we want to set up one standard for all, be that standard a monogamic, exclusive one or a plural relationship, we might as well all take to wearing the same-sized shoe. You will have one lover or a dozen in your life—not because you believe in a certain course, but because your temperament, your needs, your surroundings, determine what course you will pursue. If you had been brought up in the jungles of Old Mexico, lived in a tent or in the open air for years—had as little knowledge or love of the conventional home as I, for instance, have—what a difference there would be in your views! But you are a rebel, anyway, just as I am, and our contention is, I believe, over what I believe to be a useless speculation—that is, the marriage of the future—you holding up the monogamic as an ideal; I holding that an exclusive relationship is not only impractical and improbable, but damnably selfish and unprogressive. I mean exclusiveness as a lifelong course.

You ask me if I am a free-lover—crossed out and varietist substituted. I don't like the term varietist. I don't call myself by that name. Does anyone imagine that one is deliberately seeking a number of friends or lovers simply for the sake of variety, like a vaudeville show? True comradeship in the search for knowledge laughs at that, for it is infinitely greater. Love is great as a means to intellectual growth, as a unifying factor, and as one of the agents of social evolution; but beyond all this, and greater still, Love is a supreme attainment in itself.

I am not much concerned about what people will do several generations from now. I believe it to be as uncertain a proposition to say that people will all pair off in twos, with "no trespassing allowed," as it is to predict that wives will be owned in common. Let us find out what condition supplies our own individual needs, and let industrialism do the rest.

What is feasible today? Exclusiveness in love is not practicable today, because we don't have it. The facts stare us in the face: people don't take to it. Men and women chafe under the restraints of the you-and-me-and-no-more relation, and break away from it as often as they can or dare. Men are not in general "loyal" to their wives. Women, being less courageous and having children, are more "loyal" because they have to be. Men act on the principle of "what folks don't know don't hurt 'em," and enjoy the bliss of kisses on the side; and their poor, innocent wives are—perhaps finding the ecstasy of life from some other source at the same time.

Exclusiveness at best can be only an ideal—beautifully selfish, like the Christian's heaven, which excludes a large share of the human race from eternal bliss. The following reasons prevent the realization of the exclusive ideal: Inexperience, ignorance of youth, the constantly changing ideas of what constitutes a true and desirable mate, the mental limitations of the beloved, physical deficiencies, death itself, education, a keenly appreciative, sympathetic mind—all make a debarring or exclusive love difficult or impossible to maintain. An exclusive love is like a bright ray of light, intense but narrow, and when that one beam fades all is darkness and gloom. But a love that goes out to many, stopping neither at self nor one more, is like the eternal sunshine which sheds light and happiness forever. Never regret having loved. Be sorry if you must for anything but that. The days when you hated, blamed, condemned, you will recall with sorrow; but give a shout of joy, let your heart exult for every precious moment when you gave love freely!

And what of the starving hearts, the despondent ones, in your selfish love-scheme? Shall you or I become so bound up in our own monogamic happiness as to lose sight of the happiness of a sister or brother who may be just as worthy, just as deserving of a great affection as we two are? Shall we deliberately blind ourselves to the fact that here is another great soul that needs our love? You might say love him or her within certain limits. But if you are impelled by your instinct of sympathy and love to really love, what then?

Every good thing becomes destructive when carried to extremes. There is a limit to the number of people we can love. With the average intelligent man or woman the number is very small. I know of few instances where a sympathetic man or woman, with a bright mind and love of the beautiful, was willing to be contented and happy with one only. Let us bear in mind that love is not like potatoes, which, when divided up, leave an empty basket. Love increases only by giving.

A word about sex. The result of the long degradation of sex as unholy, unclean, was a movement following the opposite extreme, and then we were told to regard sex as holy, sacred, to be regarded in a worshipful manner. I prefer to think of sex matters as only natural, neither higher nor lower than other functions.

Young people are not monogamically inclined, and, of course, it should not be thrust upon them or anyone. The tendency toward exclusiveness is greater in people of fixed, conservative ideas and stolid habits. It is not any more to one's credit to be exclusive than it is to be non-exclusive. Either condition may be desirable and honorable. Few exclusivists live exclusive lives—none are exclusive in thought.

People are cruelly selfish, and nowhere is this selfishness more manifest than in love matters. Can't we get away from it at least a little and be able to say: If this man or woman's companionship and love is a great, helpful blessing to me, why should I want to exclusively possess it—why monopolize it? Why should I deny that blessing to some other human being who may be more worthy than I? When we learn to say that and feel it, when we cease struggling to possess love for ourselves, then will that estrangement, coldness, and blame and hate that come with the discovery that another is taking a part in our love-drama, all disappear. A part of the lesson Love teaches is to forego love, as well as to keep for one's own.

Most sincerely, GLADYS V. LAMB.

Give me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties.—Milton.

THE CRIME OF KNOWLEDGE OF SEX.

The three subjects of paramount importance to man are health, social organization and sex. These three fields have been the most neglected. Health is despised until it is lost, when fortunes are spent in not regaining it. Social organization is turned over to ghouls. The sex of the race is placed in charge of Anthony Comstock. I do not know of anything to parallel the folly of the American people in these particulars. To please industrial ghouls they will eat poisonous adulterations and putrid canned flesh, and die. It does not enter their minds to hang the men who poison them. To please a man who is wanting in the qualifications of intelligence they will allow scores of thousands of their children to suffer injury and ruin annually from sex ignorance. Comstock as a Czar of Morals is as grotesque a travesty as the microscopic Czar of Russia.

For high-minded protest against this destruction of American youth and corruption of American adults, Moses Harman, at the age of 76, is jailed like a common felon, for one year. I am surprised that this has not aroused such anger in the people as to drive Comstock, Comstockism, and related agencies, from the country. He pursues his way, bullying all liberal-minded persons, insulting women, laying down canons of art with clothes on, and defiling American health and morals at his sweet will.

In the Boston Symphony Hall there are large figures of nude men, wholly nude, and women and girls mingle with men and boys at the concerts. In the perverted light of the Comstockian mind these objects are obscene and ought to be mutilated or removed. It is a curious thing that this owner of American sex has not bullied Boston into veiling them.

Comstock has become an irresponsible monomaniac on the theme of obscenity, conjuring it up everywhere that he looks, out of the creative expectancy of his own sexified brain. How far is this from possession of the thing that he attacks?

His society should be abolished, and in its room a national league duly authorized should be established, to lift the American people out of their sexual ignorance. The main cause of "obscenity" is secrecy. Both can be dispelled by familiarizing children very early with the human figure of both sexes and instructing them in the nature and purpose of the sexual organs before puberty—that is, before their own sexual instincts arrive in force.

In spite of science, in spite of civilization, we are in the Dark Ages regarding sex. All children will go wrong in the sex realm unless they are taught with high intelligence how to go right. Not one can or will go right by instinct. For if they avoid one pitfall they will sink into another. But how many receive any teaching? And certainly none as yet receive intelligent teaching. This sexual ignorance causes infinite misery; it spoils, perverts or scars countless lives; and yet if anybody attempts to break the spell of infamous silence and let in the light of investigation, if he reasons about sexual and marital relations, he is put in jail and martyred! We are surely in a black African jungle. An ignorant quack is made the St. Peter of the vast sexual domain, and antics about the land suppressing all enlightenment. To him the keys of American sex are given, and he is made its pope.

Where are the doctors? I do not wonder that mountains of contempt are accumulating to fall on the medical profession for its criminal indifference to this sex theme. Had they not better wake up? Next thing Comstock, in his arrogance, will be cleansing and suppressing the medical journals that are so impure as to mention sex. What right have doctors to send out such masses of obscenity through the United States mails? What right has any one to harbor such contaminating information in his home? If his wife and children should get hold of it they would learn the terrible truth that Nature made sex.

Yet this night of shame cannot continue much longer. I would like to see the friends of sexual enlightenment and a higher relation of the sexes organize to uphold and spread their principles, and to combat assaults on the indisputable rights of free discussion. Had there been a strong national society Moses Harman could not have been imprisoned. Such wrongs are only done when they are unresisted. It is time for steps to be taken to prevent their repetition, which can only be done by aggressive organization.

It would be well also if a testimonial were prepared affirming the principles of sexual freedom and signed by all who adhere to these principles, to be presented to Mr. Harman as a mark of honor when he shall have endured to the full the punishment of a government worthy of Nero. ADDISON I. SWIFT.

The care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity.—

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

KNOWLEDGE THE ONLY SAVIOR.

Within the scope of authentic history, or of history commonly accepted as more or less reliable, several nations or aggregations of people have been conspicuous for the influence, the power, they have exerted over other nations and tribes of people inhabiting the planet Earth.

Prominent among the leading tribes, nations, or great families of people, may be named the Arabians, the Greeks, the Latins, or Romans, and, later on, the Saxons, or Anglo-Saxons.

Arabia is a peninsula in western Asia—an arid, comparatively unproductive and uninviting section of the earth's surface, with a hot and enervating climate, never densely populated, like India and China; and yet the Arabians have preserved their autonomy, their independence of outside powers, to a remarkable degree, and have exerted an influence over the rest of mankind second to that of no other people.

Not so much by their prowess in war—although this prowess has shone conspicuous in more than one great war—as by their psychic or psychologic force, the influence of their religious cults, have the Arabians been the leaders and conquerors of a large part of the human race.

Among the earlier Arabian chiefs, sheiks, or heads of families of semi-historic times was Abram, or Abraham, currently believed to have been the patriarch or chief founder of the tribe, clan, or nation called the Hebrews, more commonly called Jews (from Juda, the head of a sub-tribe); also called Israelites, from Israel, one of the names of Jacob, the reputed grandson of Abraham. The chief characteristics of this Arabian tribe or sub-tribe, through all the historic and semi-historic ages, have been clannishness, exclusiveness, vaingloriousness, bigotry, intolerance, aggressiveness, and acquisitiveness or narrow selfishness. That there have been many noble individual exceptions to this generalization is freely conceded, but exceptions do not disprove the rule.

Abraham and his tribe, or family, adopted a monotheistic cult or form of worship, in opposition to the polytheisms then prevalent among the surrounding peoples, and, in accord with their own leading characteristics, arrogated to themselves the title of "God's peculiar people." They claimed that the creator of the universe had selected them out of all the inhabitants of the planet as his special favorites, to whom he would directly reveal himself, and to none others; but that through them "all the families of the earth would be blessed."

If we are to believe their own account of themselves, these Hebrews began their mission of "blessing" mankind by the most relentless and wholesale human butcheries of which history or mythology gives any account. And later on they describe themselves as killing each other in their own family feuds with a ferocity and vindictiveness seldom if ever equaled by any other people. And through all, and largely as the cause of all their wars with each other and with other nations, has been conspicuous the monotheistic cult, and the bigotry and intolerance with which they regarded and treated all polytheistic beliefs.

A prominent and necessary feature or factor in this arrogantly exclusive and intolerant cult was the monopoly of religious knowledge, and largely of all knowledge, by a privileged class called the priesthood. In order to hold the common people, the common masses, together and give them the strength of cohesiveness it was seen to be necessary to keep them in awe of their leaders, and for this purpose there was and is nothing to compare with a belief that these leaders are the special depositaries of "divine" or superhuman knowledge. The masses of people, the laity, were therefore taught to look to the priests, and the priests to the "high priests," as the custodians and dispensers of all knowledge. None but the high priest was allowed to approach the "Holy of Holies," the sacred "Shekinah," in the inner temple. Any attempt by others to penetrate or lift the veil that concealed these awful treasures of knowledge meant instant death to the sacrilegious investigator, by the hand of Jehovah himself.

The name even of him who dwelt in this "Sanctum Sanctorum" was not to be uttered by the common herd. To guard against such profanation the sacred name was made as unpronounceable as possible—not a single consonant sound, all vowels, viz: i-e-o-u-a! the nearest approach to the articulate pronunciation of which is "Jehovah."

In process of time two conspicuous attempts have been made to reform or amend the monotheistic cult of this old-time Arabian tribe, variously called Hebrews, Israelites and Jews. The first of these took place nineteen hundred years ago, the reformers calling themselves "Christians," from the surname of him they consider the chief apostle and first martyr of the reformed mode of life or cult. So far as can be gathered from the very contradictory and semi-mythical records regarding the life and death of "Jesus the Christ"—so called because his followers claimed that he was the "Messiah," the anointed one that was expected by the Jews—so far as can be learned from these records, the man Jesus did not set himself up as the founder of a new religious sect. He was a devout believer in the creed of Abraham, of Isaac, of Jacob, and of Moses and other Hebrew patriarchs and prophets, and simply desired to bring back his Jewish brethren to a more consistent practice of the old cult.

But the Jews, with few exceptions, rejected Jesus as their promised Messiah, and at their suggestion the Roman governor executed him as a malefactor, or disturber of the peace. Using the tragic death and alleged resurrection of their leader as the central thought or fact of their propaganda, and magnifying the deeds of beneficence attributed to him—including healing of the sick, the lame, the blind,—similar to the facts of mesmerism and psychology common at the present day,—the followers of the dead reformer succeeded in starting what was substantially a new religious sect; a sect that grew slowly at first, partly because of the poverty, illiteracy and obscurity of its apostles and defenders, but chiefly because of the bigotry, intolerance and aggressiveness it had inherited from its Jewish parent and prototype, and because of the opposition and persecution it encountered on account of such intolerance and aggressiveness.

When Christianity first appeared as a reformed Judaism the Roman empire controlled and embraced most of the then known world. In religious matters the Roman government had always been tolerant and hospitable. It was never the policy of pagan Rome to interfere with the religious beliefs, rites or observances of its conquered provinces. In the Pantheon at Rome—the Temple of All the Gods—an image or shrine was erected for the worship of the tutelary deity of every nation or tribe that came under the political dominion of the Romans. All that was required or expected by the government in matters religious was that each sect should treat all other sects with civility and respect.

But this very reasonable requirement was soon violated by the sect calling themselves Christian. Equality of rights and privileges is a principle wholly foreign to the Christian system, as such. "No other name given under heaven by which ye can be saved but the name of Jesus." "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Hence, denunciation of all other religions, aggressiveness, or attempts at proselyting were prominent characteristics of Christians from the earliest period of their history, and when at length the Emperor Constantine adopted Christianity as the state religion—because none other would offer forgiveness to his murder-stained soul—then the adherents of the new faith showed to the full extent their characteristic narrowness, their bigotry of belief, their intolerance of rival creeds, and their determination to suppress all learning, all science and art, that they believed inimical to the universal rule of the Christian church.

And from that day to the present, monopoly of knowledge by the priesthood, denial of the right of independent thought or investigation, persecution of freethinkers, and suppression of speech and of press, whenever and wherever speech and press antagonized the rule of the church—such has been the uniform and consistent policy of the reformed Judaism commonly called Christianity.

And now, after a trial of some sixteen hundred years of repression of knowledge and suppression of speech and of free investigation, by the church, and by the civil power controlled by the church, is it not fair and right that this repressive policy and its authors should be held to account and judged by their fruits?

A tree is known by its fruits. Has the world, the so-called Christian world, been redeemed from vice, crime, poverty and misery by the church and by its monopoly of knowledge and by its suppression of knowledge? The answer to such questions is seen and read of all men in the reports of the daily press, in the sad eyes, hollow cheeks and half-starved features of thousands we meet daily on the streets. And still more emphatic is the answer seen in the congenital abortions—mental, physical and psychic—met with on every hand.

Is it not time, is it not fair and reasonable that we now give the opposite policy a trial? Is it not time to demand that knowledge take the place of ignorance in all things, and especially in the most important of all human relations, the relations based upon the differentiation called sex?—since it is in and upon these relations that life and character are given to each human being.

To put the question a little more pointedly: Is it not time that a nation calling itself free should throw off the shackles of medieval despotism known as the "inquisition," whereby the expression of honest thought is made a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment?

Let thought and speech and press be free. Let knowledge assert itself as man's true savior. Truth and right have nothing to fear as long as speech and press and thought are left free to grapple with error and wrong.—Moses Harman, in LUCIFER, June 5, 1896.

LUCIFER'S SUSTAINING FUND.

E. J. Sayre, 50c; E. Z. Ernst, 50c; A. G. Longberg, $1; F. E. Lothringer, $5; Col. James Freeman, $2; Philip Skora, $1; F. Frommel, 1; F. H. Bergman, $3; A. I. Trask, 35c; C. F. Ciampa, $1; J. W. Griggs, $10; T. J. Tanner, 50c; Walter Breen, $2; A. McDonald, $1; George Brayton, 25c; Dr. J. N. Lee, $1; W. F. Jamieson, 50c; Maggie Dimmick, $2; T. P. Meade, $1; Annie Lillian Swett, $1; William D. Denton, $2; R. Winsford Denton, $1; L. N. Schmidt, $1; A. Corlin, $2; T. V. Powderly, $1; E. W. Chamberlain, $20; S. O. Bishop, $5; Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Mathews, $1; H. H. Cady, $4.20; M. B., $10; M. A. Cohn, $2; W. P. Murray, $1; Risden Stewart-Asbury, $1; Paul L. Sautter, $1; Henry Bool, $10; David Vogl, 50c; Elizabeth Breese, $5; E. D. Wileman, $1; Alida M. Snow, $1; H. Heun, $5; J. H. Kallmyer, $4; Ria B. Bruce, $1; Alice Archer Little, $1.50; Mattie Day Haworth, $2; Jeanne Yersin, $1; Oscar Rotter, $1; Henry Colotti, 50c; C. B. Hoffman, $1; F. E. Palmer, $1; Henry Everett, $1; A. Saperstein, $1.50; J. G. Hunter, $5.

The man who fears to go his way alone,
But follows where the greater number trend,
Should hasten to his rest beneath a stone;
The great majority of men are dead.

—Edmund Vance Cooke.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 10 months and 18 days old. He has served 171 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan. Purely private subjects should be avoided, as all letters are read by prison officials and withheld if not approved. Do not ask questions requiring answer. All such questions, matter pertaining to LUCIFER, changes of addresses, etc., should be sent to the office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

U. S. P., LEAVENWORTH, KAN., August 19, 1906.

MY DEAR DAUGHTER—. . . Here we are having it pretty warm just now—up to 90 in the hospital for several days, and until late at night. Today (Sunday) it stands at 85½ at 10 a. m.; but a fairly good breeze prevents a feeling of oppression. I have not suffered from heat thus far, and am gradually gaining in health and strength, as I think. How soon the managers will put me to work I have no means of knowing.

For some days I have been trying to write my "last will and testament." Whether this document when finished will be read with interest by my surviving friends I can only guess. Not much "worldly gear" to give and bequeath to anyone, as you well know; perhaps none at all when my debts are paid; yet, "nevertheless and notwithstanding" my poverty, I felt a desire to put into condensed form a few of my matured ideas or convictions in regard to ethical questions and to "give and bequeath" them to such of my surviving friends as might care to read them—when the power of utterance by voice or pen shall no longer be mine.

Since my letter two weeks ago I have had one visitor, son George, of Valley Falls, Kan., who brought me fruit and papers. Am glad to report the receipt of several magazines for which I have been asking, such as July Soundview, July Physical Culture, July Stuffed Club, July and June Ariel, August Open Court, July Phrenological Journal, also August 11th and 18th Scientific American. From a fellow prisoner I have the July Cosmopolitan. Please send me August number of that magazine. I also received July and August Tomorrow. If you can send me April Tomorrow and April Physical Culture, as well as September numbers of same, I would be glad. Have received three copies of Progressive Thinker and would be glad to get it regularly every week. Tell James P. Morton, Jr., that I got one copy of his "Curse of Race Prejudice;" that two, if not three, of his letters (before the one received a few days ago) were certainly given to me. Among delayed letters and cards lately forwarded to me is one written at Detroit, Mich., May 21, and signed by Emma Goldman, Carl Nold and Alex. Bergman; also a long letter, inclosing several cards, from Joshua T. Small, Provincetown, Mass., dated May 28. Judging from dates of these and some others, I think it probable that several have been lost altogether. From W. G. Markland I received a photo lately, and a letter composed almost wholly of dashes! From foreign countries lately have come letters and cards from D. Legelke, Germany, I think (postoffice illegible); B. Morita, Tokyo, Japan, and six cards from George and Louie Bedborough, London, England. From Eliza MacLoghlin, Southport, England, came a finely executed and very interesting autograph copy of a book by her deceased husband, Dr. McLoghlin, which volume I will try to speak of more at length later. Also a good letter from T. Gilbert Taylor, South Wanilin, Australia. Besides these mentioned I have received letters or cards in the last two weeks as follows: Fannie M. Taylor, 1; Dr. Juliet H. Severance, 1; Emma Abbey, 1; La Verne Wheeler, 2; Philip G. Peabody, 3; "Frank," 1; Harriet B. S. E. Shehan, 1; Alice Lindsay Lynch, 1; J. Hartley, 1; Mattie R. Coy, 1; Hypolite Havel, 1; Emma Greene, 1; Paul L. Sautter, 1; Dr. James R. Price, 1; Ed Secrest, 1; Lucinda R. Chandler, 1; George L. Ballou, 2; Jennie Vose Durst, 1; T. J. Tanner, 1; J. E. Boultenhouse, 2; G. B. Wheeler (and clippings), 1; Dr. Oscar Rotter, 1; Ada Morley, 1; Katharine S. Fry, 1; Ed. W. Chamberlain, 1; O. Dietzen (editor Breeze, Kansas City, Mo.), 1; Thirza Rathbun, 1; H. W. Booner (and clippings), 1; Annie E. Parkhurst, 2; Andrew G. Layberg, 1.

Mrs. H. M. Lawson, Williams Bay, Wis., asks for the paper three months (care Y. M. C. A. Camp). Write to John W. Hohmann, 516 Eighth avenue, Las Vegas, N. M., and send paper. Tell friends no visitors allowed on Sundays.

Add to names of "veteran freethinkers" (for Sercombe's list), if not already done, Susan Reicherter, aged 80, I think; John Ernst, 85; Dr. Robert Greer, 82; Dr. Mark Rowe and wife, about 70, I think; and others that may occur to you.

Love to all. Yours, M. H.

THE BITTER CRY OF THE JAPANESE WOMAN.

The original of this story, told in letter form, was written in the Japanese by Sho Fukao, a native radical writer who is now suffering in Tokio jail for his dear cause, and I have taken the privilege of translating it into English by the author's permission. The story tells of the spiritual struggle of the Japanese woman of today. No picture can better illustrate the battle of ideas of the new and the old going on in the minds of the Japanese sisters than the story I have translated here. "Free-love" in Japanese means to love and marry without the consent of parents, who always arranged such matters. KICHI KANEKO.

My Dear Sister: There are a thousand unfortunate women in this world, I know. But is there, I ask you, any woman who is so unfortunate as myself, tortured with the contradictions of the age and carrying the heavy burden of the many on my shoulders?

I am left alone helplessly in this wide, desert-like world. I feel that I have no will of my own, that I belong to somebody else, am property—and, oh! I feel many times that it would be better for me to end this worthless life, which will be, after all, a dreadful, miserable and hopeless one as long as I live.

Dear sister! Pardon me to call you "my sister," for I have no one else that I can call "my sister." If I did not have you whom I call my sister in this lonely world I would wish not to have lived. It is my wish that I could talk with you in person and confess all that I have done in the past and ask you for advice. But I am afraid that, if I see you, I may not be able to explain as fully as I can in a letter. Sister, as I depend on whatever you would say as my part, I hope you will not neglect an answer. I do not know how to start my story. My heart is heavy and has no energy. But I must tell you—I have no more sense of honor—I must confess everything now to you.

It was last Christmas eve, when you and Miss A. were invited to a card party at Professor Hamada's, where I was doing some household service for my board. There, you may still remember, sat a young man right next to you in the party. He is not a handsome man, as you may see, but that man was the son of Professor Hamada. When I first went to his house to live with them a year before the last he was only eighteen—two years my junior—and was an innocent boy. He was really a nice, good-natured boy.

Well, until this time I thought and believed that men were all egotistic, selfish and immoral creatures. They demand women to be pure, virtuous, faithful to men, but they themselves are lacking in all these qualities. I found, however, that I was wrong after I came to live with them. This young son of my professor was indeed a refined young boy. So sympathetic and so light-hearted and so manly in his every-day life! If there is any model man he must be the one, I thought. At this very moment, my dear sister, I was captured by something—the something that I cannot understand to this day. From that moment my heart began to act toward this man blindly, and I could not control myself even though I tried to do so over and over again. I felt ashamed to see him every day—yet through something we came to understand each other. And, sister, I and he became to be sweetheart and lover. We were enjoying ourselves in the term that you may call "free-love," stealing his parents' very eyes—for that is what he is.

You will think that I am a bad girl—such a bad girl—to invite the young man's passion in spite of being his senior, and to spoil the young man and ruin his whole life. I do not know myself how I became such a bad girl and what made me so wicked. Oh, illicit association! What shameful words they are! Why did not God save me from such dreadful sin? What shall I do now? What shall I do now? I have defiled the name of my ancestor. If I think of this terrible crime I have committed I do not really know what I shall do.

Sister! I am tired and sickened of this world, as I cannot give him up and he will not forget me. Yet there is no future in our relation. His family is too well-to-do—and I? I am a daughter of a poor samurai. His parents will not allow him to marry a poor girl like me. It is beyond expectation for him or for me altogether. Moreover, dear sister, I was told that his parents are thinking of his future wife and she is already in view among their close relatives.

It was only a few weeks ago when he told his parents about our case so plainly and boldly, and that very evening they made me leave their house. You may imagine how I felt when I was told by my mistress that I must go! Oh, I cannot tell you what I thought at that moment! I wished I was dead.

The girl he is going to marry—if he obeys his parents' wishes—was engaged from her childhood by their parents, for it was agreed by the parents to let them marry when they become old enough. But he said to me all this time that he would not care for her. He told me that he could not sacrifice the liberty to love for anything, not even for his parents' will. How can I let him do as he wishes? Am I to make him a fukemono—an unloyal child to his parents? I am telling him to marry that engaged girl instead of me, though my heart is nearly breaking.

Alas duty! Alas Ninjo! And position and wealth! Oh, life is too hard for me, my sister! My parents are rather sympathetic to me, and yet they say that we are socially too much separated. Sister, I cannot understand why we are born for parents' sake. I would rather die if I cannot love a man with my own free will, and cannot marry him as I please. Wealth, position, and name! The people talk about too often and think about too much. What are they, after all? Without a true love this world is too lonesome for me. I do not wish to live any more.

Sister, I have one more thing to tell you, but I am ashamed to tell you about it. I am ashamed! . . . . Sister, ... how this hard world will unhesitatingly and cruelly talk about my poor baby as it comes to the world! Five months from now I will be a mother. I must decide what to do in these five months. I shall not cry any more about my misfortune, sister; I was caught by such a fate. It is God's punishment that I was tempted through the poet's dream, "free-love."

Tell me, my dear sister, what to do. What shall I do? I do not know what I must do but to end my life. I feel so much easier since I confessed you my dreadful past. You will undoubtedly be astonished at this news. You will not regard me as your friend as you did before. I am afraid. It is 3 o'clock in the morning. I wonder what my parents are dreaming about me. My eyes are dry, and my ink is all gone, and the oil in my lamp has about run out. I must stop now. I have got to stop here, for another day is coming for me to cry and cry and cry.

Sayonara! Your broken-hearted sister, SUGIKO.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

JOSHUA T. SMALL, Provincetown, Mass.—Enclosed please find the cash for another year's subscription to LUCIFER. Here's hoping Editor Harman may outlive his jail sentence and that many years of usefulness are still in store for him.

AUBIN F. HILL, Boston, Mass.—Enclosed is $1 to extend payment on my subscription for LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER. I desire a free press, free speech for myself and everybody. I am glad Moses Harman has found a better prison. He may expose some of the hells made by men in America. I regret the system—made by Americans—that sends good men like Moses Harman to be prisoners.

H. HANSEN, Colorado City, Colo.—Brother Harman: I am glad to know that you are still in the land of the living. There was a time when priestcraft ran riot in the world, and after that moral leprosy was shaken off we substituted for it political leprosy, and these political degenerates now seem to run riot in the world, but after while I hope the people will get sense enough to scratch them off their back.

ELLA KAUTZ, Akron, O.—Enclosed find $2 to help sustain LUCIFER. I hope it will "weather the storms." It made me heartsick to learn how shamefully your father had been mistreated at Joliet. I wrote him about the time he was being transferred to Leavenworth, so I suppose the letter went astray or wasn't forwarded. I like your idea of printing editorials from old copies of LUCIFER. Your father's writings are worth reprinting many times.

J. M. GILBERT, Randolph, Tex.—Find enclosed $1 to extend my time on LUCIFER. Would like to do better. I am convinced of the great truth for which LUCIFER's editor has spent long years of toil and suffered such gross injustice in a so-called civilized, free country. When the majority of women learn to take their freedom, then we will have freedom in reality. The powers that be know this; therefore laws and rulings making freedom of discussion a crime.

HJALMAR GISLASON, Louise Bridge, Man.—I enclose postal money order for $2. I would gladly send some more, but circumstances do not enable me to do so at present. The work of your father is surely worth doing, and the cause he is fighting for is worthy of more than I can do for it. I am sorry to hear of his sickness, but hope he will soon recover. My best wishes to you and him. It would be terrible if you were compelled to give up the publishing of LUCIFER, now the bearers of light and knowledge are so few.

CORNELIA BORCHLIN, Congers, N. Y.—Enclosed find $1 to go on my subscription to LUCIFER, also a few newspaper clippings that were sent to me. Was very glad to hear that your father was feeling better than when he left Joliet. Wrote him a letter some little time ago. Nothing of interest in it. Just wrote to let him know that I thought of him. Lately have read a number of newspaper squibs in reference to Gorky. Wendell Phillips said we were a nation of hypocrites. In that respect we do not seem to have improved since his day.

C. N. and EMMA R. GREENE, Topeka, Kan.—Enclosed find $1 that Mr. Greene wishes used to extend his subscription one year. LUCIFER came yesterday, and it seems your father is still in the hospital. Well! it seems to me they nearly accomplished their purpose of killing the dear old gentleman. I suppose they thought that was the only way to get rid of the touching that will help to free the race. Of course, they do not put it just that way. I trust that the care he is now receiving will so restore him to health that his friends will have the blessing of his presence many years yet. We hope you are bearing up as well as possible. It must be a heavy burden you are bearing, but I am sure it would be a still heavier burden to be loosened from it in the way the officials of our country would wish to free you.

A. SAPERSTEIN, San Francisco.—Enclosed please find money order for $6. Kindly renew my subscription; also send me "Plays, Pleasant and Unpleasant," and "Man and Superman," by G. B. Shaw; the balance for you to use where it is needed most. I hope our dear editor will come back to us from the penitentiary in good health and with clear and forcible arguments to still fight the battles of liberty, defying Comstockery and the postal vensors to blow out the Light Bearer of the emancipation of mankind through the right to be born well.

JAMES CRAIG, Peotone, Ill.—A short time since I wrote you for sample, and to see if your paper was still published, and have received two sample copies. I have read three or four of Post's articles on postal affairs with interest; also received from Free Speech League, of New York, the Wakeman article, etc. But the information concerning the Lewis bank affairs at St. Louis is still unsatisfactory. The entire postal question needs to be gone over from the ground up and revolutionized. Pay railroads only what is justly due them; make county papers pay within the county; prohibit franking and follow Post's suggestions on other matters. No discrimination because of advertisements or no advertisements. Let us have service at cost. Abolish postal censorship and despotism.

I. A. HEALD, Washington, D. C.—Enclosed find $2 and two new subscribers, both whole-souled men of generous sympathy in behalf of such as are persecuted and wronged for opinion's sake. Notwithstanding that after my regular day's work is done I study and labor to perfect my inventions overtime, usually from 10 to 11 o'clock nights—Sundays and holidays alike—yet I should be glad to write an encouraging letter of appreciation to your father if I was sure that it would reach him; but I get so indignant as I think of the wrongs heaped upon him and his paper by government officials that I almost doubt my ability to restrain my indignation sufficiently to write a letter without reinforcing it with "emu words" which the prison officials would not allow to reach him. However, if it is a comfort and satisfaction for him to know that the knowledge of his treatment, sufferings and wrongs is fast making new friends and sympathizers for himself and the cause he and you advocate, let us all give him that assurance. If he dies in prison, or from the effects of his unjust confinement, I want to be the first to contribute as large a sum in proportion to my ability as any other person to build an appropriate and lasting mosument to his memory. If he lives to return to his home, let us take measures to escort him there with a procession at least a mile long.

T. V. POWDERLY, Washington, D. C.—Friend Harman: A few years ago when we were struggling for the rights of humanity through the medium of the Knights of Labor we were misunderstood because there were those who did not wish to understand. We were told that the "time is not ripe for these reforms" and counseled to have patience. If you look the field over you will note that some of the most radical things for which we worked are now regarded as "sane and safe," and those who fought them take credit for their inauguration. You are an old man, but I wouldn't wonder if you should live long enough to see other men laying claim to the credit for opening the eyes of mankind to the sacred right of woman to the control of her own person. It won't be long until the woes and abuses, of every organ of the human structure will be taught in our common schools. To guard against evil one must know it; he can't know it by shutting his eyes when he meets it or by turning a corner to avoid it. Had the children of past generations been properly instructed such revolting details as are given out by the unsuppressed press of the Thaw and other cases would not pollute the eye and mind of children of all ages today. You, at your worst, would guard against these things, and must go to prison for it. Every daily paper that prints the stuff that comes out of New York about the Thaw case does more, in one issue, to poison the youthful mind than all the LUCIFERS you could issue. It may be that you were not salacious enough in your educational work. I don't know whether you are right or not, but if it is right to teach us how to breed good hogs, horses, geese and goats it can't be wrong to tell us how to improve the stream of humanity flowing into this good world of ours. I notice that some congratulate you on being in prison, on being a martyr to a good cause. I won't do that, for I don't believe it right to imprison a man for having opinions and giving expression to them. I sincerely hope that they will, from now on, treat you with that consideration to which your years and gentle heart are entitled. Herewith find $2. Send me LUCIFER for another year and use the other dollar to defray your expenses in part.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Price, 3c each; 25c a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood.

BY AGNES BENHAM.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 76, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Do You Want Free Speech?

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Concentrated, but comprehensive. It is specially valuable at the present crisis, since it is the only pamphlet exposing the entire conspiracy against free speech in America. The facts it cites are startling, but absolutely verifiable. The brochure is needed by all who would realize whither we are drifting, the magnitude of the issue we are called on to face, the fundamental principles involved in the battle for free speech, and the means of combatting the enemies of liberty. Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

PERSONAL.—Our readers in Boston and vicinity are invited to correspond with F. J. Stiles, Box 1441, Beverly, Mass., for several years a subscriber to LUCIFER and thoroughly in sympathy with its teachings.

Address, with stamps, the General Secretary of "The World's Brotherhood," Wm. W. Martin, Mobleton, Ga.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 116 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

The American Institute of Phrenology.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,

52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.
1516 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1073

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

God and My Neighbor.

BY ROBERT BLATCHFORD.

Author of "Merrie England," "Britain for the British," etc.

Some of the chapter headings are: The Sin of Unbelief; What I Can and Cannot Believe; Is the Bible the Word of God? Evolution of the Bible; What Is Christianity? Can Men Sin Against God?

This book, as well as "Merrie England," has had a great run, both in England and America, among that class of people who do their own thinking. Price, paper cover, 50c; cloth, $1.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have fall reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Isola: Or, The Disinherited.

A REVOLT FOR WOMAN AND ALL THE DISINHERITED.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

With Colored Frontispiece Portrait of Fortunatus on the Heights of Avenamore, entitled "The Last Watch."

In his characteristics of the drama Mr. G. J. HOLYOAKE writes: "Her conception of womanly independence is original in literature. . . . . The moral interest of the drama has great charm. . . . . As the tragic death of a woman capable of both heroism and reflection, the last hours of Fortunatus are memorable. . . . . The reader will see in The Last Watch on the Heights of Avenamore the beauty, the dignity, the determination, without defiance, of Isola. Intellectual integrity in defence of the Right is the Soul of the drama THE DISINHERITED.

Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Story of Ijain.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

The British aristocracy has produced some strong and independent souls. Literature and science bear the imprint of their touch. Social reform has also given some of them an opportunity to make a reputation for something which is generally alien to their class—useful work. But it remains for Lady Florence Dixie to redeem the name of the Douglases by literary work which is truly revolutionary in character. Revolution has been in her blood since she could think. Neither the aristocratic environment and traditions nor the efforts of clerical and monarchical influences have succeeded in blunting the keen perception of her mind. And her indomitable spirit has always clung close to the love of truth. Only a truly brave and sincere soul could walk upward without any assistance on the steep and stony path of religious evolution as she has done. She met the dogma of the ruling class with open eyes, and discerned it mercilessly, until she had satisfied herself that it was cold and hollow, and without any redeeming power. No one can read her story of IJAIN without a deep compassion for the lonely child that fought its mental battles so determinedly and found the way through the tangled maze of creed to a purer and more human conception of what religion should be and ought to accomplish. This story should be read by all who wish to answer the questions that arise in the minds of little children on religious subjects, and who wish to take part in the mental evolution of the souls that grow up under their care.—E. Untermann, in "Appeal to Reason."

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00
POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,
For the Supermen and Supermenna and The New Civilization,
2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, SEPTEMBER 13, E. M., 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1074

WOULD FREEDOM DEGRADE WOMEN?

In the Woman's Journal for August 18 there is an article by Ida Husted Harper, copied from the Boston Transcript, which is so rich in unconscious humor that it is well worth reading. Mrs. Harper has just been attending the sessions of the International Woman Suffrage Alliance at Copenhagen, and has been horrified beyond measure to find that the woman suffrage movement of continental Europe is in the hands of socialists and freelovers. She says:

"An embarrassing situation has been encountered in the fact that the movement to enfranchise women is in many parts of Europe in the hands of socialists—not the moderate type, which for the most part represent socialism in America, but the radical and extreme class who would overturn absolutely the existing institutions, among them that of marriage."

And again:

"In another country, which is so staid and respectable that it shall be nameless, the president of the suffrage association is a beautiful and dignified woman of irreproachable character, and yet she is a pronounced advocate of 'freelove' in its most radical form. This doctrine, which would practically wreck all that has been gained for women by centuries of progress, is indignantly rejected by those who form the enduring bulwark of every community, and they will set their faces like adamant against any reform with which it is connected."

I want to draw special attention to the statement that freelove "would practically wreck all that has been gained for women by centuries of progress." Now, I am going to give Mrs. Harper the finest chance she ever had to distinguish herself. Let her come forward and tell us just what "has been gained for women by centuries of progress." We all know that women have shared the benefits of industrial inventions and discoveries, and of the decline of war; but nearly all writers on the history of marriage, including great woman suffragists like Mrs. Gage and Mrs. Gamble, maintain that women today hold a worse position relatively to men than they have often done in past history. Havelock Ellis, in his "Man and Woman," page 450, says: "The periods of society most favorable for women appear, judging from the experiences of the past, to be somewhat primitive periods in which the militant tendency is not strongly marked." Burckhardt, in his "Renaissance in Italy," page 397, speaking of Italian women 500 years ago, says: "There was no question of 'woman's rights' or female emancipation, simply because the thing itself was a matter of course." If these statements are true, it is clear that women have gained nothing very startling by centuries of progress.

A few days ago I read an article by Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, a leading woman suffragist, in the English Clarion. She told a very different story from Mrs. Harper. She said that while the wages of men had continually risen during the past fifty years, the wages of women had continually fallen. She added that things had now reached such a desperate point that women no longer cared whether they lived or died. She gave a reason why women's wages have fallen. She explained that employment has been taken away from women by law and by public opinion. She mentioned, for instance, that there is now a strong agitation to prevent women from acting as barmaids, although that occupation is better paid and more healthy than most women's occupations. Already a number of philanthropic men and women have had such an influence on public opinion that many barmaids have been discharged, and have been driven into the gutter or the sweatshop.

Why are women's wages falling? Why are they not allowed to be barmaids, or to fill other good jobs? Because they are too "pure." Men are not "pure," and are therefore qualified to be bartenders or billiard markers, or to fill a hundred other easy jobs. But women are so "pure" that they are hardly fit for anything except to work in a sweatshop in London or Chicago for 90 cents a week. Freelove will wipe out that disqualification. Under freelove both sexes will be equally pure and will have an equal chance to get any well-paid work that is going.

Two or three hundred years ago almost every woman had a chance to become a wife and mother. In England today, in certain large classes of society, not less than half the women are old maids. Millions go through life without ever being kissed by a man. In almost every savage tribe every woman can become a wife and mother, but as a result of centuries of progress the number of those who can do this in civilized countries is becoming ever smaller.

Women have had better luck in America than in Europe. In Europe there are far more women than men, but in America there are far more men than women. Hence American women have a scarcity value and are more in demand both as wives and workers than European women. But this advantage is swiftly passing away. Already in many eastern states women are in the majority. There are now plenty of old maids and underpaid women in America, and there will soon be plenty more. Jack London lately said that there were women working in Chicago for $1 a week. The press of the country indignantly denied the statement, but one of the leading Chicago dailies investigated and found that there were plenty of women working in Chicago for 90 cents a week.

Mrs. Harper is too timid. To get freedom to do what they please with their own persons women might well risk all that they have gained by centuries of progress, and yet not be very desperate plungers.

Even if we leave centuries of progress out of account, how could freedom hurt women? Could it hurt them economically? On the contrary, many women are at present forced to sacrifice their economic position to get the joys of love and motherhood. Many unmarried women have good, steady, well-paid jobs, sufficient to maintain not only themselves but one or two children; yet society hounds such a woman if she dares even to have sexual relations, not to speak of children. Many such women are forced by their natural desires to marry men who cannot support them, and to become domestic drudges, working twice as hard for nothing as they formerly did for good pay.

Havelock Ellis says that the chief obstacle to the employment of women in the British postoffice is that separate lavatories would have to be provided, which is not worth while in small offices. This is a fine example of the way our present sex system holds down women. Women are kept out of numberless occupations by our prudish ideas. Why in the world should women not be barbers, for instance? I should like to be shaved by a woman, and so would nearly every man. Freedom will open to women a vast number of occupations from which they are now excluded.

I suppose Mrs. Harper thinks that something dreadful would happen to the children under freelove. The best medicine she can take is a dose of European statistics. In some parts of Europe marriage has almost died out among the working classes. In Vienna, Munich and Prague nearly half of all the children born are illegitimate, and they are as well cared for as the children of any other class in the world. The more freedom women get, the more easily they will settle the children problem. When women are not forced by their needs into marriage, and then forced to have children they do not want, they will be able to decide on what conditions they will or will not become mothers. As a result, children will be much fewer, much better, and well supported at the public expense, without being in any way separated from the mother.

Freelove would be a most blessed thing from the physical standpoint. The amount of disease and bodily misery caused by the present system is almost incalculable, as doctors like Drysdale and Foote have shown. Freedom would make woman once more a healthy animal, like the females of other animals.

What would freedom do for women intellectually? There is one country in which there has always been so much sexual freedom that the whole world thinks of it whenever freelove is mentioned. I mean France. Some time ago the London Times said in an editorial that woman's claim to intellectual equality with man depended almost entirely on what she had done in France. American women have had more education than any others, yet America has produced no woman scientist like Madame Curie, the discoverer of radium; no woman artist like Rosa Bonheur; no woman novelist like George Sand; no woman politician like Madame Roland; no actress like Rachel or Sarah Bernhardt; not even a heroine like Charlotte Corday or Louise Michel. All these women, and many other great women, have flourished in France since the confederation of the United States. Is it a mere coincidence that the land where love is so free should also be the land of great women? The two chief French women novelists of the nineteenth century were Madame de Staël and George Sand, and both were among the most open and unabashed varieties that ever lived. George Sand's great delight was to talk and write about her innumerable love affairs. Can it be doubted that their wide experience of life and love stimulated the intellects of these women?

Freelove means chiefly freelove for women. Men have always had a good deal of it, and it has suited them wonderfully well. What has proved such excellent sauce for the gander could hardly do much harm to the goose.

R. B. Kerr.

OH, I WISH I COULD!

Yes, I wish I could find words to express, to make clear to others what I see and feel in connection with the great subject of sex—great because underlying all else.

Whitman says sex contains all, and the theosophist uses the terms God and Satan as expressing the right and wrong use of sex. And it is axiomatically true that if sex is the source through which all life manifests, then it is the source through which all power must be evolved.

If sex contains all, then it brings either good or evil, as used rightly or wrongly, for all covers both the evil and the good, health and disease, crime and an honest life, etc. Evolution has climbed the stairway of sex to reach the present point of development, and why should we expect to go higher by any other path?

If I could engrave upon the hearts and brains of all the people these two great truths—to wit, that sex is the fountain of all life, and that, no matter what human law may decree, nature's law cannot be violated with impunity—what a revolution it would make in human life! How it would lift us all in the scale of being, through our respect for that which we have been taught to despise unless sanctioned by church and state.

From the fact that sex is creative, from the lowest grade of matter up to the highest grade of thought and feeling in the highest development of the race, and because of that other fact that as we think so we are and such is the character of what we do, if our idea of sex is low we create a low order of life-aura in our sex relations. In other words, creation depends upon the interaction of the Eternal Two, the male and female principles; but the quality of that which is created on the human plane depends more or less upon our estimate of the creative act.

Those who are experimenting upon plants and animals with a view to their improvement talk of applying the same methods to the human race. There are some things they do not take into consideration, one of which is: the plant and the animal have a more highly developed element from which to draw, as found in the waste which falls from the order of life above them. The human cannot look to a higher order in visible form, and the invisible ones do not throw off waste matter.

We cannot climb a smooth wall. There must be something higher than that on which we stand on which we can place our feet; and in the case of race climbing, race improvement, as there is no higher order of life upon the planet, and as we have reached the plane of I Am consciousness, we must develop the higher element for ourselves and from the fountain of our own creative life. How?

By honoring sex in thought and use. By ceasing, and forever, the use of those terms that imply contempt. "Animal passions!" We have no animal passions. Our creative desires are human, distinctly human. As well call the creative instinct of the animal vegetable passion. "Animal passion!" Have you ever realized how much of contempt we thus cast upon that without which we should have neither body nor brains? If we wish to really rise in the scale of being we should accord to this wonderful fountain the highest possible honor and demand from it the highest possible use.

The sex act is both physical and mental; thus both a physical and a mental aura is evolved. These auras take their grade, high or low, from the plane of the actors, from the purpose, the thought that prompts to action. In speaking of these unseen but real auras we must remember that the finer forces are the strongest, as evidenced from the fact that the aura called malaria prostrates strong men and women even unto death; and if we would remember that nature acts by general, not by partial, laws, we might find the source of not only physical but of moral diseases that now escape our notice.

Not long since I read of a village in Russia where the inhabitants were given over to the Cossacks, who killed the men and ravished the women. Remember, please, that sex is creative on all planes, and then tell me what was created when those sex-hungry wolves forced those women's persons till satiated. Terror and unspeakable anguish on one side, rage and contempt for their victims on the other, what could be created but a sex poison, a moral malaria? And the aura, the stench of that carnival of hell, did not stop there. Like the thistledown, it was carried by mental and physical currents far and wide.

There is one prevailing moral disease the malaria for which was not created there—deception, fraud. There was no hiding of purpose, no pretense. Yet the moral atmosphere is filled with aura of deception; and from whence does it come? How do I know that this is so? By the same law that I know the physical atmosphere is full of malaria when malarial fevers prevail. The effect of the invisible but potent aura of deception is equally apparent, but, forgetting what has already been said—to wit, that nature acts by general, not by partial, laws—we fail to connect cause and effect. Moral disease cannot exist without a cause any more than there can be malarial fever with no malaria in the atmosphere.

Whence does this diseased moral atmosphere come? Can terror, mental and physical agony, coupled with the burning heat of perverted passion, generate the elements of moral or physical integrity? But for the mutual, loving unions which radiate health and happiness, our race would soon perish; but in so-called civilized lands a large proportion of such relations must be kept secret, must be hidden from the prying eyes of those who place law above love; and an element of deception is generated, thus adulterating what would otherwise be an unmixed blessing.

But this Cossack hell of which I have spoken is but one of many. They exist more or less whenever there is war; and more, every marriage bed unsanctioned by love is a miniature hell in which the elements of disease and devilry, if not devils in fact, are generated; and yet we wonder that our prisons and asylums are filled to the overflowing and that disease is everywhere.

There is but one way to remedy these things, and Christians themselves declare it while they strangle its full meaning. "The seed of (the) woman shall bruise the serpent's head." It is true. Only through the full freedom of woman can the race overcome. By this interpolation of an extra "the" and confining the meaning to a personality born of woman, she has been robbed of what is rightfully hers. Here again man has failed to see that nature works not by partial but by general laws.

Personalities cannot save, cannot remove effects while causes remain untouched. Love is counted the redeeming power as manifested through Jesus, and what has 1900 years of it accomplished? Love will become the redeeming power when woman is wholly free and there is only the love aura generated in the sex relation. This is why I demand unqualified freedom for woman as woman, and that all the institutions of society be adjusted to such freedom. No really free woman will submit to an unwelcome embrace. Love, and love only, will be the sanction, and when the physical, mental and moral atmospheres are filled with the love aura of mutual sex relations there will be nothing to generate the evils which now prevail.

Oh, yes, I know that the idea of such freedom as we who see these principles advocate is terrible to the general mind, and so was the idea of the freedom of blacks to the slaveholder; but results have not justified his fears. Permit me here to relate what I know to be true.

In a community where motherhood is honored for its own sake not less is considered sufficient reason for its existence, a young woman is not pregnant. The parents did not frown; her lover continued to call her, and on her birthday her young friends gave her a surprise party. When her child was born both grandmothers were present, and all was harmonious. Now these illegal parents have two fine boys, a home of their own, and are entirely devoted to each other. What of the influence upon the young people of the place, do you ask?

There have been no more cases of the kind, nor will there be until the love that warrants parentage draws the right couples together. The young people there have been well instructed, and, being given the freedom which stops short of parentage, there is not the sex hunger which, by blinding the judgment, brings undesired results. In the freedom allowed they gather enough to prevent abnormal hunger while they learn whom they want for companions, thus preventing the mistakes that are made under the rule of repression in which the lack of legal sanction is considered an eternal disgrace to the woman.

I do not believe there is one young man in fifty who deliberately ruins, as it is called, a young girl. It is the strength of a mutual desire which becomes nearly if not quite irresistible. If all young men were treated as was the one in the case related, the man would seldom if ever forsake the woman.

If those who set law above love could see what they are doing they would stand appalled—could see how many innocent, loving girls they thus drive to prostitution; how many murders of the unborn, and of husbands and wives who, seeing no other way out and driven to frenzy by uncongenial relations, kill the legal companion. The attempt to hold the mightiest force in the universe to a given channel always has been a failure and always must be; but those who attempt it seem unable to learn their lesson.

Again I say, there is only one way in which the sex atmosphere can be purified from all uncleanliness, and that is to secure the conditions under which only love relations will be held, and in order to do this woman must be absolutely free! When man yields this and no longer casts contempt upon that which gave him being, race improvement will come as naturally as the sunshine. Can "animal passion" beget human beings? Man's desire to create, maybe, is often crowded down to a low human plane, but, I reassert, it is never animal. The lack of respect due to the highest creative force upon the planet is nowhere more apparent than in the terms animalism, animal passion. How can the race rise to a higher plane under such an estimate of that upon which human life depends?

Women should not be bound, for unwilling submission is a violation of nature's law. Only love relations are pure. Such relations can be secured only by yielding to woman the absolute right to herself. With only love relations between the sexes, the purity, strength, vitality of the atmosphere arising therefrom would render the race impervious to disease.

Preposterous! do you say? The Christian's Bible prophesies all this and more, and if there is any method of race climbing except upon the ladder of sex I have not found it. Those who have taken in a tithe of the meaning of the axiomatic truth that sex is the fountain of all life, not a part, will not say preposterous.

I have often asked physicians, of both sexes, and other intelligent persons the following questions: "If woman, no matter whether diffusive or exclusive in her love, never received the sex embrace except when she desired and from whom she desired, would there be such a thing known as sex disease?" The reply has always been a prompt "No" except in one instance, and that was a country physician, and he said: "I have not thought upon the subject."

But what have we now? Our best physicians, specialists in this line, tell us there is not one family in ten free from a taint of the vilest disease known. And how does this come about? The irresistible tide of sex life forces men of strong natures who have no other outlet to visit public women; then, becoming diseased, they visit the doctor. He applies his remedies and tells them they are not. The poison remains in the blood and manifests itself in various ways not supposed to be connected with the original cause. They marry and children are born with the taint in their blood, and this diseased condition often descends to the third and even the fourth generation.

Another statement of facts—but when taking them down I forgot to take the date; it was somewhere between 1889 and 1890, at a meeting of the Society of Medical Jurisprudence in New York City. Dr. E. D. Bean made the following statement:

"I find from statistics taken for the year 1857 that 14,770 persons were treated in the public institutions of New York City for syphilis, and that was considered about one fourth of the number treated in private practice."

This estimate was made for Kings county, in which are the cities of Brooklyn and New York. Dr. Bean could find no later statistics, but the disease has doubtless kept pace with the increasing population. And please remember that physicians are pledged to keep the secrets of their patients; consequently as long as the disease can be kept within bounds it is no bar to respectability, no bar to marriage which curses coming generations.

Here is race suicide for you. It is to prevent all this that we demand unqualified freedom for woman. With only mutually desired sex relations there would be no sex disease, and with woman really free there would be no other.

In the light of such facts the freedom of love, freelove, is not the vile thing it is supposed to be.

Lois Waisbrooker.

WHAT CHILDREN SHOULD BE TAUGHT.

When we come to the consideration of the question of sexual physiology in regard to the young, we find how little is known of the subject among their guardians. "There is too much talk about sexual matters nowadays," said a lady of my acquaintance the other day. For my part, I cannot understand how there can be too much grave discussion of the most vital of human concerns. Another woman, and a mother, once remarked in my hearing, "I hate to think of the physical side of love." I urge most earnestly that the influence of these misguided persons is as pernicious as that of the debauched libertines who find pleasure in corrupting children. It is mothers of this narrow judgment who attempt to train their children in utter ignorance of sex, a system that leaves the child's mind exposed to the contamination of surreptitious talks with servants and others. I grant that the question is a difficult one, more difficult, perhaps, than that of religious teaching. Still, deception must be cautiously avoided, and the more we make mystery of the matter of reproduction, the more curious will the child become. Most young children are satisfied with such explanation as the mother suggests, but boys and girls near puberty might be taught more explicitly with advantage.

I would inculcate modesty by every possible means. But, in my opinion, we pervert the child's mind at the outset by teaching him to think that the generative organs are under a kind of curse and ban, and that they are intrinsically "nasty." Such teaching is the outcome of Christian asceticism, and I am firmly convinced that it is a source of much evil. A species of contempt for wonderful organs, wonderfully adapted to noble processes, is thus engendered in the child's mind, and with this contempt there arises a tendency to prurience of thought, which grows apace at puberty, and ultimately develops into the sheer indecency that sees gross images in a thousand objects and gloats perpetually on the impure. Proscribe questioning and clean speech on sexual topics, and you immediately set up an irrepressible, more or less morbid curiosity. Many parents have a dread that physiological instruction will "destroy the poetry of love." There is not a greater fallacy. Is the pure white water-lily rendered the less lovely in your eyes because you know that its roots take hold of black river mud, composed of decayed vegetable matter? Science fosters admiration and respect for physical function, for the mating of men and women and the procreation of babes. It is clean, sane, and on the side of moral improvement. It is ignorance that destroys the poetry of love and life.

The potential influence of the mother over her sons is great. Unfortunately, such influence is rarely exerted. The reason will be found in the following passage from Mrs. Mona Caird's article on "Ideal Marriage":

"As a rule the best influence in a boy's or a young man's life comes to him outside the home. He is respectful to, and perhaps fond of his mother, but he does not (poor fellow, he cannot) trust her as a friend. She knows nothing, understands nothing. She has close-set, harsh little ideas, trim little maxims, wise little copy-book precepts to suggest as solutions to the hard problems of life."

This, alas! is only too true in very many instances. Women as a sex refuse to discuss certain topics; they deliberately prefer ignorance, or at best content themselves with quarter-truths. There is undoubtedly some validity in their excuse that many men wish them to be ignorant—innocents and babes in understanding; but as the tendency is now towards rebellion against masculine domination, it is to be hoped that women will speedily exhibit independence of thought in this direction, and acquaint their minds with facts about "the hard problems of life." They will then be better able to instruct and guide their sons and daughters.—Henry Maxwell, in the Free Review.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light: affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Subscribers who did not receive a copy of No. 1073 will please notify us. The paper was mailed at the usual time, but through some unaccountable delay city subscribers got their papers a week late.

THE CAMPAIGN OF EDUCATION.

Now that the campaign of partisan politics, which means a campaign of passion and prejudice, is at length ended, it is sincerely to be hoped that the much-talked-of "campaign of education" will now begin, and begin in earnest.

But how? What are the essential elements or factors of a campaign of education?

The word education is derived from educere, "to lead out." If this be the true meaning, then the business of the educator is not to cram or stuff his pupil with ideas, but to bring out what is already in the mind of the person taught. Education should not be a "pouring-in" process, like pouring water into an empty pitcher, but rather a drawing-out process—a waking up, a developing, a suggestive process.

The old Greeks understood this matter better than we. The word pedagogue means a "leader of boys"; one who guides, not one who crams another with his own thoughts or with the thoughts of a past generation; a boy among the boys, but who, having had larger experience, can show his younger companions how best to explore the fields of knowledge.

Didactic education—authoritarian methods, dogmatism, in religion, in politics, in social science or morals—these methods are well suited to make a nation of masters and slaves such as we now have, but they can never produce a commonwealth of equal citizens.

The greatest of all errors, however, in our educational system is the ignoring of the feminine element, and especially in the subordination of the mother, as factor in the social or ethical equation. Our religions are masculine; our politics, governments, are for and by men alone; and so likewise our colleges of learning, until a comparatively recent date, have been for boys and men only.

And even now the opportunities for obtaining knowledge on subjects the most needful for girls and women are narrow and meager. The knowledge of the duties and responsibilities of motherhood, and especially the knowledge that pertains to the uses and the abuses of the sex-nature, is systematically withheld from girls—except the few who expect to make the medical profession their calling in life. The popular impression seems to be that the best preparation for wifehood and motherhood is childlike ignorance of sex, its nature and functions.

It is much the same with sex-education for boys. Our "physiologies" for schools, while describing and giving minute instruction how to care for the respiratory apparatus, and also the digestive and circulatory systems, ignore entirely the reproductive. So true is this that a pupil may graduate at the high school of any of our cities and not know that there is any physiological difference between a girl and a boy. And yet, when we remember the suffering, the misery, the degeneracy, the insanity and the idiocy that arise from misdirected sex-power, it would seem that of all the departments of human knowledge this is most important.

Sexology, then, or sexologic science, from LUCIFER's standpoint, is the most necessary part of the primary education of each human being, and especially of the education of girls, the prospective women and mothers of the race, for the simple reason that woman as woman is the greater sufferer from the effects of ignorance, misdirection and abuse of the reproductive system, and because woman as mother enshrines in her physical organism the "creatory" of every new human being, and hence the effects of ignorance and misdirection on her part will have a more disastrous effect upon offspring than will like ignorance and error on the part of man.

Here, then, as some of us see it, is the greatest need for a campaign of education. A campaign not merely to teach woman how best to build, and how best to guard the interests of the unborn, but rather a campaign to rouse woman to a sense of responsibility to her helpless charge. A campaign that will make her so discontented with present social, economic, industrial and financial conditions that she will refuse to accept the coöperation of man in the work of reproduction until a radical revolution, not merely a political revolution, gives to the mother and to the prospective mother conditions under which she can do her best work in child-building, which work, it needs no argument to prove, takes precedence of all other human industries in magnitude and importance.

Patrick Henry said he knew no other guide for his feet than the lamp of experience. The experience of mankind shows that governmental systems are neither better nor worse than the people who make or who endure them. If, then, we would have better governmental systems we must first have better people. To have better people we must look to the primary education of the people, since earliest impressions are deepest and most permanent. The education of the nursery and primary school builds character, but there is an education still more primary and still more important, and that is the education of, or in, the creatory. And since woman as mother is the only teacher of this most primary of all primary schools, the first and most important thing to do in any campaign of education is to arouse woman to a sense of her responsibility in the work of education as well as in the work of creation.—Moses Harman, in LUCIFER, Nov. 13, 1896.

Mankind as a body is ungrateful, and will not thank you for benefits conferred nor see your good intentions to serve it if you step out of the beaten track. The sound reformer has no other encouragement than to bequeath his merited caresses to his senseless memory, or to enjoy them in anticipation. His patrons live not with him, but are to be his posterity, and from those persons with whom he lives he finds more of insults than of gratitude. * * * The life of a reformer would be intolerable if there were not some keensighted individuals who can see his ends and appreciate his motives, and who are bold enough to encourage him to proceed, and honest and benevolent enough to assist him.—Richard Carlile.

Whosoever designs the change of religion in a country or government, by any other means than that of general conversion of the people, . . . designs all the mischiefs to a nation that use to usher in or attend the two greatest distempers of a state—civil war or tyranny; which are violence, oppression, cruelty, rapine, intemperance, injustice; and, in short, the miserable effusion of human blood, and the confusion of all laws, orders and virtue among men. Such consequences as these, I doubt, are something more than the disputed opinions of any man or any assembly of men can be worth. —Sir William Temple.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 11 months and 1 day old. He has served 185 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan. Purely private subjects should be avoided, as all letters are read by prison officials and withheld if not approved. Do not ask questions requiring answer. All such questions, matter pertaining to LUCIFER, changes of addresses, etc., should be sent to the office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

U. S. P., LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Sept. 2, 1906.

My Dear Lillian—Glad to know that the home folks have not been prostrated by the hot weather. Here the mercury did not rise above 90, and Kansas breezes kept us fairly comfortable in the hospital. For several days just passed the showers have kept the temperature about right.

Of foreign letters received within the two weeks just past I thankfully acknowledge: Arthur Wastall, East London, South Africa, one, in which he says he tries to write me each month. This is the third, I think, from him since I was sent to Joliet, six months ago. He says he sent me picture cards of South African scenery. These did not reach me. Please ask him not to get discouraged. His letters and cards have not been forwarded from Joliet, but may yet arrive. Please ask him to write for us some account of the life and work of Lady Florence Dixie, to whose memory we owe much. Too bad that no mention of her death was made by us at the time it occurred.

From K. Koga, Kagoshima, Japan, comes a very good letter, in broken English, yet plain enough to be understood. Write him and send him the paper, addressed to the "Seventh High School," as above. From George and Louie Bedborough, of London, now on vacation at Christiania, Norway, I have received six picture cards, written at the old home of Henrik Ibsen. Glad to get clipping of poem by Herman Scheffauer in London Clarion. Think you might send me clippings from our home publications frequently without giving offense.

Other letters and cards from friends nearer home, with thanks. I have received since last writing: J. E. Boultenhouse, 5; O. H. Stone, 1; Annie E. Parkhurst and Henry M. Parkhurst, 2; S. R. Shepherd, 1; M. H. Coffin, 1; George B. Wheeler, 1, and clippings from Sunday Record-Herald; Thirza Rathbun, 1 (and second copy of poem, "And How Is the City?"); Olive M. LaBarre, 1; "The Chaplain," A. Johnson, 1; Ada Morley, 1; Albert Wichman, 1; Philip Peabody, 4; James Myers, 1; J. Allen Evans, 1; Sara C. Campbell, 1; W. P. Austin, 1; C. N. Greene, 1.

Glad you are going to send me Sunday Record-Herald regularly—one copy received. "Old Melodies Spiritualized" received from H. W. Hoover, the author. Book of songs received from J. F. Ruggles.

Of magazines, have received for September, McClure's, Cosmopolitan, Everybody's, Physical Culture, Tomorrow; for August, Appleton's and Cosmopolitan. Also four copies of Woman's Tribune.

Have you read "The Woman Who Toils," by Bessie and Marie Van Vorst? I consider it one of the best books in the prison library list. Have you read Jack London's books, "The People of the Abyss" and "The Call of the Wild"? I read these in Joliet prison, and since I came here have read his "Son of a Wolf" and "The Sea Wolf"—prison library books. London wields a powerful pen, and when he tells of what he himself has seen and heard I like to read it; but when he draws on his creative fancy for pictures like that of the captain of the "Ghost," a piratical schooner in the "sealing" business, I am repelled, not to say disgusted. "Wolf Larsen" is more than a "Sea Wolf;" he is a second edition of Milton's "Prince of Devils." With superhuman strength, superhuman cunning and courage, utterly devoid of conscience or sympathy for suffering, he is the incarnation of egoistic, individualistic, materialistic selfishness or greed.

Was it because the modern socialistic propaganda needs a "devil," a "bogie," to scare people into being good—good "collectivists" or good socialists—that such a monstrosity should be created?

John Milton was a theologian of the puritanic school or cult. Puritanism needed a devil, a personification of the power of evil. John Milton seems to have undertaken to supply that need, that demand, in the hero of his world-famous epic, "Paradise Lost." To do this he gathered up the traditions of the "elders," the various writers of the Christian scriptures; also the imaginings of the "father of the church," and out of these he constructed a wonderfully realistic story. To get a striking name for his hero Milton was guilty of a gross perversion of the scriptures he professed to believe and honor. In the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah, beginning at the fourth verse, the prophet is directed to "take up this proverb against the king of Babylon." By a bold metaphor, in the twelfth verse, this king of Babylon is addressed as "Lucifer, son of the morning"—the ancient and etymologically correct name of the Morning Star. In no proper sense does the name apply to the personification of evil.

Like too many other modern writers and speakers, Jack London follows Milton in his unscholarlike, not to say dishonest, perversion of one of the most beautiful and inspiring names and symbolisms of astronomic science. Milton was too good a scholar not to know better, but in the case of many of his imitators it is a sin of ignorance rather than of intention.

To all who care for the truth of this controversy I would respectfully commend Webster's unabridged dictionary, edition of 1880, page 792, where this use of the name of Lucifer is called "one of those gross perversions of sacred writ," etc.; also see page 1621 of the same volume: "Lucifer is no proper or Satanic title," etc.

I like Jack London and think him a wonderfully strong writer; hence all the more I regret that he puts enmity between the two principles on which all human progress rests, viz: individualism and socialism. All of us are both individualists and socialists!

Am slowly mending, I think. With love always, M. HARMAN.

Here's freedom for him that wad read;
Here's freedom for him that wad write;
There's nane ever feared that the truth should be heard
Save them that the truth wad indict. —Robert Burns.

WHAT WE HAVE LEARNED OF HEREDITY.

Every one knows that there is a resemblance between parents and offspring. To what extent is this common or necessary, and what laws govern its transmission? These questions were wrapped in mystery until recently, but today we are beginning dimly to surmise some of the answers. The present state of our knowledge, most of which is only a few years old, is summarized by Prof. L. Cuénot, of the University of Nancy, France, in a lecture printed in the "Revue Scientifique" (Paris, April 28). Says the speaker:

"The fact must be insisted on that the substance of the new individual is the sum of the two germs furnished by the parents. Now there is no doubt that our good qualities and our defects are both dependent on our material structure. . . . Education and the influence of environment may perhaps modify this heredity, but to what extent? Here is the grave and difficult problem of moral responsibility which confronts us so often in the courts and in society. . . .

"This hereditary descent of all sorts of characteristics has long been noticed. . . . It has been felt that there must be rules to regulate it, and attempts have been made to discover them. . . . Of recent years the application of the experimental method has thrown a bright light on these phenomena. The common gray mouse and the white or albino mouse are both well known. When these two forms are crossed the offspring are like the gray parent, and we may say that there is 'dominance' of the gray characteristics; the white is hidden by the other and is 'dominated' or 'latent.' But continue the experiment; crossing two of the hybrids, we have not only gray mice, but also white ones, fewer in number. If the crossing be continued we find that there are always three grays to one white.

"How shall we interpret this? Here is one hypothesis: The parental elements cannot fuse together; they remain separate, half being gray (G), half white (B). When we cross the hybrids we may thus have four combinations:

Gray × gray (GG).
Gray × white (GB).
White × gray (GB).
White × white (BB).

These four combinations will give the following results:

Gray × gray = gray of pure breed.
Gray × white and white × gray = gray of impure breed, like the parent hybrids.
White × white = white of pure breed.

We may express this result more briefly as follows:

$$GB \times GB = 1\,GG + 2\,GB + 1\,BB,$$

which corresponds to the results of experience. Crossing a gray mouse of impure breed, containing the white breed in the 'latent' state, we have an equal number of grays and whites. . . . This is because only two combinations were possible:

Gray × white = gray of impure breed (GB).
White × white = white of pure breed (BB).

"Very long and delicate experiments give results that conform so well to the theoretical predictions that there must be some truth in the hypothesis; the phenomena seems widely extended both in the animal and vegetable world. . . . If it be true, man has the wonderful power of being able to transmit to his children not only his visible 'dominant' qualities but equally a host of latent characteristics that he may possess."

This fundamental experiment is due to Gregor Mendel, an Austrian monk, who made it in 1865, but it passed unnoticed until 1900, since which time it has been thoroughly investigated and has brought posthumous fame to its author. The "Mendelian" type of heredity, which it represents, appears to be the most frequent, as it is the simplest. There are others, however, Mr. Cuénot tells us, that are more complex. One of these represents the crossing of a white, red-eyed mouse with another red-eyed mouse having a tawny yellow coat. Says the author:

"We should expect to find hybrids all with red eyes, like the parents, and with yellow or white skin; but this is not the case. The result is rather paradoxical; the descendants all have black eyes, gray backs, and whitish bellies, while their eyes are certainly larger than those of their parents. . . . Instead of presenting the phenomena of 'dominance' the parental characteristics have combined to produce a new result. . . . When crossed again these hybrids produce a strange variety of forms: (1) Black mice; (2) gray mice with whitish bellies like their parents; (3) white with red eyes like one grandparent; (4) yellow with red eyes; (5) pearl-gray with red eyes. These have fixed numerical relations, which appear to be as follows: Of sixteen young ones we have eight with black eyes (two black, six gray with white bellies) and eight with red eyes (four white, three yellow, one pearl-gray). There has taken place a separation of characteristics and also a decomposition, resulting in absolutely new forms."

Thus, the writer tells us, we are beginning to understand some of the rules of heredity, and already we are able to explain a few facts that have bothered students in the past. For instance, there is atavism, or the sudden appearance of a characteristic of a long-forgotten ancestor. According to modern ideas, it is not necessary to suppose, as Darwin and Weismann do, that an actual portion of ancestral substance has been transmitted along the line of descent; the atavism is due simply to a combination of germinative elements that reproduces a former combination. The interest of these researches, the author notes, reaches beyond the field of pure science. It is of vast importance in daily life, in the study of history, in the practice of medicine. Personal traits, the ability of a statesman, the taint of disease in a noble family—all follow, doubtless, the law laid down by Mendel. In closing, Mr. Cuénot gives us this practical advice:

"Almost every one has either visible blemishes or latent tendencies to disease, which last are as important as the first from the point of view of transmission, as we have seen. If you wish, so far as you can accomplish it, that your children should remain untouched, avoid marriage with families that have blemishes or tendencies similar to yours. I am fully aware that advice is easier to give than to follow; man, who has been applying for centuries processes of selection to his domestic animals, has not understood that he might apply the same to his descendants with advantage. Nevertheless, robust health and a safe inheritance are better than a big dowry, as we may well believe."—Literary Digest.

DO WE GROW CONVENTIONAL WITH AGE?

I was just reading a letter from a friend, who quotes Ella Wheeler Wilcox as saying that "All men as they grow older tend toward respectability more and more. The paramour does not hold that position in the eyes of the world; hence a man tires of her."

Now, I don't just dote on Ella. She is just a little shallow. She used to write passionate poetry that was just on the verge. Then she married a millionaire, and since then has set up to be spiritual adviser to the world in general on the syndicate plan. Men do not grow more conventional as they grow older. Most men—and women, too—are conventional in their beliefs. They are sheep, and follow in the beaten track. But in youth passions are strong, and as passion often clashes with conventionality, the weaker impulse goes to the wall and passion wins. In that case the parties may profess unconventionality, but at heart they think they are doing wrong. As they grow older and passion cools, people such as this profess to have changed their views and become "respectable." As a matter of fact, they always were sheep in wolves' clothing, to transpose the old metaphor—sheep in that they naturally followed the beaten path. The man and woman who are liberal from conviction do not grow more conventional as they grow older. We do not hear that George Eliot and George Henry Lewes respected or loved each other less as they grew older. On the contrary, Herbert Spencer, in his "Autobiography," says of them:

"So far as I saw (and I had many opportunities of seeing) they exceeded any married pair that I have known in the constancy of their companionship, and his studious care of her was manifest. I remember that on one occasion when, perhaps during a temporary mood, I had been saying that, though possessed of so many advantages, I valued life but little save for the purpose of finishing my work, they both of them ascribed my feeling to lack of the domestic affections, and simultaneously exclaimed that their great sorrow was that the time would soon come when death would part them." (Vol. ii, p. 375.)

Ella spends a good deal of her time finding reasons for tying us tighter to Mrs. Grundy's apron-strings. Men who are liberals from principle respect their paramours as much after they get older as they did when they were younger. It is only those who never were liberals at heart who feel otherwise. Mrs. Wilcox's statement is only in line with the general Christian position that all freethinkers recant on their death-beds. This accounts for the stories of the death-bed conversion of Voltaire, Tom Paine and Ingersoll. They are the outcome of the conventional mind which cannot grasp the idea of liberality in thought. They believe in their hearts that all liberals are hypocrites, because the conventional or sheep type of mind cannot grasp the idea of any broader mental horizon than its own.

W. C. Cote.

Louisville, Ky.

A widow was surprised weeping over the tomb of her dear husband. "Ah, signora, your tears will not bring him back!" "That is just why I am crying."—Il Mondo Umoristico.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

Mrs. M. E. B., San Jose, Cal.—I have known your father for many years; met him first at Clinton, Iowa, at the camp, where I first subscribed for Lucifer; have always felt an interest in the cause it advocated, knowing full well how much better the world would be and how much more happiness if the teachings of Lucifer were generally understood. You will please find enclosed $2 to apply on my subscription.

Dr. Juliet H. Severance, Chicago.—I met a speaker at Clinton Camp who is able, radical and fearless. She is not posted on the postal tyranny. I want to send her documents, but have sent all I had away. I would like you to send her Wakeman's and Post's letters and any other documents you think most educative on that line. She is pretty well posted on the sex question. Lucifer is none the less interesting since its editor is away.

W. C. Cote, Louisville, Ky.—I inclose a clipping from the "Literary Digest" showing that heredity is not a matter of blind chance but can be predicted with a good deal of certainty and controlled by the exercise of forethought. It is a hopeful sign when our popular magazines publish articles such as this and Burbank's article in "Scribner's." When the people become educated persecutions like that of your father will become impossible.

J. W. Gibbs, Fargo, N. D.—I have been off on a three weeks' trip to North Dakota. Stood a day or two ago looking at a field of grain where, when the reapers started in with the machines, they would make one trip to the end and only get back at night. Have been reading a booklet by a friend of mine, Mr. George L. Rusby, of New York, that deals with the land question and single tax, and makes one wonder what our children and their children will have to contend with soon.

L. E. Starr, Pepperell, Mass.—I did not know that my subscription had run out and I am very glad to send the check for its continuation and wish I could increase the check a hundredfold. I know you are fighting a battle for humanity and have to suffer for your advanced ideas. God bless the advance beings who light the way! I think I owe my knowledge of your paper to Comrade John North, of Boston. Unless I die or become demented I wish to see the paper as long as it continues to carry out its present policy.

Edwin C. Walker, New York.—I suppose that if the unanalytical hater of the word "pardon" should find in a newspaper an article headed, "The Beef Trust in Australia," while the entire article was devoted to tulip culture in Holland, she would insist that the heading exactly described the article. The word "pardon" in the instance under discussion was, as I said, a mere technical formality which meant nothing to the framers of the document it headed, the intention and attitude of the writer of the petition being found in the document itself.

J. W. Kelley, Marion, Ind.—When you write your father please give him my love. I often think of what he is suffering for the cause of freedom. Some day humanity will erect over his tomb a monument around which the people will often assemble to do homage. The world has always crucified its saviors, and the end is not yet. The annual camp meeting of the Indiana Spiritualist Association was held at Chesterfield, Ind. I was delighted to find the grounds, which are very beautiful, in the control of people who are well educated in the philosophy of both spiritualism and freedom. It's a good place to rest and recuperate.

A Scotsman.—By all means keep on printing our grand old man's picture until such time as he removes it himself, and why not, man's picture until such time as he removes it himself, and why not, by way of contrast, insert on the same pages a picture of Theodore Roosevelt—one of those which show him engaged in his favorite blood-sports? It would have been somewhat of a degradation to have your father sue for or accept "executive clemency" at the hands of such as he. The creatures he "pardons" are traffickers in girlhood, like Bob Smith, whom he let loose on society when governor of New York. This protected criminal with an awful record was again before the courts a couple of months ago, this time for the abduction of young girls and holding them in brothel slavery, when Judge Cowling sentenced him to twenty years in the state prison. To my thinking the death penalty, if righteous anywhere, is for such as he.

Frederick E. Palmer, Brookline, Mass.—Your letter to Emily P. B. is before me, under date July 16. She has been away from here for two years, having had to take an invalid mother to California. She introduced Lucifer to me many years ago, for which I am very thankful, my life having been broadened and purified by your father's noble writings. I have paid the subscription during all those years, although the paper up to now has come in her name. I enclose $5, which you may apply to any use you wish outside of a year's renewal of subscription. With most affectionate regard for your father in his persecution and best wishes for the paper.

J. G. Hunter, Sheridan, Wyo.—I do not want the paper to be forced to succumb, for I am strongly interested in doing what Mr. Harman would wish, as I have the highest admiration for his courage, so I enclose a trifle in this, to be used for whatever you think best; although if it could be used to make the condition of Mr. Harman more comfortable I think I would rather have it invested in that manner than in any other; but possibly he would rather have it used to benefit the paper, so use it as you think best. Would have written to Mr. Harman, but do not expect my letter would pass the officials of the prison. Would like to have a photo of Mr. Harman and grandson. Yours for freedom.

A. Tyler, Springfield, Mo.—I am heartily in sympathy with the lofty ideas of Lucifer, and if I was financially able I would send more than the $1 herein inclosed. While the sex problem is of vast importance, it is only one of the thousand ills we are subject to under the reign of capitalistic brutishness called, by those who administer it, law. The money power knows nothing but to strangle every free thought and keep the common people in ignorance. Their agitation against "race suicide" is merely for the purpose of replenishing the child-slave market, as a stockman advises the breeding of more mules if he is a purchaser for the cotton fields. I am glad your father is at Leavenworth and got away alive from Joliet.

Arthur Wastall, 3 Amalinda Road, East London, Cape Colony.—No. 1068 is just to hand. I am relieved somewhat to learn by it that your father is making the best of his untoward conditions, and that there is now every likelihood of his pulling through triumphantly. To such as he even defeat means simply "reculer pour mieux sauter." I note, too, that he has at least received one of my monthly letters. It will rejoice him to hear how his hands are being strengthened by the formation of such societies as the one of Sanitary and Moral Prophylaxis of New York, and the Anti-Puritan League of London. Comstockism must expect to get some pretty hard hits from those quarters, I'm thinking.

I was glad to see Thomas Hardy's poem to an unborn pauper child in your last issue. It has suggested to me a way whereby some at least of the great army of "unwanted," which would seem to be daily increasing, might find the "health, love, friends, scope in full" and all that Hardy dare hope for them on arrival here. The affair is comparatively simple, given the cooperation of a few energetic organizers. Let a Harman colony be founded where land and the means of subsistence are cheap, such as on the high and healthy table lands of British East Africa. The "illegitimates" of Johannesburg alone, now for the most part done to death before or shortly after birth, and if allowed to live, certainly deprived of proper parental love and training, would furnish child colonists in plenty to make a start with, and if proper care were exercised in the selection of adult members, and the concern run on lines that Moses Harman would himself approve, I see no reason why successful results should not be obtained. Children of white parents born on the Kikuyu plateau, which is 8,000 feet above sea level and 360 miles from the coast and now reached by rail, have rosy cheeks, which speaks sufficiently, I think, of the suitability of the climate, although the latitude is but 1 degree below the equator.

Are there none amongst Lucifer readers who will join me in some such an effort to practicalize our ideas of freedom here in Africa? I have visited this spot, which Dr. Theodore Hertzka selected as the site for the Freeland scheme, and know of none in the world better suited for this project of perpetuating in a practical manner the memory of the man who is now suffering deprivation of liberty in order that we may enjoy it the more. He cannot be much longer with us at best, and it would be fitting that some such a surprise should be prepared for him on his liberation a few months hence. This is but a throw-out; let those who have better and more matured plans come forward with them, but let us act at once. It was Goethe who said:

> "Are you in earnest? Seize this very minute:
> What you can do, or dream you can, begin it;
> Boldness has genius, power, and magic in it.
> Only engage, and then the mind grows heated;
> Begin, and then the work will be completed."

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Price, 5c each; 25c a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Do You Want Free Speech?

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Concentrated, but comprehensive. It is specially valuable at the present crisis, since it is the only pamphlet exposing the entire conspiracy against free speech in America. The facts it cites are startling, but absolutely verifiable. The brochure is needed by all who would realize whither we are drifting, the magnitude of the issue we are called on to face, the fundamental principles involved in the battle for free speech, and the means of combatting the enemies of liberty. Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

START a business of your own. Make barbers' supplies. We teach you free by mail. Puritan Correspondence School, 619 Third street, Louisville, Ky. 1077

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 119 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

The American Institute of Phrenology.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,

52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.

1456 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1074

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

What the Young Need to Know.

A PRIMER OF SEX RATIONALISM.

BY E. C. WALKER.

SUGGESTIONS OF CONTENTS: Is There Necessity for This Knowledge? Analogous Dangers and Safeguards. Unwisdom of Custom-sanctioned Ignorance. Teachers Better if of Opposite Sex. Revelations of the Subject. Definitions of Sex. Evolution of Sex; Differentiation. Reproduction Less and Less Perilous. Inestimable Value of Use. Joy In Production Less and Less Perilous. Inestimable Value of Use. Joy In Production. The Deciding Majority of Two. The Tendency to Multiplicity. Upbuilding while bearing child after child, as thousands of wives are doing all over the world. I should consider it a crime against my children.

If a woman associates in any way with any man who has as little respect for her and for her truthfulness that he cannot believe her word in regard to the paternity of her child, she should, if a truthful and self-respecting woman, be anxious to break off such association immediately. No man, either in marriage or out, can have any assurance of his paternity other than his confidence in the truthfulness of the mother. And marriage by no means always gives that assurance. Many married men accuse their wives of attempted deceit,—and yet the children continue to come!

If you have an impulse to help yourself to gloves when on shopping expeditions, and only the fear of being "caught" causes you to refrain from doing so, there will surely come a day when you will think no one is looking and you will "fall." There must be a higher and a better reason for self-control than the fear of being "found out." That reason will often be ineffective. I have never told my child that god, ghost, devil, bogaboo or policeman would get her if she helped herself to the belongings of others. But if I thought there existed any good reason for any certain line of conduct I gave her that reason. For instance, there is a law against plucking flowers in the public parks. I have never even mentioned to her the existence of that law. But I told her that while it would be very pleasant if there were enough flowers in the parks for all to carry away all they cared for, yet, as there were not, the only way in which all could enjoy them is to leave them growing. By so doing we can all enjoy their beauty and fragrance, whereas if a few, in thoughtless selfishness, helped themselves, soon there would be none for any of us to enjoy. A policeman is not always in sight, but the inner sense of reason and justice can be always with us, and should be cultivated instead of the fear of bogaboos and policemen which is so universally instilled in the minds of little children, and of men and women—children of larger growth—as well.

As to your question regarding father's indorsement of G. V. Lamb's letter: He has not seen it, nor any issue of LUCIFER since last February. But it is not to be assumed that he agrees with everything which appears in LUCIFER, even when he is at home. One of his fundamental principles is his advocacy of the right of every one to "have his say in his own way," and he believes in making LUCIFER, so far as is possible in its small space, a free platform where all sides may be heard, leaving the reader free to choose that which may seem most reasonable. He has never been prosecuted for any of his own writings. Many people have gone to prison in defense of their right to express their own opinion,—as the pilgrim fathers endured the privations of emigration in order to worship their god in their own way and force all others to do the same,—but I do not know of any one besides my father who has gone to prison for the right of others to express opinions at variance with his own.

As to the Japanese story, it was merely a picture of life as it is in Japan. It seemed to me of interest, showing as it does the evils which may result from the customs of parental choice and control of mating, and the abominable restrictions of caste, which prevent the open recognition of love relations between members of different castes. If I have on my walls a picture of a flame-swept prairie it does not necessarily imply that I approve of the fire for burning. The engineer from whose engine the spark flew that ignited the grass may not be to blame. Yet the picture may be of interest, and we may moralize on the ways in which the catastrophe might have been prevented. And the Japanese picture will certainly arouse thought, and thereby its purpose will be served.

Reverting to the question of "impulse" again: I may feel impelled to make a trip to California with a woman friend. Certainly there is no law to prevent my yielding to that desire. But I would, of course, consider the circumstances and count the cost before starting. And if one should do so in regard to a matter so relatively trivial, why not be at least as prudent in relations which may invoke into being a new life, with its immeasurable possibilities of good or ill? It was Paul, the great law-giver for women, was it not, who said, "All things are lawful unto me, but all things are not expedient"?

It is my opinion that "dirty impulses" should be eliminated. Do not forget that it is law which grants "license." And I maintain that if an impulse is in itself "dirty" it cannot be purified by the license of marriage.

In conclusion, and in regard to my name: My father and my mother gave me the name Lillian when I was born, and it has pleased me sufficiently to leave me no desire to change it. My brother was named George Harman, and he has kept his name, also—"though married." When people address him they have no doubt he has reached maturity, and so call him "Mr. Harman," and do not feel it necessary to ask if he is married and therefore entitled to the prefix "Mr." instead of "Master." Personally, I do not care whether I am called "Miss" or "Mrs.," but I think matters would be greatly simplified if all women were called "Mrs.," just as all men are called "Mr."

LILLIAN HARMAN.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR IN PRISON.

From a bundle of letters recently received from Leavenworth I select the following. Many others are equally interesting, and I would gladly print them if space would permit. The friendly writers may be sure that each letter is received and read with great pleasure, and that they do much to lighten the imprisonment:

My Dear Mr. Harman: I think we have the public mind well started. Shaw, Gorky and Comstock are doing great work in calling attention to the stupid prudery of our time. There is no weapon like ridicule against that sort of thing.

I hear you spoken of everywhere with the greatest admiration and affection, which I heartily share.

There was a splendid article, with cuts, in a late Evening Sun, New York, laughing at the raid on the Art School. Pleydell sent it to Lillian. These are great times to live, even in prison. Your friend,

BOLTON HALL.

The article referred to by Mr. Hall appeared in No. 1073 under the heading, "The Comstockian Renaissance." It was erroneously credited to the Sun instead of to the Evening Sun.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 13.—Dear Brother Harman: ——— ——— ———

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANIN J AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF; OR ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF SPEECH, OR OF THE PRESS; OR THE RIGHT OF THE PEOPLE PEACEABLY TO ASSEMBLE, AND TO PETITION THE GOVERNMENT FOR A REDRESS OF GRIEVANCES.—First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

LUCIFER No. 1076 will be dated October 11—one day before the seventy-sixth anniversary of the birth of its editor, Moses Harman. That issue will be devoted chiefly to biographical matter concerning him. A portrait which has not before appeared in LUCIFER will be printed; also portraits of his family. If extra copies are desired we would like to receive orders as early as possible.

IGNORING AND DEFYING THE COMSTOCK LAW.

Commenting upon the usual miscarriage of justice in the federal courts, as illustrated in the recently tried cases of Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, Henry C. Roberts of Bennington, Kan., an old and well-seasoned captain in the Light-Bearer army, asks some pertinent and very timely questions—see LUCIFER No. 935:

"What should be the attitude of free and independent women and men of our country toward arbitrary and invasive laws such as the Comstock law, enacted through rascality and fraudulent methods of unprincipled men? Should not their efforts be constantly to ignore and bring into disrepute such corrupt and vicious laws, to the end that they may be repealed? . . . Cannot the comrades now see that they have slighted the grandest opportunity to trample on the vile creature of Comstock—the law by which the noblest, the most indefatigable of the workers in the cause of the most vital reform of all the centuries, the reform of sex ethics, that is to say, the reform of our antiquated marriage system, are held up and robbed not only of their just meed of praise but of their small savings, the result of forced economy and of the strictest frugality?"

Having waited a few weeks and seeing no response to those timely and pertinent questions, I will venture to give my own opinion in regard to them, premising once more that what I may say is given for what it is worth, and not by authority of LUCIFER, as is notoriously the custom of editors. The closing sentence of Brother Roberts' letter is in these words:

"In fact I cannot avoid the conviction that the question is up to the reformers for immediate settlement—whether a bad, a vicious law should be respected and obeyed or whether it should be rejected, discarded, trampled down and brought into contempt of the people, that thus it may become a dead letter."

A few years ago, within the recollection of many who may care to read these confidential talks, men were sent to prison in this country for the alleged crime of helping fugitive slaves to gain their liberty. Knowing, as we all know, the force of law-abiding habits, of conformity to immemorial usages, it is not too much to say that if it had not been for the rebellious courage of those who went to prison, and who willingly submitted to be held up and robbed of their hard earnings rather than obey the fugitive-slave law, we might today be a nation of slave-catchers and slave-drivers, as in the days when the southern oligarchy dictated the politics and social ethics for the people of the United States.

Is not the Comstock postal law to all intents and purposes a new fugitive-slave law?

Let us see: The old fugitive-slave law was designed to perpetuate the form of human slavery that denied self-ownership to the African race. The Comstock law, as can easily be shown, is designed to perpetuate the form of slavery that denies to woman the ownership of her person, the control of her creative powers and functions. This it does by denying the right of free discussion, free investigation into or upon "sex ethics" looking towards "reform of our antiquated marriage system"—quoting the language of Brother Roberts.

Illustrative and in proof of this statement I will here ask unanimous consent of my readers while I give a bit of personal history. Sixteen years ago a letter was printed in LUCIFER giving a realistic account of the treatment of a young wife by her worse than brutal husband, illustrating the legal maxim that the crime of rape is unknown in wedlock, that "once consent means always consent." Plain and forcible language was used in this letter, but none of the words that purists and prudists could call "obscene." For printing and mailing this plainly worded protest against the denial to woman of the right of self-ownership I was prosecuted, tried and condemned in the Kansas federal court. When delivering his sentence of five years in the penitentiary and a fine of $300, Judge Caseius G. Foster read me a fatherly lecture in which he stated with much precision of language that the gravamen, the head and front of my offense was the attempt to bring odium upon our marriage institution. As much as to say that the outrages committed under sanction of marriage laws and customs, the social ulcers sheltered and condoned by our church-state marriage institution, must not be exposed to the light of day.

As some of LUCIFER's household may not have heard of this episode in my life history, I will add that after serving four months of this five-year sentence I was released and granted a new trial on account of informality of sentence—the judge having forgot to add "at hard labor" when sending me to the penitentiary. After many delays and postponements the case was taken up by Judge John F. Philips of the same court, who sentenced me to one year at hard labor in the penitentiary, without fine. This sentence was served out to the letter in the federal prison at Fort Leavenworth—less two months' credit for "good behavior." Meantime, however, while awaiting the new trial for printing the first letter—written by W. G. Markland—I was tried and sentenced by Philips to one year in the penitentiary for printing the "O'Neill" letter, written by a New York physician to show the propriety and necessity of such revelations as those contained in the Markland letter. Of this last-named sentence I served eight months in the Kansas penitentiary, the sentence of Judge Philips having been decided irregular by Judge Brewer, then of the United States Circuit Court.

These various prosecutions occupied nearly ten years, all told, during which years I was either in prison or under bonds awaiting trial—all because of printing a manly protest against the enslavement of womanhood and motherhood under our "antiquated marriage system."

This episode in my personal history is here presented—in as few words as possible—not because I am fond of recalling such experiences, but rather to show that, as men went to prison rather than obey the old fugitive-slave law, so they also have gone to prison rather than obey the new fugitive-slave law. While the prosecutions, as a sword, were held over my head, I republished, more than once, the offending articles, believing I had done no wrong and that it was right and proper that the American public should know just what the offense was that could put a publisher's liberty and property in jeopardy.

In last LUCIFER, quoting from Emerson, I said there were those for whom I would go to prison if need be. This brief recital shows that I have gone to prison for the sake of those whom I consider my best friends, the mothers of the race, the mothers enslaved by the antiquated, the irrational, the barbarous, the inhuman, the priest-middlemen-made marriage laws; the laws that put the person of the wife in the power, the arbitrary, the irresponsible power, of the husband.

Returning to the letter of Brother Roberts, I have only to add that I, too, "cannot avoid the conviction that the question 'is up' to the reformers for immediate settlement—whether a vicious law should be respected and obeyed or whether it should be rejected, discarded, trampled down and brought into contempt of the people, that thus it may become a dead letter." It will certainly never become a dead letter so long as it is feared, respected and obeyed. It is sometimes said that the best way to secure the repeal of a bad law is to enforce it. But how can a law be enforced so long as it is feared and obeyed? A law that is obeyed needs no enforcement. The old fugitive-slave law became a dead letter and was superseded by the "Fourteenth Amendment," because it was not obeyed, and could not be enforced without sending to prison many thousands of American citizens. Now let a similar revolt be inaugurated against the new fugitive-slave law. Let every one who believes in liberty of speech and press openly and fearlessly ignore and violate this law, and go to prison if need be in defense of that liberty, and soon the Comstock postal law will share the fate of its illustrious type and predecessor.

I shall doubtless be asked if I am willing to take my own advice, my own prescription, and "take my medicine like a little man," if it should lead again—as it led in the past—to imprisonment in the penitentiary.

Not hastily, not rashly, but with careful deliberation and with the fullest knowledge, based upon experience, of what my words mean, I answer Yes! a thousand times Yes!

As often said before in these columns, I crave not imprisonment—I have no ambition to be a martyr for the sake of the honor and glory of martyrdom. I love my freedom—such as it is—too well to choose the restraints, the privations, the indignities inseparable from prison life; but believing as I do that only in this way can the power of the Modern Inquisition be effectually broken, that only in this way can the emancipation of womanhood and motherhood be achieved—and through the emancipation of mothers from sex-slavery the emancipation of the race be achieved from all other slaveries—thoroughly believing all this, I am willing to serve my kindred, my friends, my race, by still another term behind prison bars, clothed with a "convict's" coarse and striped garments and fed on a convict's ill-selected, meager and unhygienic rations.—M. Harman, in Lucifer, October 26, 1902.

ATTENTION, FREETHINKERS!

[Under this caption the following suggestion appears in Tomorrow Magazine for October, and is reprinted here by request.]

The time to organize the forces of free thought, free press and free speech will be when Moses Harman comes home from jail.

Let us have a free-thought convention in Chicago at that time. Let us have delegates from every state, and organize a national association on the widest and most comprehensive lines, with state and local organizations fully provided for.

Let us give Moses Harman a home-coming that will put Bryan's New York reception in the shade, and so impress the opponents of free press and free speech that Harman may be the last martyr in their cause.

Come now, all together—down Comstock, up Harman.

NOT FOR SHAW, THANK YOU.

Marc Klaw, of the firm of Klaw & Erlanger, who made the contract with G. Bernard Shaw for the production of his satirical historical comedy-drama, "Cæsar and Cleopatra," which will be presented at the New Amsterdam Theater Oct. 29 by Forbes Robertson and Gertrude Elliott, has been endeavoring to induce the Irish author to come to America to be present at the production of his play. Among other inducements Mr. Shaw was assured that he would have "a royal time." Mr. Klaw received this postal card from Mr. Shaw:

"COAST OF CORNWALL, Sept. 2.—It is just that royal reception that makes it impossible for me to come. If I could come quietly, without convulsing America, without delivering a hundred addresses to enormous crowds, without a salute of 101 guns, without the risk of being forcibly naturalized and elected president, and subsequently seized and imprisoned by Mr. Comstock, then I might come. As it is, I prefer the quiet and retirement of London. Besides, I am writing a new play—an astonishingly good one. I had no idea I had so much left in me. It has delayed my reply somewhat, but you will forgive me. G. B. SHAW."

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 75 years 11 months and 15 days old. He has served 199 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan. Purely private subjects should be avoided, as all letters are read by prison officials and withheld if not approved. Do not ask questions requiring answer. All such questions, matter pertaining to LUCIFER, changes of addresses, etc., should be sent to the office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

U. S. P., LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Sept. 16, 1906.

My Dear Lillian: The last two letters received from you were dated Sept. 6 and 7, containing letters from Myra Weller and Victor Robinson. My last letter to you was delayed by holiday. Sent you a package of letters by mail about ten days ago. Did you get them? Hope you did. Among the letters sent you are several that I should be sorry to have lost; for instance, one from Arthur Wastall, East London, South Africa; one from Bolton Hall, New York; one from D. Kotoku, Japan, and one from Maude J. P. Hazelton, Kansas City, Mo., who very kindly invites me to call at her place when on my way home from prison. Please write her my sincerest thanks and say I will gladly make her a brief call if other arrangements will permit, provided, always, that I face till the time set for my release, which is the day after next Christmas. Letters just named were not listed in my previous letters to you, having reached me since Sept. 2.

Other letters and cards received since that date are the following, many of the cards being pictures of noted persons or places, with a few words of friendly greeting: Philip O. Peabody, 4; John E. Boultenhouse, 12; George V. Williams, 1; Annie Connolly, 1; Flora W. Fox, 1; George Bodborough, 4; O. L. Harvey, 1; Parker H. Sercombe (editor Tomorrow), 2; Lillian, 3; H. W. Booser (with clippings), 1; J. Francis Ruggles, 1; F. A. DeCrane, 1; Thirza Rathbun, 1; E. M. Dewey, 1; Mrs. F. M. B. Morse, 1; Mrs. Myra Weller, 2; W. W. Miller, 1; Elizabeth H. Russell, 1; Koichi Kaneko, 1; George B. Wheeler, 1; "Frank," 1; J. Allen Evans, 1; Ada M. Morley, 1; Emma Greene, 1; C. N. Greene, 1; M. E. Sharrai, 1; Arthur Wastall, 3; J. Herbert Rowell, 1 (with leaflets). From H. W. Booser, two copies of Light of Truth. From P. H. Sercombe, September number of Current Literature, also April and September numbers of Tomorrow. Tell him Banker Bigelow is here; have met him once for a few minutes. Sercombe thinks Bigelow a "victim of the system." Among papers received are two copies of the Vineland (N. J.) Independent, containing reprints of articles relating to my case. Please write the editor and thank him for me. One of the reprints was from Truth Seeker. The other was from Soundview. Please write to Macdonald and Rader, thanking them for all they have done for me, if you have not already done so. Please write to Kiichi Kaneko, Silver Spring, East Providence, R. I., thanking him for good letter, and ask him for translation of the editorial in the Japanese paper to which he refers. Tell Theodore Schroeder the copy of his booklet, "Liberty of Conscience, Speech and Press," has been very thankfully received. Hope you can find room for selections from same.

One visit received last week from Fred P. Young, of Springfield, Mo., and his brother, which visit was much appreciated. No visit from George Harman for some weeks. Please write and ask him to come as soon as convenient, and bring me some good apples and peaches. I get cooked dried fruit at the table, also tomatoes and melons, but no raw fruit except lemons. Dr. Yohe is willing I shall have raw fruit, but he seems to have too much business to allow him to look after raw fruit for me. I am still improving, as I think, in health, but feel sure I would gain more rapidly if I could have good apples, peaches and oranges.

Some one has sent me a few copies of Woman's Tribune (not regularly), for which I am thankful. In the issue of July 28 there is the best review of Ibsen's "A Doll's House" I have yet seen, as I think. Please write Mrs. Colby and thank her for me, and say I would like to get her paper regularly. Perhaps you would think it best to reproduce parts of Mrs. Colby's review of "A Doll's House" if you could look it up. I also get Progressive Thinker occasionally; would like to have it and Light of Truth regularly. A few copies of Literary Digest have reached me.

You advise me to distribute papers and pamphlets among the prisoners. This I have done, both here and at Joliet. Here in the hospital I use them as a sort of "circulating library," to which all are made welcome. Many prisoners have no reading matter except one book per week from the prison library, and seem glad to get to read my papers and pamphlets.

Write Dr. Pfeiffer and say I answered his registered letter a good while ago and have heard nothing more from him. Did not register, as the warden thought it unnecessary.

You are quite right in regard to coming to meet me when released, or to visit me before that time. The distance is too great to bring baby George without some one to help you care for him, and the expense of a helper too great—unless in case of a serious change for the worse in my health. Since I have been permitted to write my will I am not nearly so anxious to see you and other friends as I was before such permission was given. So long as I can see son George occasionally, and hear from you and the home office once or twice a week, I shall think myself fortunate.

Be sure to write Mrs. Weller, now at Kansas City, and say I hope the warden will allow her to give me a personal visit on her way to her Dakota home. Tell Brother Wheeler I get the Sunday Record-Herald every week; many thanks to him for same, and for his continued helpfulness to you in the routine work of the office.

Replying to P. H. Sercombe's request for corrections in his list of the "Old Guard of Freethought," please say to him that J. S. Loveland and J. L. Loveland are evidently the same; the correct name and address being J. S. Loveland, Summerland, Calif.; age 88. Elizabeth H. Russell's postoffice address is San Jose, Calif., 828 South Seventh street. A. H. Frank is at Red House, N. Y. E. M. Dewey is Fourteenth street, East Oakland, Calif.; not Cincinnati, O. A. J. Davis and Andrew Jackson Davis are the same; his age is 80, I feel quite sure. Mr. Buxton's home is Milford, Mass. Dr. M. R. Leverson may be addressed care of Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York; Dr. Immanuel Pfeiffer, 500 Fifth avenue, New York. Dr. L. Mann Hammond, Rosedale, Kan. S. B. Shepherd, Leavenworth, Kan.

[The prison rules limit each letter to only one sheet, with no interlining. But it seems that a concession of an extra sheet was given; probably for the purpose of enabling the editor to reply to the following letter:

"Dear Mr. Harman: Will you please answer the following: Name your ten favorite humanitarians of the nineteenth century. I ask only those whose opinion I consider of value to contribute to this symposium, which will consist of 100 contributors. If you find it convenient to comply with my request I will be ever so much obliged to you. Truly yours, VICTOR ROBINSON.

"By a humanitarian I mean one who has benefited humanity, or has attempted to do so."]

The most difficult request to answer is that of Victor Robinson. It is quite impossible to do this to my own satisfaction. Please say to Mr. Robinson that if I had space to give reasons for my choice in each instance the task would not be quite so embarrassing.

After many changes I have decided on the following, as my favorites as leaders in the Grand Army of Humanitarians who lived, thought, spoke, wrote, labored and suffered in the nineteenth century of the Christian chronology: First, Thomas Paine; second, Victor Hugo; third, Ralph Waldo Emerson; fourth, Charles Darwin; fifth, Charles Bradlaugh; sixth, Herbert Spencer; seventh, Robert G. Ingersoll; eighth, Andrew Jackson Davis; ninth, Walt Whitman; tenth, Leo Tolstoy. The first-named belongs more to the eighteenth than to the nineteenth century, but he lived till 1809, and therefore belongs to both.

For a second list, several of whom I should like to see in the first list of ten, after careful consideration I would respectfully submit: First, William Lloyd Garrison; second, Thomas Jefferson; third, Emile Zola; fourth, Henrik Ibsen; fifth, August Bebel; sixth, Poet Shelley; seventh, Grant Allen; eighth, Henry D. Thoreau; ninth, Charles Dickens; tenth, George Bernard Shaw.

I might without much trouble name a third list of ten, including several now living and in the prime of life, in this country and in Europe, but to do so would probably subject me to the charge of personal favoritism—that is, of judgment biased by personal obligations.

The most serious criticism, perhaps, that I shall have to meet, as I apprehend, will be that I have named not one woman as a leader in humanitarian work. If so, I would briefly reply: First, I have had in mind pioneers, pathfinders in radical thought; writers and speakers, rather than those who have devoted their lives to hard, self-sacrificing labors for the good of others. In the economies of nature, as I see it, the task of opening new fields for human endeavor is masculine man's peculiar work; woman's work is to conserve, to utilize, what has been gained by man's aggressive effort, by man's perilous adventure.

Take the case of Bradlaugh and Besant. While Bradlaugh lived, Annie Besant was a most effective factor in English secular work; perhaps more effective than Bradlaugh himself; but no sooner was Bradlaugh numbered with the dead than Besant repudiated her best work, as I see it, and became a reactionist instead of a progressive humanitarian.

Take the case of George Eliot. Few writers of the nineteenth century have made a greater impression for good than has Marian Evans. Whose thoughts did she put into "Adam Bede," "Silas Marner," "Felix Holt," etc.? Consciously or unconsciously, if I see the matter aright, the writer of these books wove into them the thoughts she had absorbed from G. H. Lewes, Herbert Spencer and other radical thinkers with whom she was closely affiliated. The proof of this is that as soon as Lewes was dead Marian Evans became Mrs. Cross—a scion of "conventionality," an exponent of British conservatism.

Take the case of the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the book that more than any other brought on the cyclone, the earthquake, that changed the American federation of semi-independent states to an imperialism; a Nation with a big N; an oligarchy consisting of a few bankers and a few railway kings. The early apostles of the anti-slavery gospel in this country were Quakers, nonresistants—that is, they opposed war under all circumstances. The family of Mrs. Stowe were anti-slavery people, hence she easily absorbed the ideas of Amy Post, the Fosters, the Garrisons, all of whom looked upon the slaveholders as victims of a system they did not create; as brothers to be reasoned with, not as enemies to be killed. But Henry Ward Beecher preached the gospel of "rifles," of hate and revenge, and his sister wove this latter gospel into the same web with the gospel of peace taught by the Fosters and Garrisons. Hence her failure as a humanitarian leader.

My two sheets are full. Write me soon. With love always.

M. HARMAN.

POSTAL STATUTES AND COURT DECISIONS.

The larger part of Comstock's power to oppress and harass is not derived from statutes, but has been given him by executive and judicial usurpation. As a postal inspector he enjoys the privilege of meddling with any one's mail, although not a government official in the ordinary acceptance of the term. He thus has an advantage even in court, due to his extra-official position, while not responsible to superior officials and public opinion, as would be an ordinary police or federal officer.

The federal statutes prohibiting the mailing of obscene matter are often invoked to reach persons who would not be convicted in the state courts. And these statutes have been stretched far beyond their original purpose by court decisions to the effect that neither the intent of the author nor the general character or teaching of a book can be admitted as evidence, but conviction may be had solely upon a detached paragraph. An impartial application of this ruling would put into the penitentiary every one who mailed a dictionary. As though this were not enough, the federal courts have held further that the jury can decide only as to the fact of mailing, and that the question as to whether any publication is obscene is one of law, to be decided by the judge only. Such a ruling was made in the case of Ida Craddock, whom Comstock hounded to suicide.

The far-reaching effect of such rulings is obvious when it is considered that there is no way of calling public attention to the injustice of any conviction under such prosecution, because in this class of cases it is a crime to circulate the matter offered in evidence for the original issue of which any one is convicted. The lawyer who defended Ida Craddock, when challenged in a public meeting to show the basis for the decision rendered, had to admit that he did not dare do so, or even exhibit the book containing it, although he had the latter in his pocket.

The states should be left to deal with the propriety of matter printed within their respective borders, and the federal government should not attempt to decide upon the character of publications mailed. But if it does continue to do so, there at least ought to be a provision in the statute that in every such case the jury should, as in libel cases, be judge both of the law and the fact. This would permit the introduction in evidence of a publication in its entirety and allow the jury to consider the character and intentions of the accused.—A. C. Pleydell, in New York Herald, Aug. 25.

BUT IT'S NOT SO EASY TO FORGET.

Mrs. Josephine K. Henry quotes the following from the Cincinnati "Post" in her pamphlet on "Marriage and Divorce":

Here is marriage from two viewpoints:

The man who makes possible all marriages in Hamilton County, Ohio, was asked what he thought of the nuptial estate.

The man who undoes what the other has done was asked the same question.

Their views come from widely different surroundings.

THE LICENSE CLERK.

Clerk Ferd Baden issues them.

A handsome young chap; a pretty girl. He's 23, she's 19.

Hearts a-throbbing, eyes a-sparkling, smiles a-spreading, hands clasped.

Chatting friends, teasing relatives, congratulating acquaintances, gladsome friends.

This is the side of matrimony Ferd Baden sees. What does he think of it?

"It's a grand success! The greatest thing in the world. Sort of a rose garden in Paradise. Only 75 cents invested and you've a lifetime of happiness," says Ferd Baden.

THE DIVORCE COURT.

Judge James B. Swing, presiding.

A red-faced man, a tearful wife. He's getting old, so's she.

Hearts a-sobbing, eyes bleary, leers on faces, fists doubled in anger.

Spatting lawyers, opposing relatives, a battery of witnesses, clerks indifferently glum.

This is the side of matrimony Judge Swing sees. What does he think of it?

"Ah, young man," and there was a note of sadness in the jurist's voice, "I do not allow myself to think. I spend my time in forgetting."

"THE MOODS OF LIFE."

Every radical who has felt dearth of poetic thought and feeling as one of the defects of our especial literature, I mean the literature of anarchism, should read "The Moods of Life," by William Francis Barnard. They are a redemption of the desert. Full of exquisite tones and colors, melodious, delicate, one listens and is glad to know that the old spring is welling yet, and that here in the dust and strife, in the chokingly prosaic, in the maddeningly commonplace, the singing voice is heard again, the Grecian flute is playing still: glad that the new thought, the thought which is to consume the old life in remorseless flame, the thought which alone can redeem mankind from the chains of their own forging, which must go down, therefore, into the smut of the mine and the grind of the mill and be one with the utterest prose of existence in order that it may be understood, can yet reclothe itself in the glory and the music of dream,—answer to man's more intangible aspirations, fill him, lift him.

I will not say it is a Master Voice; some note of strength, some fire, somewhat, just escapes the verses. One feels the author will never be one to seize the language and forge word-iron of it, make it clang and crash with vibrant power. But they are bluebird notes, high and clear and sweet, presaging the coming chorus,—wild melodies of dawn.—Voltairine de Cleyre, in Mother Earth.

[The author has donated ten copies to be sold for the benefit of LUCIFER. Price, $1 each.]

THE BOOK EXCHANGE.

I HAVE AN IDEA.

Most of us have good ideas now and then, but how few of us ever go any further than having the idea!

Now if you think my plan a good one help me to help you.

MY IDEA:

Make a list of all the books, pamphlets, magazines and radical papers you have to sell, exchange or give away and send me that list.

Some one has that missing number of LUCIFER, or that book you have been looking for so long is growing dusty on the shelf of some one who would rather have one of your books in exchange.

I KNOW BOOKS,

their prices and publishers, and can help you get that book and perhaps sell some of your books at the same time.

THE EXCHANGE

will be made through me and I can save you money and perhaps add to your library at the same time.

MAKE THAT LIST TODAY

if possible. Do it this week without fail and mail to

SAMUEL T. HAMMERSMARK,

208 LINCOLN PLACE, NORWOOD PARK, CHICAGO, ILL.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,

For the Expansion and Superevolution and The New Civilization.

2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

Communism and Conscience—Pentecost and Paradox—Crimes and Criminals.

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

Equal Liberty, Equal Rights—not equal liberty to invade, but equal right not to be invaded; not equal liberty to interrupt a meeting, but equal right to listen without being interrupted; not equal liberty to steal, but equal right not to be robbed; not equal liberty to wantonly kill, but equal right to be secure against murder.

The Law of Liberty, definitions by Clifford and Stephen. Fashionable to Deny Natural Rights. Spencer on the Scope of Evolution, Rights of Children. Increasing Complexity of Life, Interdependence of Individual and Society, Close Connection with the Past, The Boycott, Its Relation to Liberty. The Paradox is Uncertain. The "Right to Invade," Liberty and Responsibility, "Free Will." Necessity and Defense. The People the Source of Invasion, Conscience—What It Is, What It Does: Undiscriminating Rejection of Morality, Changing Names and Institutions. "Wine of Omar Khayyam." The All-is-Good Discovery, Whitman a Reformer, Defensive Association. "Right" and "Might," The Secular Principle, Vicarious Atonement. We Are in Nature, We are Natural, Property Rights, What is Evolution?

CRIMES AND CRIMINALS: Suggestive, Not Dogmatic. What We Are Not Considering. Two Stages in the Study. How Should We Act Toward the Anti-Social? Gain in the Direction of Humanity. Six Important Rules to Guide Social Action. Relative Values of Deterrents. Capital Punishment. "Labor," and Labor in Prisons. The Principle of Restitution. Reason Guides from the Old to the New. Tradition and Reason.

Price, 25 cents.

MOSES HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Price, 3c each; 25c a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Do You Want Free Speech?

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Concentrated, but comprehensive. It is specially valuable at the present crisis, since it is the only pamphlet exposing the entire conspiracy against free speech in America. The facts it cites are startling, but absolutely verifiable. The brochure is needed by all who would realize whither we are drifting, the magnitude of the issue we are called on to face, the fundamental principles involved in the battle for free speech, and the means of combatting the enemies of liberty. Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

START a business of your own. Make barbers' supplies. We teach you free by mail. Puritan Correspondence School, 619 Third street, Louisville, Ky. 1077

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

The American Institute of Phrenology.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,

52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST,
1456 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1075

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

What the Young Need to Know.

A PRIMER OF SEX RATIONALISM.

BY E. C. WALKER.

SUGGESTIONS OF CONTENTS: Is There Necessity for This Knowledge? Analogous Dangers and Safeguards. Unwisdom of Custom-sanctioned Ignorance. Teachers Better if of Opposite Sex. Divisions of the Subject. Definitions of Sex. Evolution of Sex; Differentiation. Reproduction Less and Less Perilous. Inestimable Value of Use. Joy Is Positive, Upbuilding. The Deciding Majority of Two. The Tendency to Multiselection. A Serious Error in Exchange. Effects of Meat, Stimulants and Narcotics. Reproduction and Social Happiness. Not so Many Children, but Better Ones. Legal Intrusion Has a Limit. Voluntary Complexity, and Health. Comparative Exemption of the Jews. The Upward March. Cure and Irrepealable Punishments. Origin of the Shame of Sex. Derived from Other-World Mania. "The Son of God" and Sex. Faithful Followers of Jesus. Relation of Past Asceticism to Existing Type. Mental Slaves Are Not Investigators. Romaunt and Clarimonde. Sex Manifestation Below Our Race. Sex Inspiration in Human Endeavor. What is Immodesty? Primitive and Present Day Savage Customs in Dress. Civilized Customs and Costumes. What We Affirm on This Subject. Bathing and Dress. Asceticism and Honesty in Art. Arguments of the Puritan. Judge Phillips and Mr. Moody. To Take the Purity of Nudity in Art for Granted. Asceticism and Literature. Foolishness of Hiding Social Wrongs. Take off the Taboo.

Price, 15 cents.

MOSES HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

Who Is the Enemy: Anthony Comstock or You?

BY E. C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.

THE "MORAL" CENSORSHIP—The Inspiration of the Censor; A "Protection" that Betrays; Utter Lack of Discrimination; Vain Denial of Facts; A Greater Wrong to the Child; Some Officers' Zeal; Imagined "Plots"; The Law as Administered; The Vicious Law of Obscene Libel; Obscene Libel and Expert Testimony; Judge and Jury and "the Facts"; Some Criticisms Answered; The Common Law Yesterday and Today; Wrong Principles of Action; The Censorship and the Bible; Moncure D. Conway on Censors; Where Lies Responsibility—on Censor or You? The Cause of Slow Advance; Sex a Mistake—"Somebody Blundered"; Superstition Not Seriously Crippled; The Worship of Death and Decay; Characteristic Eruptions of Sex Panic.

THE "FRAUD ORDER" FRAUD—Remarkable Deliverance by Judge Thomas; The Courts and the Constitution; The Persecution of "Freedom"; Grateful for Injuries Received.

THE CENSORSHIP OF SECOND-CLASS MATTER—The Department's Rules of Exclusion; Statistics of Official Financiering; Two Arguments About Government Socialism.

Price, 20 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Isola: Or, The Disinherited.

A REVOLT FOR WOMAN AND ALL THE DISINHERITED.

BY LADY FLORENCE DIXIE.

With Colored Frontispiece Portrait of Fortunatus on the Heights of Avenamore, entitled "The Last Watch."

In his characteristics of the drama Mr. G. J. HOLYOAKE writes: "Her conception of womanly independence is original in literature. . . . . The moral interest of the drama has great charm. . . . . As the tragic death of a woman capable of both heroism and rebellion, the last hours of Fortunatus are memorable. . . . . The reader will see in The Last Watch on the Heights of Avenamore the beauty, the dignity, the determination, without defiance, of Isola. Intellectual intrepidity in defence of the Right to the Soul of the drama THE DISINHERITED.

Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Woman's Source of Power.

LOVE ATTRACTION, THE FEMININE PRINCIPLE, is the builder of all living forms. LOVE IS THE CREATOR.

In the conception of human life the first step is destructive of a precious condition, but when the work is given into woman's keeping the action is reversed, becomes constructive; from then on till growth ceases the feminine is the predominating power. Here is where the principle which can confirm youth should begin its work.

By LOIS WAISBROOKER.

Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

The Moods of Life.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

A collection of verse which will be sure to attract attention among those who are looking for new poetry. The author has been a contributor to American magazines for several years, and is well known as a poet of modernity with a remarkable gift of imaginative expression. 12mo cloth; gilt title; 160 pages, $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

An Essay on the Duty of Civil Disobedience.

BY HENRY D. THOREAU.

A reprint of this classic essay on the supremacy of the individual conscience. Antique paper; artistic covers, dark green on olivine. 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, OCTOBER 11, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1076

FREEDOM OF CONSCIENCE.

Oh, brave Apostle, thou hast truly said
It is a trivial thing indeed to be Judged of man's judgment! Conscience must be free,
Nor blindly nor dogmatically led,
Either by living oracles or dead;
For truth admits of no monopoly,
And where it points each for himself must see
Nor fear an independent path to tread.
Honor to him who speaks his honest thought,
Who guards his reason as a sacred trust,
Demands the truth for every dogma taught,
And turns dissenter only when he must!
For he shall rise by whom the light is sought,
To the high place where stand the wise and just.

—William Lloyd Garrison.

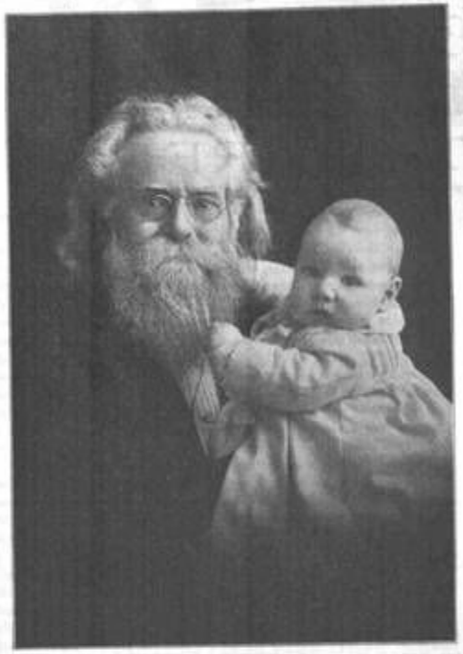
REMINISCENCES OF THE LIFE OF MOSES HARMAN.

By Lillian Harman.

This is a "birthday" number of LUCIFER. Tomorrow will be the seventy-sixth anniversary of an event of great importance to the writer of these lines—the birth of her father. The question whether children owe anything to their parents for the blessing of life (or the curse, as the case may be) is one often discussed and never settled. The old idea was that, no matter what the conditions of life, the child owed the parents an unending debt of gratitude; that, no matter how little worthy of respect the parents, the child owed unquestioning obedience and respect—yes, and love, too, regardless of any neglect of loving care bestowed on it. But a new idea is gaining ground—the idea that by far the greater obligation is due to the child. If it is a crime to rob a being of its life, how much greater crime it is, we are told, to thrust beings into life under conditions wherein they must almost certainly endure disease, hunger, cold and deprivation of vitally essential opportunities of growth and happiness, as is the fate of countless thousands. Usually those parents who give the least are the most insistent that the love and gratitude of children is a duty; while those who do most to make the gift of life a blessing are least certain of the duty of their offspring to be grateful; the payment demanded is in inverse ratio to the service given. My own conclusion is that parents are somewhat in the position of dealers who send merchandise on approval, but with the disadvantage to the recipient that he cannot easily refuse to accept life or send it back to the giver if he feels that it is not worth the price. If the parents give the child a personality and opportunities worth having they will naturally receive its grateful love; but if they fail to insure its right to be well born and well nurtured they owe it, at the very least, an apology for calling it into existence.

Ever since I was old enough to see the difference between my father and the fathers of many of my companions I have felt myself very fortunate, and with each succeeding year I have felt an added sense of gratitude to him for my life and its opportunities. And as it is of Moses Harman, the father and the home-builder, the teacher and the comrade, that I wish to write on this anniversary of his birth.

Technically, the editor of LUCIFER is in prison for sending obscene matter [LUCIFER] through the mails. This charge is manifestly absurd, however, when we realize how great is the existing demand for literature which appeals to the popular taste for "obscenity." The people who are on the lookout for such literature could not be induced to read LUCIFER, for its serious discussions of unpopular theories do not appeal to their tastes. In reality my father is in prison because certain persons believe—granting them the virtue of sincerity—that his ideas, if adopted, would disrupt the home and cause the neglect and desertion of children. But denial of the genuine is not logically implied by the rejection of the spurious. It is because of his love for the real home that he protests against its counterfeit. He sees the necessity of homes in which all may be free and happy; homes in which each inmate may find opportunities for the highest development; homes in which motherhood and fatherhood are assumed gladly and proudly, and in which children are reared tenderly and wisely; homes which love and freedom alone can build and maintain. It is because of this—because he believes in "the right of the child to be born well if born at all"—that he registers his protest against the abominations, the prisons and the hells which exist under the name of "home." The real home cannot be broken up by outside influence. The monstrosity which is its counterfeit bears in itself the seeds of its own destruction. Such "homes" are in process of disintegration every day. A "home" in which the mother is a plaything or a slave; a "home" to which the father returns only when absolutely necessary, and away from which he finds his interests and his pleasures; a "home" which to the children is a battle-ground and a prison from which it is their most earnest aspiration to escape as soon as possible—is the only kind which can be "broken up," and the sooner the break occurs the better.



"The warm family affection your letters are saturated with makes me wonder at your lack of reverence for family ties," said a man in a letter written to my father while he was in Joliet.

"'Harman'—I know the name. I have heard the editor of LUCIFER speak at the meetings," a woman recently said to me when we were introduced. On being told that I was his daughter she exclaimed, "Why, it never occurred to me that he had a family!"

Knowing my father as I do, I laugh at the absurdity of the misconception evidenced in these and similar remarks; and yet I feel some survival of the old childish indignation I used to experience when I fancied some one spoke without proper appreciation of the one who, in my eyes, was a perfect being. But I realize that such misunderstandings are the inevitable experience of the pioneer in an unpopular work. "How'd you like to have your daughter marry a nigger?" he was asked, in common with other abolitionists, when he, a citizen of a slave state, advocated the emancipation of the slaves. This question was considered an unanswerable argument by the pro-slavery people, but my father was not convinced by it, nor did the threats which were made, that he would be "tarred and feathered and ridden on a rail" unless he kept his mouth closed, impress him with the justice of the institution of slavery. It is probably needless to add that his views on marriage have not resulted in homelessness to his children, and equally superfluous to say that the veins of his grandchildren are free from African blood, despite his fight for abolition. Indeed, it would be very interesting to know how many of the grandchildren of abolitionists are of mixed blood. I have never heard of the existence of any; and to the best of my knowledge and belief the prophecy that the daughters of abolitionists would "marry niggers" has not been fulfilled in a single instance. Not by the daughter of the abolitionist, but by the son of the slaveholder, has the blood of the two races been mixed.

My father never feared that any influence could break up his home. Love was the all-powerful tie which maintained it. Left, by the death of my mother, with two small children, he was, in so far as lay in his power, both father and mother to us. As a child I was morbidly sensitive (a condition which time, experience and philosophy have enabled me to overcome) and peculiarly dependent on the love and sympathy of father and mother. A day's separation from "papa" seemed an eternity, and to have been taken from him by the breaking up of our home would have caused pain which to me would have seemed unendurable. He understood and sympathized with these feelings, and wherever he went, there, too, was his little daughter. More than once he refused an otherwise desirable position as teacher because the directors would not allow a child from outside the district to attend their school, and to be away from him would have caused me pain. Had our home been an abode of strife, inharmony and petty tyranny, like so many households to which the word home is a sad misnomer, I would probably have welcomed any opportunity of escape. I do not believe I ever heard harsh words between father and mother, but clearly remember the astonishment and fear with which I witnessed some of the scenes in the homes of my playmates.

MOSES HARMAN AND GRANDSON.

My father always believed that there were natural reasons why, if irreconcilable differences of opinion should arise, the mother's should be the controlling voice in the guidance of the children. Those reasons have been elaborated by him in the columns of LUCIFER, so I will not repeat them here. For that reason we were taught the orthodox beliefs in regard to heaven and hell, god and devil, by our mother, though our father had outgrown such beliefs. And even after her death, when I would go to him with the problems with which my mind was perplexed, he would, while telling me his own opinion, give me my mother's also, adding that I should consider both views to the best of my ability and decide for myself.

A document written forty years ago, and marked "private and confidential," comprises their real marriage agreement. I have every reason to believe that the provisions of this agreement were faithfully lived by both. From it I quote these sentences:

"We voluntarily and solemnly agree to be governed in our conduct towards each other by the law of Love. Accordingly, we agree to avoid controversies as much as possible, and when one unavoidably arises, each agrees to state his or her reasons in as few words as possible, calmly and kindly; and if neither is convinced, and a decision be necessary, then the most loving will yield the point at issue.

"We agree not to vex, tease or scold each other.

"We agree that each shall live religiously in his or her own way."

I have good reason to be thankful that my parents disapproved of teasing, and that they saw no pleasure in the prevalent custom of playing with children in a way to tease, torture and annoy them, causing them to fly into a passion, and laughing at their fury. It has always seemed strange to me that people who would not allow a spirited horse to be tantalized will permit and even enjoy such treatment of their children. All training, it seems to me, should be in the direction of self-possession and self-control, and to tease and confuse a child has the opposite effect. In speaking to me of the causes of inharmony between lovers, father once said that he thought the custom of saying cutting things in jest is responsible for a great deal of misery. It does no harm while both are in the mood for this form of fun—a form which is coarse, at best, based as it is on the suggestion of cruelty. But some day Mary will not be feeling in the humor when John makes some unkind remark in play. Mary feels that he ought to understand and respect her mood and not intrude with his ill-timed jests. Then John is offended because of Mary's failure to make allowance for his good motives, and the trouble is on, intermittently, from that time forward. These suggestions have been of inestimable value to me.

Whitman's "Pioneers! O Pioneers!" always brings my father to mind, and these lines seem especially applicable to him:

"Have the elder races halted?
Do they droop and end their lessons, wearied over there beyond the seas?
We take up the task eternal, and the burden and the lesson,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

"All the past we leave behind,
We debouch upon a newer, mightier world, varied world,
Fresh and strong the world we seize, world of labor and the march,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

"We detachments steady throwing,
Down the edges, through the passes, up the mountains steep,
Conquering, holding, daring, venturing as we go the unknown ways,
Pioneers! O pioneers!

"We primeval forests felling,
We the rivers stemming, vexing we and piercing deep the mines within,
We the surface broad surveying, we the virgin soil upheaving,
Pioneers! O pioneers!"

The earliest experiences of my father were emblematic of his future life in the material world and in that of the intellect as well. When but little past infancy his parents left their Virginia home and made the journey in the usual primitive manner to a new home in Mercer County, Ohio—a wooded wilderness near the Saint Marys River. The land, though hard to clear of trees, logs and brushwood,

GEORGE HARMAN, SON OF MOSES HARMAN.

was fertile, and the place might have been satisfactory but for the impurity of the water. This latter caused malaria, so they decided to remove to the hills of southern Missouri, where, they were told, were to be found the finest springs of clear water in the world. In his autobiography, writing of this event, my father says:

"In the fall of 1838 this journey of some six hundred miles by a somewhat zigzag route was made in wagons drawn by horses and covered with heavy cotton cloth to keep out the rain. At night we camped in the woods beside roaring log fires. . . . The weather was generally fine and the roads good. We took plenty of time, spending nearly two months on the road.

"Altogether I think this was the most enjoyable as well as most memorable of all the journeys I ever made. At no time of life, as it now seems to me, is the mind more open to vivid and lasting impressions than is the mind of the youth of eight or ten years, and therefore I regard this journey overland from Ohio to Missouri as one of the most important of all the educational events or episodes in my life's history."

He enthusiastically entered upon the pioneer work in the wilderness. He was eager to help his father, even when a small boy, for the pleasure of the work itself, the satisfaction of knowing he was thoroughly enjoyed the companionship of his father, who had the happy faculty of entering into comradeship with children. He early became an expert woodsman, and has never forgotten the lessons then learned. Only a few years ago it became necessary to cut down helping his family to make a home, and last, but far from least, he a large tree in front of this house. He helped to do the work, and his assistants and passersby were astonished by the accuracy of his work with the ax—each stroke was exactly placed, and when the work was done the stump was almost as clean-cut as if the work had been done with a saw. Others thought it would be necessary to use ropes to guide the tree in falling so it should not strike the house, but he applied his woodsman's lore to such effect that it fell exactly where he wished, and with no assistance. He felled the trees, hewed the logs and built the house in which his children were born—and the house is used as a residence to this day.

It is, however, as a pioneer in the realm of reason that Moses Harman's work is of greatest interest and value. Because he used his own intellect instead of adopting current beliefs he has ever been in advance of his environment. All his life has been spent in blazing new trails. Without having read a freethought work he reasoned his way out of orthodoxy. He was an abolitionist at a time and place in which the life of every man who avowed those principles was threatened. He was a republican in Missouri when to be such was more disgraceful than to be an anarchist in Chicago in '87.

As a school teacher, also, he was a pioneer. In many ways he departed from the customs of the time, and some of his methods are now employed by the best teachers. At the time and place of his work as a teacher it was generally believed that to "spare the rod" was to "spoil the child." I cannot say that in his many years' experience in teaching school he never whipped a child; but I have never heard of such a case, and do not believe it ever occurred. There was always a larger liberty and more individual responsibility in his schools than in those of other teachers; his relation to his pupils was more that of a fellow-seeker for knowledge than that of a superior and all-wise being and stern master, as was the conventional pose of the teacher. I can remember seeing him take the big "bad" boys out, at noon or recess, to talk to them, and it was always with good effect. It was ordinarily held to be in the interest of good discipline to punish children and shame them before the whole school, in the belief that public disgrace would make them "good." He did not agree with this theory. He held, in theory and practice, that the best way to help a child is to help it to an understanding of the necessity of self-control, to inculcate self-confidence, and to arouse in it the desire to develop a self worthy of confidence. Hence his talks to the disturber of the peace of the schoolroom were always private and confidential—the talk of a friend and comrade, rather than the commands of master to slave. He thus applied the principles of "suggestion," the best part of so-called "new thought," in his school work. He knew there is good in all children, and that to let them know he believed in them was the surest way to help them to make that good manifest. When a child is told it is "bad" and must be punished its mind is filled with discouragement and fear. If, however, its acts of misconduct are treated as mistakes and faith in its desire for improvement is expressed, hope and courage enable it to be a "good" child.

LILLIAN HARMAN, DAUGHTER OF MOSES HARMAN.

SON AND DAUGHTER OF LILLIAN HARMAN.

These reminiscences must of necessity be very fragmentary. I had intended to write more, but on looking over father's unpublished autobiography to select a few paragraphs I find so much that I want to use that I will fill the remainder of the available space with selections from that work. In compliance with the wishes of myself and other friends who had often urged him to write an extended story of his life to be published in book form, my father began the work several years ago, but has never finished it. His failure to carry it to completion has been due partly to the pressure of other work and partly to reasons given in his letter, which appears in another column.

One of my first and now very dim recollections is of a house and orchard on a mountain side, the property of my maternal grandfather. Apples, pears, peaches, cherries, etc., grew in great abundance and perfection in this locality. Chestnut, walnut and other nut-bearing trees flourished also, and bore abundant crops on these slopes of the Alleghany range of mountains.

These environments, the influences exerted by them prenatally and postnatally, had doubtless much to do in shaping the tastes, characteristics and habits of my life. . . . The fact that my birthplace was on a mountain side so steep that wheeled vehicles were seldom used—nearly all articles of merchandise or convenience being transported on the backs of horses or mules—accounts in a measure, perhaps, for another fact—namely, that I have always wanted to live in a mountainous or hilly country, and have never been quite reconciled to live on the level plains or broad prairies of the western or middle states of the American Union.

Parenthetically, as it were, I wish to say here that I feel disposed to congratulate myself, and to mentally pat myself on the back, for having made so good a choice of locality in which to be born. I regard the physical and geographical environments of birth as

[CONTINUED ON PAGE 601]

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFERS will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFERS.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

MOSES HARMAN: AN APPRECIATION.

By R. B. Kerr.

I have been rather lucky in seeing and meeting great men. I have seen and heard Browning, Lowell, William Morris, Pasteur, Helmholtz, Virchow. I have listened to the oratory of Gladstone, Chamberlain and Parnell. I have crossed the Atlantic with Kropotkin, and held delightful conversations with Bernard Shaw. But I consider my two visits to Moses Harman at Chicago more important than any of these events. Moses Harman will be remembered when all the others I have named have been forgotten.

We live in an age which is absolutely unique in the history of the world. Owing to the advance of science and industry, and the spread of education, the great mass of mankind have for the first time conceived the idea of consciously altering their whole environment, so as to produce happiness instead of misery. This awakening has necessarily led to two great movements. Science has shown us that hunger and love are the two chief facts of life. It is, therefore, natural that we should have one great movement to satisfy hunger and another great movement to make love free. These two movements are the greatest things that have ever happened in the world. All the religious and political revolutions of the past are the merest trifles in comparison. Each of these movements has produced a man who is more conspicuous than the rest. The economic movement has produced Karl Marx, and the sex movement Moses Harman.

Harman has rendered three great services to the sex movement. First, he has founded the only free-love paper in the world which has lived. There are many books on the sex question, but LUCIFER has done more than all of them put together to make the movement widely known, and to draw large numbers of persons, especially women, into sex discussions. Secondly, he has done for free love a similar service to that which Marx did for socialism. Marx found socialism a movement of a few literary men and rich philanthropists. He left it an organized movement of the working class. Harman found free love a movement of poets and artists, mostly male, and of a few eccentric, religious cranks in isolated places. He saw that if the sex movement were to be a great movement, it must be a woman's movement. Just as the essence of our economic system is the oppression of the working class by the capitalist class, so the essence of our sex system is the oppression of the female sex by the male sex. The double standard of morality shows that at once. But Moses Harman saw that there was no more chance of the ruling sex making a sex revolution than there was of the ruling class making an economic revolution. He therefore addressed himself especially and almost exclusively to women, and today we see the result. While men care almost nothing for the sex question, a spirit of revolution is spreading everywhere among women, which will, in the next twenty years, bring forth tremendous results.

Thirdly, Moses Harman showed that freedom in love would not only make grown-up people happy, but would improve the heredity of the race. Before his time the children question was the weak point of the sex movement. The early free-lovers thought chiefly of the pleasure of men and women, and did not like to be asked, "What about the children?" Moses Harman changed all that. With him the great question was the rights of the unborn, and he showed clearly that children could never be well born until women were free. This new view of the matter enormously strengthened the movement.

It would be unfair to say that these new ideas sprang from Moses Harman alone. Several others, and especially Lois Waisbrooker, have been saying the same thing all their lives. Nearly all original ideas occur to several persons at once. But it can justly be said that Moses Harman, by his long editorship of LUCIFER, and his repeated sojourns in prison, has done more than any one else to make these views widely known and to stamp them indelibly on the sex movement.

EDWARD BLISS FOOTE.

On Saturday morning, October 6, Dr. Foote, one of the oldest and best friends of LUCIFER and its editor, breathed his last. Though not unexpected, the news of his death comes as a shock to his many friends. He lived seventy-seven years, and accomplished great good. He enjoyed the love of thousands whose lives were made more worth the living because of his work. A sketch of his life will appear in our next issue.

Lizzie M. Holmes will deliver an address before the Social Science League the last Sunday evening of this month. Alexander Berkman and Voltairine de Cleyre are announced for the first and second Sundays in November. Subjects will be given later. In another column will be found further information regarding the league.

We can still supply copies of LUCIFER No. 1060. This is the special number devoted to the prosecutions of the editor of LUCIFER and the attempted suppression of his paper. Price, 25 cents a dozen.

Copies of this issue of LUCIFER are for sale. Price, 25 cents a dozen.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

HOSPITAL, U. S. P., LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Sept. 30, 1906.

My Dear Lillian: Your two letters, one dated September 20 and the other September 27, came all right. Very glad to know that you and baby are well of your colds. Glad to know that No. 1075 of the paper went to press and was mailed promptly on time. Glad also to know that you are going to have your picture and that of Baby George [gives the boy a hearty hug and kiss for grandpa]; also Virna's and your brother George's, in next number of LUCIFER; also that you will write the greater part of that number yourself. It is all right, perhaps, for this time, for you to write and print something of a biographical sketch of myself, as this next anniversary of my birth will be my third in prison, if I live to see it; but for myself I prefer to ignore birthdays, as such. Looking back over my life, I find so little accomplished that is worth remembering that my seventy-sixth anniversary seems a reproach to me, rather than an occasion for self-gratification or rejoicing. "We live in deeds, not years."

E. Elsworth Carey says: "The student of psychology sees in birthdays only suggestion of old age, decrepitude, decay and death. The giants of California forest—3,000 years old—have no birthdays. A birthday means a nail in the coffin. . . . Suppose birthdays were abolished; what would be the result? The average use of the human race would increase by leaps and bounds. . . . Birthdays are responsible for the psychic dead-line of three-score years and ten, which is more deadly than a machine gun. Thousands and tens of thousands die because they think they have reached the age limit; they die because they think they must. In nature there is no age limit. There is no inherent reason why one should die at 50 or 75 or 150. . . . Love expressed at the birthday festival or at a funeral is of very little use in the dull, gray homespun of everyday existence." See the article, "Shall Birthdays Be Abolished?" in the magazine Suggestion for October.

I think it is largely owing to thoughts like these that I have not finished the autobiography begun several years ago. A life history finished is a suggestion that it is time for the subject thereof to die. More important, it seems to me, that I be doing something worthy of being recorded in an autobiography. Still, I feel the justice of the criticisms I have received in regard to my tardiness in this matter promising the book to subscribers. M. Florence Johnson, in a late letter, reminds me of this, and urges me to write the book while in prison, saying there will be so many things to take my attention when released that it will again be postponed. From Dr. A. H. Beckham's office, also, comes a hint of like nature in a newspaper clipping showing how many valuable books have been written in prison. Please say to these good friends for me that I would gladly be at work on said book, these fine autumn days, now that I have in good measure recovered my usual health, if I could get permission to do so. Warden McClaughry seemed willing I should write the book, when I spoke to him about it, but said he would have to write to headquarters at Washington before granting such permission. I made the same request at Joliet, but as yet have received no answer. However, through the kindness of Warden McClaughry, I have been allowed to write my will and to add, to matters of business, some paragraphs giving my matured thought on ethical and religious questions, as my legacy to mankind. While these additions to my will cannot be called an autobiography, they will serve, to some extent, as a substitute for a life history.

Please say to Editor Sercombe that I sincerely thank him for publishing so much in my behalf in the October Tomorrow. Also thank Lois Waisbrooker for her Whitmanesque poem in my honor—the only fault I find being that it gives me entirely too much honor. Also thank the writer of the poem on next page from Mrs. W.'s—the name of which writer at this moment is forgotten, and the copy of the magazine just now loaned to one of the clerks.

Our good friend Hammersmarck, of Chicago, gave me a very pleasant call some ten days ago and talked his views in regard to the plan for the public meeting spoken of by Brother Sercombe. Am glad to know that the public demonstration is to have a much wider significance than simply a friendly welcome home to the United States prisoner.

Please see that my present address is properly given in each issue of LUCIFER. I have reason to believe that many letters fail to reach me on account of wrong direction. July 10, at Portland, Ore., Harrison D. Barrett, president of the National Spiritualist Association, mailed to me a much appreciated letter of hope and good cheer. This letter was addressed to me at Joliet, but the name was improperly spelled and the prison not mentioned. After being "advertised" it was sent back to Oregon, but as Brother Barrett is constantly on the wing it did not overtake him till he had reached the "happy land of Canaan"—not the promised land of the Israelites, but the town called Canaan "way down in Maine," from which place it was sent to the right address, reaching my hand a few days ago. Please thank Brother Barrett for the kind remembrance. His home address is Banner of Light, Boston, I think, of which paper he is, or was, editor.

George came over from Valley Falls yesterday, bringing good news from the Valley Falls folks and some fine fruit, all of which was very welcome.

If you can spare the time, please write a few lines to poor, dear Mrs. Russell, and say I much regret to learn from her last letter that most of her time is spent in bed now. Say that I sincerely sympathize with her and the family of Harry Russell in the sad affliction caused by the terrible accident at the enamel works in Cleveland. Say that I hope the fall weather will help her so much that she will live several years yet, and that I hope to call on her again if I live out my present term of imprisonment.

When writing to Warden McClaughry don't forget to thank him, for me, for the privilege of using two sheets of letter paper instead of one. This is a special favor; I do not know how long it will be continued.

Of pamphlets and magazines since last writing I have received "Brief and Argument for M. Harman before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals," by Stedman et al.; October Physical Culture; September Health Culture; August Philistine; July Thought Culture; September Health Culture; August Stuffed Club and Action; two copies Woman's Journal; August Stuffed Club and Vanguard; August and September Phrenological Journal; August Soundview and Unity; July and August Higher Science; September Naturopath, and, I think, some others. Most of these came from Naturopath, and, I think, some others. Most of these came from you, but some from publishers, I think. Some one is sending me regularly the Deseret Semi-Weekly News, for which and for all other similar favors I sincerely thank the donors. This literature is used by the patients in the hospital and much of it goes also to the prisoners outside the hospital, for which I receive many thanks.

A company card comes from Oscar Schleif, Max Velck, David Glick and Ezekiel Gilmour, at Physical Culture City, N. J., with pictures of same and friendly greetings. Of those who send picture cards our old young friend John E. Boultenhouse takes the prize. For the past two weeks he has averaged one every day. Letters and cards not yet mentioned: E. L. Small, 1; Philip O. Peabody, 4; George Redborough, England, 4; Dora S. Segelbe, France, 1; J. Allen Evans, 2; Clara J. L. Pierce, 1; Thirza Rathbun, 1; S. Rockhill, 1; Lee Garcelon, 1; A. Wangemann, 1; C. N. Greene, 1; Dr. R. Greer (with copy of Progressive Thinker), 1; James W. Adams, 1; Dr. C. W. Brown (with copy of Progressive Thinker), 1; "Jim" 1; Dr. G. W. Brown (with copy of Progressive Thinker), 1; "Jim" 1; Dr. G. W. Brown (with copy of Progressive Thinker), 1; George D. Remington, 1; Lucinda B. Chandler, 1; Grace Moore, nus been planted and cultivated for the seed, the kernel, not for the edible husk, as in the case of the apple, mentioned by Elbertus, and hence the farmer finds that big, yellow corn produces its kind with sufficient certainty year after year. The husk of the corn is also edible—for cows—and it is conceivable that by careful breeding for many generations a corn husk might be produced as much superior to the common corn husk as is the husk of a "Spy" apple to the husk of the common "crab," and if the farmer should try to raise the improved husk (corn) variety from seed, he would find that his pet variety would "hark back," just as the seed of the Spy apple harks back. If the farmer wishes to continue his big husk variety he will have to resort to grafting, as the orchardist does; that is, he would have to resort to hogering, as is done with the stalks of the sugar cane.

Nature looks after the life of the race; this means the seed; she cares but little for such by-products as the husks, whose really important use is to protect the seed.

Does not this explain why genius in the human does not reproduce itself? Genius is a by-product, it is an abnormality, a freak, produced by exceptional conditions during gestation, as was undoubtedly the case with Napoleon, mentioned by Elbert. Hence the harking back to common stock as shown by Napoleon's son. There were other causes, but fully in line with the axiom that says like produces like, that made "L'Aiglon" a conspicuous degenerate. But my two sheets are full and I can say no more at this time. Please ask Elbert to send me his paper regularly. Love to all.

M. Harman.

REMINISCENCES OF THE LIFE OF MOSES HARMAN.

[CONTINUED FROM PAGE 598.]

having much to do with the formation of character. A careful examination will, I believe, show that the love of freedom, love of nature, love of the grand and majestic, also the instinctive feeling known as "patriotism," or love of home and country, are much more apt to be incarnated in those born in mountainous countries than in those who first see the light surrounded by level plains, or amid the artificialities of city life. . . .

By heredity I am Teuton mainly—the Teutonic being one of the leading branches of the great Caucasian family. My father was wholly German and my mother German and Scotch-Irish. In selection of immediate parents, too, I feel thankful, or, rather, am disposed to congratulate myself; and though my mother and father were by no means perfect, I think I anticipated by several years the advice of H. W. Beecher to the young man who asked how best to secure success in life. "Rule first," said the great preacher, "choose a good father and mother to be born from."

For several generations my progenitors were born and lived on American soil, mainly in the mountainous region of Virginia and western Pennsylvania. Originally the Harmans of West Virginia—German spelling, Herrmann or Hermann—came from Würtemburg, Germany, as I have heard my paternal grandfather say.

My paternal grandfather, Jonas Harman, was a man of superior endowments, physical and mental, inherited mainly, as I have reason to believe, from his mother, Christina, born Henkel. Christina Henkel was a matriarch among her people; a "woman doctor," and one who exerted a wonderful influence over not only her own children and near relatives, but over a wide circle of acquaintance. She lived a long, active and very useful life, dying at eighty-three years of age.

She gave to her eldest son, Jonas, a splendid physique—six feet tall; well formed; a fine head and majestic cast of features; a mind far above the average of men for the time and country in which he was born. He possessed a very fair education in both German and English; was a land surveyor, a school teacher, and was often collected "justice of the peace." In religion he was not devout, never joined a church and seemed inclined to agnostic views. Was regarded by his neighbors and acquaintances as a very upright man in all his dealings, industrial and frugal in habits, inclined to mechanical pursuits, never accumulated more than a modest competence, and died a poor man in 1864, aged seventy-six. He was the father of fifteen children, of whom my father was the eldest.

Of my paternal grandmother, born Harper, I know very little, but think she was without any very pronounced characteristics; easily swayed, and inclined to take refuge from the storms of life in the worship of an assumed overruling power. She died young, leaving five small children.

My maternal grandmother was born a Redman, of Scotch Covenanter origin. It will be remembered that a Scotch-Irish regiment from the mountains of Virginia and Pennsylvania bore an important part in winning the battle of Saratoga from the British under Burgoyne, and that after the war was over these same freedom-loving mountaineers gave the general government much trouble by refusing to pay the "whiskey tax." Of this sturdy and freedom-loving stock came my maternal grandmother, if my sources of information have not misled me. She was the mother of six children, of whom my mother was the third. She died comparatively young, the victim of a by no means uncommon blunder—the wrong poison, administered to cure some temporary ailment that would doubtless have yielded to careful nursing and nature's recuperative power if drugs and the doctor had been ignored.

My mother's father was a man of very marked peculiarities. As original thinker; a rebel against authority as such; an outspoken opponent of chattel slavery, though living in a slave-holding state. He had no use for clergy, and never joined a church; taught his children that every one makes his or her hell or heaven and carries it with him into the hereafter—if there be a hereafter for mortals. . . .

His parents had named my mother Ann, and it was often remarked by those who knew him well that he had been rightly named. Always cheerful and hopeful, except when looking at the gloomy aspects of his religious creed; sanguine, if not visionary often, in plans and prospects pertaining to business. Always candid, truthful and transparently honest himself, he could not imagine that others were not also honest, truthful and reliable. Hence he was often the victim of the scheming and narrowly selfish, especially of religious sharps or sharpers. He could never get it through his cranium, it would seem, that a man who could "ask a blessing" with unction at the table, one who could make a fervent prayer in "meeting," or especially one who could preach with eloquence, with "demonstration of the spirit and with power,"—could be other than honest and trustworthy in business matters. Even when compelled to confess that he had been sadly duped my father would find ready excuses for the delinquent when no one else could, and would stoutly maintain that the "devil," or human depravity inherited from Mother Eve and Father Adam, was at fault, and not the man's "religion"; that without religion people would be far worse than they now are. He was a very conscientious man as well as a very religious man, and these two qualities he regarded as being identical or at least so nearly related that they could not be separated. As it has been so graphically said of another, my father was often a "miserably religious man." Thoroughly dominated by his devotional, his emotional and his sympathetic nature, and by fear of hell and hope of heaven, he could brook no compromise, no parley, with "doubt" or with religious skepticism. To him belief in a literal hell, an orthodox hell, for the unbelieving or for the finally impenitent, was realistic and abiding. All doubts concerning this cardinal doctrine were regarded by him as suggestions from the great "adversary of God and man," the devil, in whose personality, omnipresence and almost omnipotence my father seemed to have the most implicit faith. To omit any of the more important religious duties as enjoined by his spiritual advisers was to invite the punishments of heaven in this world and to endanger his eternal salvation in the next.

At times, as I think, his intellect tottered, or trembled on the verge of insanity, of downright madness. At such times he could scarcely eat, work or sleep. His eyes would be red and swollen with weeping because some of his loved ones were yet "out of the ark of safety." Especially was he concerned for the spiritual welfare of myself, the most heretical of the family and the one from whom he had hoped so much—so very much—as a learned and valiant defender of the "faith once delivered to the saints."

If it be possible for any man possessed of average intelligence to be an honest believer in the Arminian doctrines of free will and of endless hell, and be at the same time thoroughly humane and sympathetic, and still retain, withal, his mental balance sufficiently to keep out of the madhouse—that man was my father.

He did not have the miserably poor consolation of believing, with Jonathan Edwards and his brother Calvinists, that "God had ordained everything that cometh to pass," and that if any of his family or near relatives were to be finally numbered with the "lost" it would be no fault of his; that it would be his duty—and his happiness, also—to acquiesce in the "damnation" of his friends; and of himself, even, if "God's glory" be enhanced thereby.

No; his religious creed did not permit such lofty flights of self-renunciation as would be implied in praising God for consigning to the torments of eternal fire his non-elect loved ones, and himself also, if such were the will of the infinite despot he worshiped each night and morn.

On the contrary, he looked upon himself as responsible, not only for his own fate in the hereafter, but to a great extent responsible also for the future weal or woe of the wife and children whom this same God had committed to his care. Hence the mental rack upon which my father was tortured for the greater part of a life that extended some years beyond the scriptural limit.

And now, although a little premature in this life history, it is, perhaps, quite as well to say at this place that it was largely, as I think now, because of seeing the evil effect of his religion upon my father's peace of mind, and upon his bodily health and prospects for longevity, and also because of seeing the utter lack of agreement between the daily lives of church people and the doctrines professed by them, that I became early in life a doubter of the fundamentals of the Christian religion, and have, in consequence of such disbelief, for more than forty years been trying to do what I can to free the minds of others from what I must consider one of the greatest curses under which human beings live, struggle, suffer and die.

How is it possible, I have often mentally queried, that intellectually sane and sympathetically humane men and women can believe such doctrines and yet live the daily lives that most of them live? Why do they cry out, as did one of old, "Oh, that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears!" Why are their eyes not constantly red and swollen with weeping—as I have so often observed in the case of my father—because of a realizing sense of the dangers to which the unbelieving and the impenitent are exposed?

Is it strange that I early came to doubt the sanity, the humanity or the sincerity of my Christian friends? Especially did I learn to doubt the intellectual honesty of the Christian clergy of my acquaintance. When I compared the average clergyman in his pulpit with what I knew him to be as a man and in his daily walk of life, I found it simply impossible to make the two harmonize. In his pulpit, on Sunday, I knew the Christian minister could be severely logical. I knew he could prove the truth of eternal torment for the impenitent from his Bible. I knew also that he could show the sincerity of his belief by sobs and tears while pleading with his hearers to "flee the wrath to come" and to "make their peace, calling and election sure."

And yet I knew, by daily observation, that this same man, when out of his pulpit, could almost immediately become as other men. I knew that he could show by the manner of his daily life that he possessed no deep nor abiding sense of the terrors of his creed, nor of the awful responsibilities that rested upon himself as the shepherd of souls, as the pattern and exemplar of the "way that leadeth unto death"—to death eternal. I knew that the minister could eat, drink and be merry as other men. I knew that he could tell funny stories—stories such as he himself would call "broad" or even "smutty," especially when in company with his brother ministers only, or when he thought none of the ungodly "scoffers" were within hearing distance. I observed that he could even crack jokes at the expense of his creed—could talk about the awful features of his faith with as much levity and unconcern as though he were talking of commonplace problems in mathematics or of the crudest fables of legendary lore.

One instance only as illustrative of what I here refer to. While making maple syrup by night near my paternal home I was visited by our itinerant preacher, who, as usual, was making his home with us while on his rounds. Coming too near the open flue of the furnace he was momentarily in danger of falling into it; when with a merry chuckle he exclaimed: "O lo! I was about to tumble into the very pit of hell!"

Can it be possible, thought I, that this man believes what he preaches? what he tells us with such an air of sincerity from his pulpit? Can he really believe that his fellow human beings are pouring headlong into hell—"like dead flies in an endless stream," as Beecher puts it—and yet laughingly refer to hell, when out of his pulpit, as a very proper subject of mirth? Just as we would expect a mature man to jest about the childish antics of Santa Claus, or the creations of the renowned and veracious Baron Munchausen? In short, is this preacher a hypocrite or an inhuman monster? Or is he a combination of both?

On later reflection I incline to the opinion that the incongruity indicated by the unseemly merriment and jollity of many clergymen is evidence simply of a healthy rebound, a sane or rational reaction against the unnatural, the irrational and the horrible in their creeds; the creeds that their ordination vows and commission as ministers compel them to preach; the creeds that they honestly think are taught in their Bibles, and that they honestly try to believe; the creeds which most of them, perhaps, think they do believe; the creeds, concerning which, if they have honest doubts, they lack the moral courage to openly renounce and denounce, for fear of losing their salaries and their positions as social leaders.

Returning from this temporary digression: In striking contrast with my father's gloomy creed—the creed that hung as a funeral pall over his life, often shutting out completely the light of day—was my mother's mental attitude toward religious questions, and toward myself, as an avowed free-thinker or rationalist. My mother never took my skepticism seriously to heart. She welcomed it, rather, as I now think, and hoped it would prove to be the correct clew, although for prudential reasons she said but little about it. Believing me to be honest in my unbelief, my disbelief, she had no fears as to my "salvation" in a future life. She seemed to think "an honest God could not afford to damn an honest man." Her only concern or her chief anxiety in the matter was that the avowal of heretical or "infidel" opinions would seriously interfere with my success in any vocation of life I might choose to follow. That her fears in this regard were only too well founded I had very good reason to know as the years went hurrying by.

I am thus minute and particular in giving the characteristics of my parents because in no other way, as I think, can I so well describe my own leading traits. I find in myself a combination of all or nearly all that I have described as the salient points in the make-up of my parents, with the traits of my mother predominating.

To my mother, then, I regard myself as chiefly indebted for what I am, have been, and for what I have been enabled to do or to endure. In good sooth, I strongly incline to the opinion that, primarily and directly, I owe everything to my mother, while secondarily and more indirectly, I owe much, very much, to my father.

Of this whole question, however, of parental influences, prenatal and postnatal, and the part that each parent performs or sustains in the work of child-building—and whether, after all, the child does in the work of child-building—and whether, after all, the child does is the work of child-building mainly, using both parents, as well as all other environments, as means or materials out of which to create its body, physical, mental or psychic—I shall probably have something more to say later on.

For the present I content myself with saying that my mother gave to me her own physical characteristics, so far as framework and fiber of body are concerned. My height is about five feet eight inches; normal weight about a hundred and fifty pounds; symmetrical, compact, sinewy, lithe and active. As a boy, and before the fortune that made me a lifelong cripple, I excelled in all athletic games or contests with boys of my own age, and often with boys much older and of larger and heavier build.

As did my mother, I habitually recover quickly from fatigue. And like her I have large capacity for long-continued labor. With her abiding, the worshipful, the adoring instinct or impulse. With her and from her, I see nothing and can conceive of nothing in the wide universe, or outside of and beyond the physical universe, to which I want to bow the head or bend the knee. With her and which I want to bow the head or bend the knee. With her and from her I inherit a plentiful lack of the devout, the worshipful, the adoring instinct or impulse. With her and from her, I see nothing and can conceive of nothing in the wide universe, or outside of and beyond the physical universe, to which I want to bow the head or bend the knee. With her and which I want to bow the head or bend the knee. With her and inherited from her, I find nothing too holy, too sacred, too sacred, to be questioned, to be investigated or rightly analyzed.

Inheriting from her I am first, last and all the time a utilitarian. I would turn everything into a practical channel for the use and benefit of sentient human beings.

"Happiness is the only good"—that is, human happiness primarily, and that of brute beasts, birds, etc., secondarily—seemed to be a prime article in my mother's creed. She could never bear to see a beast beaten or otherwise abused. As for the happiness of "God," the "glory and honor of God," or of the gods, if there are such beings, my mother seemed to think it need not be any concern of ours. Being "unconditioned;" being wholly independent of conditions such as bring happiness or misery to mortals; being infinite in power, infinite in knowledge and infinite in duration, or term of life, the gods cannot, logically, be considered as dependent upon human beings for their happiness, and therefore it is simply and forever impossible for us to "sin against God," or do him an injury of any kind whatsoever. All our duties, then, my mother would argue, are human duties, secular duties, and since religion means belief in and duties towards a god or gods, it follows that our religious duties vanish into nothingness.

I will not say that my mother's conduct and utterances were always in accord with these views. I am now speaking of her conduct and words during what I regard as the best, the bravest and most truly characteristic period of her long and useful life—the period of child bearing and child-rearing. She had probably never heard of Franklin's suggestions to his father to "say grace" over the winter's supply of meat in bulk, to save time, but I distinctly remember that on one occasion my mother protested against my father's habit of giving thanks at table, because of what seemed to her a needless waste of time; and often in early spring, when the "sap" of the sugar maple trees would be going to waste on Sundays, she would insist that it would be better to stay at home and save the sap than to go to church. Not that my mother was constitutionally penurious or covetous of riches. It was not greed but simply her utilitarian bent of mind that could not endure needless waste, and also her inability to see that any supposed god could be made happier or human beings better by words of prayer or songs of adulation and praise one day in seven.

When brought near to death's door at the time of the birth of her youngest child she asked for no prayers in her behalf, neither did a word of prayer escape her lips, so far as I know, though in full possession of her mental faculties. I think my mother was quite fearless of death and of what might be her fate after death of the body—not because she had made her "peace with God" by "repentance and faith," but rather because she had no belief in the existence of a vengeful god.

From both parents I inherit the habit and the love of early rising; also the habit and the love of hard work, both physical and mental. More than all things else, perhaps, I enjoy the exercise of my faculties in useful occupation. Idleness, lack of useful occupation, is torture.

From both parents I inherit a large share of human sympathy, in the general sense. I find it hard, very hard, to feel comfortable or to be merry and joyful when I know that others are in want of food and shelter, or that they are unhappy or uncomfortable because of lack of something that I can give, something that I can do for them. In this regard my mother's habit of mind was phenomenal, perhaps abnormal; so much so that very often she would make her friends quite uncomfortable by over-solicitude for their comfort. I am accused, very frequently, of a like failing.

I think it was largely because of her sympathy for suffering and because of her habit of looking for whys and wherefores that my mother was skeptical in regard to the existence of a god such as theologians describe. She built her god after her own heart. She could not love, worship or assimilate herself with a being who is able to alleviate and to prevent human suffering, and yet who stands idly by and refuses to rescue the perishing and who will not "lend a hand" to succor the needy.

And if she were living today I think my mother would reject as I do the "god-idea" incorporated in the creeds of certain reformed theologians—the "Infinite Intelligence" idea. If infinite intelligence exists anywhere in the universe, such intelligence must be wofully lacking either in sympathy for suffering or in power to prevent or cure suffering. To say that infinite intelligence permits suffering for a good purpose only shifts the difficulty; it does not remove it. If infinite intelligence permits human suffering for a good purpose, then it is simply presumptuous impertinence when finite intelligences interfere with this "let-alone" policy of the superior, the wiser intelligence.

To my mother's mind and to my thinking, a far more rational theory or cosmic concept is that there is no infinite intelligence anywhere to care for human sufferers, or to prepare conditions such as would secure good heredity for all and an equal share of nature's bounties. If there were, it would prevent the necessity of so many religious hospitals and so many eleemosynary institutions of all sorts, and also would forestall the need of so many prayers to infinite intelligence (and infinite benevolence!) to take better care of its children than it is now doing.

As I see it, Victor Hugo's philosophy is far more reasonable when he says: "Humanity has not a moment to lose. Let us hasten. The miserable (Les Miserables) stand with their feet on hot irons. They hunger, they thirst, they perish," etc. That is to say, "Not the 'gods,' not 'infinite intelligence,' but humanity itself is responsible for the existence of and the removal of the evils that afflict humanity. If humanity does not help itself, then no god, no infinite intelligence, will help it or us."

Both my parents were too generous, too sympathetic, for their own material welfare; and often, as I think, their generosity, their sympathy, was not wisely directed. Often the financial aid extended by them to others, and especially to their grown-up children, was, as I now believe, injurious rather than beneficial to the recipients—taking from them the sense of self-hood, self-help, self-dependence.

Another endowment, another fundamental characteristic for which I have my parents to thank, is my strong and persistent love of life, my unconquerable desire to live for the sake of living. And as I view the matter, the child that comes upon the stage of mortal existence without such endowment, without such inheritance, has been sinned against, most grievously sinned against, by those who were chiefly instrumental in bringing it upon that stage.

My parents were young—in their twenty-third year of life—when they gave the initial impulse that resulted in the organization, the incarnation, of the writer of these personal memoranda. Both were then strong, vigorous, healthy, hopeful, buoyant. Life to them was full of golden dreams, of joyous anticipations. They were then planning to migrate, in the near future, from their ancestral homes on the steep and comparatively sterile slopes of the Alleghanies to the newer-settled, more productive, more fertile lands west of the "Belle Riviere," as the French explorers called the Ohio River,—to them a veritable land of promise; a land of boundless resources, of limitless possibilities; a land that to their excited imaginations would soon be made to flow not only with milk and honey but with all other earthly blessings. These hopes, these rose-colored expectations, were doubtless incarnated—ingrained and interwoven—prenatally into my mortal organism, and hence my very large endowment of hopefulness, and of what phrenologists call "vitativeness," or love of life. Professor O. S. Fowler, the most famous of American phrenologists, in a professional examination (1866) said to me: "I take you to be a hard one to kill. Your desire to live and your hold on life are tenacious and strong."

And still another endowment for which I have my parents to thank is my strong desire to know—to know for the sake of knowing; my insatiable thirst for knowledge; my unconquerable desire to get at the facts, the basic facts, the hidden causes of things—of phenomena, appearances, terrestrial and celestial; my inappeasable and wholly irreverent desire to unlock the "arcana of Nature" and possess myself of her most secret treasures. My parents had themselves been blessed with but very meager advantages in the way of scholastic education—just enough to make them keenly hungry for more. My mother was only nine years of age when, by the untimely death of her own mother, she was left to take the place of mother to her three younger sisters, and largely also to her two brothers, older than herself. Her father, George Harman, never remarried. When urged to do so his invariable answer was, "Never! No step-mother shall ever play the tyrant over my children." As his business, that of millwright and carpenter, took him from home most of the time, my mother knew little of parental care after her tenth year; and six weeks of "schooling," when quite young, was all of pedagogic instruction that fell to her lot.

In my father's case the fates had been a little more propitious. His father, Jonas Harman, having been himself a teacher, in a small way, and having been a fairly good scholar in both English and German, it was but natural that my father—though the oldest and to some extent the bread-winner for a dozen or more younger brothers and sisters—had enjoyed better opportunities for getting a common-school education than did my mother. At that time, however, the standard of literary acquirement and general culture among the mountaineers of West Virginia was very low, and hence it is not surprising that when married—in his twenty-first year—as I have often heard my father say, his book learning did not extend beyond mastery of the spelling book and the first or elementary rules of arithmetic, and his knowledge of these was by no means perfect.

But notwithstanding unfavorable environments of many kinds, both my parents had received a taste of learning and culture sufficient to give them a keen appetite for more, and that appetite, by hereditary transmission, became a leading characteristic in my own intellectual make-up.

Looking for causes, I strongly incline to the belief that it was a fortunate circumstance for me that my parents had not been surfeited with school and books in their youth as a preparation for parenthood. If, during their tender years, they had been compelled to go to school continuously as most young children now are, and if their immature minds had been crammed to repletion with "facts and figures" for which they would naturally have but little appetite and less comprehension—at a time of life when nature stoutly rebels against indoor confinement and asks for the young only a chance to bask in sunshine and fresh air, with plenty of healthful food and plenty of sleep and rest when tired of play—if such unnatural confinement and untimely mental labor had been the lot of my parents, then, as I now believe, they would have failed to transmit to me the inextinguishable desire for knowledge that I have ever regarded as my best patrimony.

To generalize a little: One chief reason why children often surpass their parents in learning and culture is because of inherited hunger for these things—hunger for opportunities that had been denied by fortune to the parents. The strong but disappointed longing, the unrealized hope in the mind of the parents, becomes the satisfied desire, the realized hope, in the next generation. For a like reason one chief cause of the frequently observed indifference toward learning and culture on the part of the children of teachers, preachers, lawyers and others whose literary acquirements are many and great, but which acquirements are utilized for bread-winning purposes, or for social, political or clerical advancement—this commonly observed indifference on the part of the second generation is the natural and necessary result of satiety, or surfeit, and of consequent disgust, revulsion, existing in the minds of such parents toward learning and culture when their children receive prenatal bias and endowment.

In my own case, as already intimated, fortune stood my friend, in that I was born with an unquenchable thirst for knowledge, for learning, and with at least average capacity for acquiring the same.

1076

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

Oct. 14.—"The Relation of the Strenuous Life to Nervous Exhaustion," by Dr. Twing B. Wiggin, University of Illinois School of Medicine.

Oct. 21.—"Reincarnation," by Sukharam Ganesh Pandit, Bombay, India.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

Oct. 21.—"The Crime of Capital Punishment," by Abram Adelman.

Oct. 14.—"Single Tax," by H. H. Hardinge.

The Moods of Life.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

A collection of verse which will be sure to attract attention among those who are looking for new poetry. The author has been a contributor to American magazines for several years, and is well known as a poet of modernity with a remarkable gift of imaginative expression. 12mo cloth; gilt title; 160 pages, $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The American Institute of Phrenology.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,

For the Supreme and Superwoman and The New Civilization,

2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, OCTOBER 25, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1077

FREEDOM.

How does the meadow flower its bloom unfold?
Because the lovely little flower is free
Down to its root, and in that freedom bold;
And so the grandeur of the forest tree
Comes not by casting in a formal mould,
But from its own divine vitality.

—William Wordsworth.

THE NATIONAL PURITY FEDERATION.

Several hundred earnest and well-meaning persons met at Abraham Lincoln Center, Chicago, October 8, and attended the annual conference of the National Purity Federation. From the Liberator, a magazine published in support of the work of the federation, these statements are taken:

"The National Purity Federation recognizes the existence of a traffic in girls and is taking steps for the abolition of such traffic.

"This federation shall labor for the promotion of purity in the home and in society generally. It shall labor to secure legislation to make the teaching of purity a part of the public school course.

"It opposes every form of police or state regulation of the social evil, and urges the rigid enforcement of law for the suppression of vice and the legislation of laws [sic] that will insure better protection to girlhood.

"Recognizing the fact that the responsibility of parenthood should rest in the same measure upon fathers as upon mothers, the National Purity Federation resolves that fathers of illegitimate children shall assume the full responsibility of fatherhood, and that children shall share the father's property and bear his name."

What is purity? The word pure comes from the Latin word purus, meaning clean. The Greek pur (pyr), puros, means fire. Both are from the Sanscrit root pū, to purify, to make clean, to purge by fire. So the word has changed little if any from its original meaning. In a moral sense the purifying, instead of being by fire, is by light—the light of knowledge, truth. Hence the name LUCIFER, the Light Bearer, the bringer of knowledge to purify minds.

LUCIFER, therefore, stands for purity, for the light of knowledge which will do more than legislation to eradicate vice and protect girlhood and boyhood, womanhood and manhood, from the effects of ignorance.

LUCIFER recognizes the traffic in girls as an appalling evil, strangely enough due in great degree to the policy pursued by millions of well-meaning persons who seek to abolish it by legislation instead of enlightening children as to the nature of the sexual functions and the consequences of their abuse. LUCIFER agrees with the Purity Federation in opposing "every form of police or state regulation of vice," but it does not believe that "the rigid enforcement of law for the suppression of vice" will "insure better protection to girlhood." The experience of thousands of years in the "enforcement of laws for the suppression of vice" has proved the futility of such a course.

Ignorance is the mother of vice. Ignorance on the part of those who are fighting vice nurtures it instead of eliminating it. With a few notable exceptions, those engaged most zealously in the battle against the social evil disregard the scriptural injunction, "First cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then thou shalt see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye." If first they would purify their own minds and realize that there is nothing inherently unclean in the sexual functions or the serious discussion of the sexual relations, they would join with LUCIFER in a campaign of enlightenment, instead of carrying on immensely absurd and bootless war for suppression of knowledge and the promotion of ignorance.

Most of the legislators who enact "obscenity" laws are men of unclean notions of sex; men who practice in private the "obscenity" they enact laws against. Why? Because their minds are unclean and the laws they enact are for the prosecution of others, they themselves hoping to violate those laws without being caught. With these men, then, the crime is not in violating the law, but in getting caught.

At the purity conference Bishop Fallows read a statement from Anthony Comstock, telling how the Comstock "obscenity law" was passed after midnight of the last hours of a session of congress. He did not tell that it was passed by a congress which was denounced by democratic and republican papers alike as the most corrupt that ever disgraced the American republic. He did not tell of the riotous scenes on the floor of congress among the debauched and drunken lawmakers at the time these unblushing thieves and debauchees were passing the law which many good people believe was made for the protection of the American homes, but which has been used since by the zealous ignoramus Comstock and his supporters for the cultivation of vice by the prosecution of such persons as Dr. Alice B. Stockham, Ida Craddock and Moses Harman, who were striving to enlighten the people in such a way as to make sexual vice a rare abnormality.

No person acquainted with Dr. Stockham, Mrs. Craddock and Moses Harman could possibly doubt their sincerity and pure-mindedness. Because their minds were clean they discussed the sexual relations delicately, sanely and intelligently. Thousands of women and men can and will gladly testify that their minds have been made cleaner, their bodies purer and their lives happier by the teachings of these three persons, who have been hounded by Comstock as if they were the enemies instead of the benefactors of society.

Dr. Stockham was convicted and fined in the federal court for publishing a typewritten letter giving in chaste and delicate language information to young persons in regard to sexual hygiene in order to make their married lives sweet, happy and uplifting, instead of disappointing, bitter and degrading. For the publication of a similar letter, which had the approval of physicians and ministers of high standing, Ida Craddock was imprisoned in an insane asylum and in the house of correction on Blackwell's Island, New York, and at last was driven to suicide by the unrelenting and unclean-minded Comstock, whose hideous law makes it a crime to send by mail any information in regard to sexual hygiene.

Moses Harman's experience is known to all the regular readers of LUCIFER. Several times he has been imprisoned because of the publication of articles in LUCIFER advocating mental enlightenment in regard to the sexual functions as the best means for the eradication of vice. Because of his antagonism to the impurity of the Movement for the Promotion of Ignorance he now is serving a sentence of one year in the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas. Yet it is extremely doubtful if there is any man living with a cleaner mind in regard to sexual matters than Moses Harman. It is doubtful that anybody ever heard him use a vulgar or so-called "obscene" expression, ever heard him tell a "smutty" story or ever heard him speak lightly or jestingly of the sexual relations.

What hope is there for the decrease of sexual degradation when such persons as these three are hounded to death or imprisoned for their efforts to cleanse the minds of the "purifiers" and strike at the root of the tree of ignorance which bears the deadly fruit of sexual degradation?

Moses Harman, too, advocated the "teaching of purity (sexual hygiene) as a part of the public school course." He regards this as the most important study for the welfare of the human race, and contends that the greatest of rights is the "right to be born right."

In regard to the Purity Federation's demand that illegitimate children "shall share the father's property and name," it might be remarked that this result cannot be accomplished by law, for the reason that it frequently is impossible in such cases to determine who are the fathers and it would open a wide door for blackmail. It is impossible that a woman properly informed as to the sexual functions would consent to allow a man whom she could not trust to become the father of her child. But trusts of this nature are betrayed even in wedlock, and many married men desert their wives and children regardless of laws against it.

The great fight of Moses Harman's life has been against the abuse of maternity and for the right of women in or out of wedlock to the control of their own persons. For this also he has been attacked by the "puritans," who believe that a wife belongs to her husband, and that it is unreasonable and wicked for her to refuse him his so-called "conjugal rights." Yet practically the same stand is taken by Professor Newton N. Riddell in his book "The New Man," from which the following excerpt is taken:

"Men, the abuse of maternity is the crime of Christendom. All nature protests against it, animals resist it to the death, savages rarely practice it and only in Christian lands is it common. What a sin! What a vice! What a crime! Think of intelligent men, even Christian men, men who have taken their vow at some church altar to 'renounce the world, the flesh and the devil'; men, living in the morning of the twentieth century, enjoying all the advantages of our enlightened age, being so controlled by habit and dominated by passion that they will prostitute maternity, defile the creative office of the Most High and stamp the ensign of sin upon a forming soul!

"Is it any wonder that children are born with vicious tendencies? Is it any wonder that the gospel of Christ fails to purify society? Is it not a wonder that a righteous God does not smite the earth in indignation?

"When men and women are willing to live pure lives and direct their creative forces to the brain, then, and only then, will the mass of mankind develop as they should; then, and only then, will the divine ideal of matrimony be realized; then, and only then, will parentage become a sacred privilege, children be well born, vice and crime decline and the gospel of Christ reclaim the world from sin."

The National Purity Federation can accomplish a great work by devoting its attention to the education of the people as to the sane and proper relations of the sexes and less to demands for useless legislation. Let the purifiers cleanse their own minds by reading Edward Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age" and other sane works which show the real cause of sexual degradation.

ADDISON TUCKER.

WOULD DIVORCE BE WORSE?

PHILIP G. PEABODY, Boston, Mass.—The very day I read the first page of LUCIFER regarding the sadness of a home where children are without both parents—i. e., where divorce exists—and the excellent statement that it is sadder to have a child see the murder of its mother by its father, I read the following three items in a daily paper:

MINNEAPOLIS, Sept. 28.—Discovered in the attempt at suicide by inhaling gas, Henry Sussman was today taken in charge by the police. Later he confessed to the murder of his young wife as she lay asleep in a room in the Glenwood hotel last Wednesday morning. Sussman said he had endeavored to induce his wife to go to LaCrosse with him to testify in his behalf in his trial for forgery. She would not agree. He said they quarreled all night, and then he shot her.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—Greeted affectionately by his wife on his return from the penitentiary today, Giuseppe Conte, a cigar manufacturer, shot her twice, mortally wounding her. It was in the presence of their five children and of her sister-in-law. Conte made his escape.

MAHANOY CITY, PA., Sept. 30.—Angered because the visit of the stork to his home resulted in a girl when he hoped for a boy, Wallace Gederich beat his wife so badly that her life is despaired of. He is under arrest.

"To invest the public magistrate (and more especially a private vice society) with the power of restricting opinion would be to trust the progress of information to the mercy and pleasure of a government (or the manager of the vice society). More formidable dangers are justly to be apprehended from arming the constituted organs of authority with a power to arrest the career of Human intellect than from all the evils attributable to licentiousness."—P. 181 of Wortman.

EDWARD BLISS FOOTE, SR.

[The following sketch of the life of Dr. Foote was written by Samuel P. Putnam for his book, "Four Hundred Years of Freethought" (1894). T. B. Wakeman delivered the address at Dr. Foote's funeral, which was held on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 7. This address, together with other matter of interest, will appear in a memorial pamphlet which his son, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., will issue shortly.]

There are several biographies extant giving the career nearly or quite up to date of the well-known physician and medical author whose portrait appears in this volume. (See "Men of Mark,"

EDWARD BLISS FOOTE, SR.

"American Biography," C. Edward Lester's "American Advancement," the "National Cyclopedia of American Biography," and "The World's Sages, Thinkers and Reformers.") In this sketch we shall speak only of Dr. Foote's record as a liberal, prefacing it with a brief glimpse of his early environment.

Edward Bliss Foote was born in the village of Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 20, 1829. Village it was at that time, although it has since become one of the largest and handsomest cities of the "Buckeye State." While in his infancy, his father, Herschel, and his mother, Pamelia, removed to a small village seven and one-half miles to the westward of Cleveland, where stood the first church that was built on the Connecticut Western Reserve. Around or near this church edifice clustered a neighborhood of eastern people, most of whom were from the staid old state of Connecticut. Herschel Foote was the village merchant, the postmaster and the squire. His home was literally a free hotel for ministers, school teachers and singing masters. On one Sunday three of the Beechers were entertained—Dr. Lyman, Dr. Edward and the Rev. William Beecher. Mr. and Mrs. Foote were choristers at the one Presbyterian church. Libraries were little thought of by the pioneers of Ohio. On the book-shelves of the Foote family could be found "Pilgrim's Progress," Watts' "On the Mind," Fox's "Book of Martyrs" and similar religious publications, but no such volumes as Paine's "Age of Reason" or the works of Hume or Voltaire. The young doctor was taught to regard Paine, Hume and Voltaire as frightfully vicious men. The term "young doctor" is used advisedly, for the subject of this narrative was called "Doctor" in the neighborhood when he was in pantalettes, for the reason that when he was asked as to what would be his occupation when he grew to manhood he always replied that he would be a physician; but with the limited opportunities at that time in that sparsely settled region the prospect of acquiring the necessary equipment for the medical profession was not encouraging. At twelve years of age the young doctor, in the absence of any religious revival, became a member of the Presbyterian church, and, true to his disposition to perform well his part in every cause in which he enlists, his attendance upon the weekly prayer meetings was regular and punctual.

About this time the boy became deeply interested in the biography of Benjamin Franklin, and when he learned that Dr. Franklin obtained pretty much all of his preliminary education in the printing office he conceived the idea of apprenticing himself to the art of the printer. Parental objections were manifested for manifold reasons, but in the face of great opposition the first opportunity presenting itself was eagerly seized by the youth of fifteen and one-half years. In the printers' composing room, away from the atmosphere of the pious home, evolution began, and that, too, without the aid of liberal literature, for the early settlers of Cleveland were mostly devout people. After serving a three years' apprenticeship in a newspaper office, and acquiring in the meantime considerable facility with the pen, he became the editor of the first paper published in New Britain, Conn. About this time the Rochester and Stratford knockings occasioned no little excitement throughout the country, and the secular press was generally disposed to ridicule them; but Editor Foote took the position in his editorials that investigation rather than ridicule was in order. Without becoming a spiritualist, he has ever maintained the right of the new faith to exist. When Theodore Parker was filling Music Hall in Boston every Sunday with an enthusiastic and admiring audience, Foote was a resident of New York, and although the "Hub" was not then, as now, a suburb of New York, he found the time and means to visit Boston now and then to listen to the great independent Unitarian preacher. The young doctor became a liberal Unitarian, and later, in New York, attended upon the preaching of the Rev. O. B. Frothingham, who, like Parker, was a liberal Unitarian. It was while entertaining the Unitarian belief that Dr. Foote wrote his far-famed "Plain Home Talk," and this fact accounts for all in the pages of the first edition of that book which has a pious flavor. Since writing that work its author has become an agnostic.

When D. M. Bennett started the Truth Seeker a warm and lasting friendship sprang up between the doctor and the infidel editor. The mother of the present editor of the paper founded by D. M. Bennett, Mrs. Macdonald, went about among the handful of liberals in New York and sought help for the new paper. Dr. Foote's contributions were not withheld, and the fearless, able and industrious editor had his full sympathy.

In 1872 the first Comstock bill was presented in the New York legislature. This bill Dr. Foote opposed with both argument and money. Alone he battled with this new kind of legislation. When he found the bill had passed both branches he submitted his objections in writing in a letter to Governor Dix, but he subsequently found that the governor's signature to the bill was dated on the same day on which his letter was written. After a law of this character found its way into the statutes of the Empire state it was a comparatively easy matter on the part of the Comstock people to procure the passage of a similar bill in congress, creating through the postal regulations an odious censorship of the press. This was effected in the winter of 1872-73, and in 1874 Comstock retaliated upon Dr. Foote for his opposition to his measure by arresting him on the charge of violating the postal laws. In this suit, before Judge Benedict of the United States circuit court of the southern district of New York, in 1876, Dr. Foote was fined $3,500 for having sent through the United States mails an innocent pamphlet treating on physiological subjects and advocating the right of married people to regulate the size of the family through the use of contraceptics. Shortly after this came the arrest of E. H. Heywood and D. M. Bennett, charged with violating the postal laws. Liberals are familiar with these trials and their outrageous results. Then came the formation of the National Defense Association to oppose the Comstock laws and their odious enforcement. Ever an active member of this association, Dr. Foote has contributed freely to its support and given much of his time in carrying out its objects. At his residence, 120 Lexington avenue, the association set in motion the precedence, 120 Lexington avenue, the association set in motion the preliminaries which led to the immense and enthusiastic gathering at Chickering Hall to welcome D. M. Bennett on his release from Albany prison. The doctor was a member of the committee sent to receive Mr. Bennett as he emerged from the somber atmosphere of his cell. It was also at Dr. Foote's residence that the association met to devise means to send the eloquent and persuasive Laura Kendrick to Washington to plead for the release of Ezra H. Heywood from Dedham jail, and her mission was a success. Dr. Foote was one of the monument committee after the grand old man Bennett passed away, and when the trustees of Greenwood cemetery sent a message to the committee that the inscription designed for the monument would not be permitted, Dr. Foote was among those of his colleagues who stood firmly for no compromise. He was in favor of putting the inscriptions deep in the granite even if the block had to be excluded from the cemetery. He would join in purchasing a site for it just outside the cemetery where it would forever be in view of the narrow-minded guardians of the noted burial ground. The monument was set up in Greenwood, and the inscriptions as originally prepared were conspicuously imprinted upon it without the least modification. In all of Moses Harman's troubles Dr. Foote has been the persecuted editor's fast friend and has given him no small amount of financial support. The doctor also contributed largely to aid Bradlaugh and Besant in their fight for liberty of the press, and also for the defense of Troelove.

In everything the doctor is liberal. He is in full sympathy with the exclamation once made by Eugene Macdonald, that "he would fight for the right of another to differ from him." For instance, Dr. Foote is a regularly registered physician in the state of New York, but from the beginning of medical legislation in the state in 1874 he has steadily opposed by argument, and money freely contributed, the imposition of penalties upon those who would seek to relieve human ills by methods not approved by the regular profession. He has fought in legislative committees and in the medical societies to which he belongs for the right of Christian scientists, mental scientists, faith carers, magnetic healers, etc., to practice the healing art.

From the moment he became an editor, almost half a century ago, he advocated woman's suffrage. When, in 1873, Susan B. Anthony was fined $100 for daring to cast a vote in Rochester, the doctor sent his check for $25 to assist in paying the unjust fine. It may also be remarked in this connection that when C. B. Reynolds, the liberal lecturer, was fined $25 in New Jersey for blasphemy, Dr. Foote made haste to send his check for that amount, but Colonel Ingersoll, who so ably pleaded Mr. Reynolds' cause, generously paid the fine and all costs, so that the doctor's check was used for other purposes connected with the cause in which Mr. Reynolds was engaged. The doctor is a member of the Federation of Freethought, the Secular Union, the Manhattan Liberal Club, the Institute of Heredity, the National Defense Association, the National Constitutional Liberty League, the New York Public Health and Constitutional Liberty League, the American Psychical Society, and in politics is an enthusiastic populist. Wherever the banner of advanced thought is unfurled a field-glass will not be required to find the subject of this sketch.

"The judgment of the dead" is the admonition and inspiration of the living. Mr. Wakeman's estimate was honest, careful, clear. His eulogy of the dead leader was as deserved as it was glowing, a sounding of the long roll anew to the never-ending battle for liberty and high life in human service. No struggle in history is one man's work, but we cannot, dare not imagine how far back our defense of liberty of thought and utterance might have been borne had it not been for Dr. Edward B. Foote, who is now dead as time measures death, but who lives again in the son who bears his name and holds steadily aloft the unfading colors of our cause.

With dry eyes we said Good-by, for the sorrow is ours, not his, and it is weak to weep for ourselves when there is so much work that calls for wide and keen vision and unshaken determination. Our tribute to him is our labor for the truth and justice and freedom to which he gave his thought and hope and purse.

EDWIN C. WALKER.

Dear Lillian: I have elsewhere expressed some part of my realization of the magnitude of our common loss in the death of Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr. His work for liberalism can never be too highly estimated, and is, in some respects, not to be paralleled by that of any other human being, living or dead. His position for half a century in the very forefront of the battle for a common humanity deserves, I feel, some more permanent recognition than our simple verbal tributes, which are so soon forgotten; and I desire through you to ask the sense of LUCIFER's readers as to some appropriate form of a memorial which may tell the next generation that we were at least not wholy ungrateful to one who has done so much for us. I trust this matter will be taken up with heartiness. As soon as suitable suggestions are made I know there are hundreds of us who will count it a privilege to participate in carrying them out.

JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

244 West 143d street, New York, N. Y.

Hypocrites and bigots have cunningly devised the crime of obscenity and caused it to be entered upon the statute books of the country, by which they are able to imprison, annoy and disgrace independent thinkers."—Bennett.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

HOSPITAL, U. S. P., LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Oct. 14, 1906.

My Dear Lillian: Am glad my letter of two weeks ago reached you all right. Glad you got copy finished in good time for No. 1076. How I wish I could see a copy of that number, with pictures of the family and your comments on my life-work. Did you get your mother's picture with the rest? Hope you did.

Please say to Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., that I much regret to hear of his late bereavement. I had been led to think that the senior's health was better and that his years of useful work were not ended. I well recall his personality, his strong though venerable appearance in 1893, when I had the pleasure of meeting him and spending considerable time with him while attending the Liberal Congress of that year in Chicago. While life lasts I can never forget what he did for us and for the paper with which we have been identified for so many years. The work done by Drs. E. B. Foote, senior and junior, through their Health Monthly, their "Encyclopedia of Medical, Physiological and Sexual Science," and other books, pamphlets, etc., has never been surpassed, if equaled, by any other two physicians. I hope you will get up a good sketch of the senior's life in No. 1077. Of course you cannot do the subject justice in one issue of the paper. Perhaps Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., will send you an article for a later number, supplementing, in a measure, what you must leave out. His biography ought to be published in book form. Did he not leave an autobiography in manuscript? I hope he did.

Since writing last I have had two visits, one from our good and faithful friend M. H. Coffin, of Longmont, Colo., and one from son George and his good companion, Nellie, of Valley Falls. As always, these visits were much appreciated by United States Prisoner No. 5326, not only for the honor and pleasure bestowed by the visits themselves, but also for the donations of apples, that king of fruits, and most nearly essential to health of such confirmed fruitarians as myself.

Please say to Louisa Deutscher, 203 Mettler street, Toledo, Ohio, that I got her good letter and the book "Autology," for both of which I thank her most sincerely. Am reading the book and find it very interesting; will try to say something more about it later on.

From J. H. Lohmeyer, California, I received seventeen copies of the Progressive Thinker, Chicago, some of which are duplicates of copies already received from the editor, I am inclined to think, but they will be appreciated by the patients in the hospital and prisoners in the cell-houses. Please thank him for me; also thank Brother Francis, if he is sending his paper to me.

Also received four copies of a quarterly magazine called Free Trade Broadside, from which I should like to send you selections for publication in LUCIFER if I were permitted to do so. The Free Trade Broadside is published at 6 Beacon street, Boston. Membership in the American Free Trade League is $1 a year. Thank the league for me and say I would like to see more of their publications.

Please thank the editor and publisher of Mother Earth for the September number of that very excellent publication. Hope it will live long and prosper. It is published at 210 East Thirteenth street, New York City.

A. Wangemann, Chicago correspondent of International Single Tax Press Writer Corps, sends me copy of the Workers' Advocate, Chicago; also copy of World's Advance Thought, Portland, Ore., with good letter. In a previous letter he mentioned that he had seen comments on my imprisonment in many foreign single tax papers. Will you ask him to kindly make translations of such comments for me?

W. H. Burr, Washington, D. C., sends copy of his poem, "All About Angels"; also leaflet in regard to Shakespeare and Bacon, dated April 15, 1896.

Dr. Robert Greer, Maywood, Ill., sends copies of the prospectus of his new book, "The Angel's Message."

Of foreign cards with brief greetings I have received since last letter-day four from George Bedborough, London, Eng.; one from Emma Best, Sydney, Australia; one from D. Legelke, "a German woman who found her home in England." Of cards from American friends, John E. Boultenhouse, New York, again heads the list with eleven—nearly one for each day of the fortnight. Next in number comes Philip G. Peabody, Boston, with six.

Forwarded from the usher's office, Joliet prison, I am in receipt of ten letters written in the early part of March last, and held from my eye because considered improper for me to see—I naturally infer. Now, it seems, the authorities at Joliet have decided to let me have them. They are as follows: One each from "The Chaplain" (A. Johnson), San Francisco, Cal.; Dr. S. A. West, Rockport, Mo.; Joseph Steiner, Washington, D. C.; Ed W. Chamberlain, New York City; J. Allen Evans, Cripple Creek, Colo.; Anna Fish, Newburg, N. Y.; Hannah S. Fish (nine years old), same place; H. W. Hunt, Federalsburg, Md.; George R. Wheeler, Chicago; J. Bloomingdale, Clifton, N. Y.

Of letters and cards not yet mentioned, received since last letter-day, I thankfully acknowledge the following: Katharine S. Fry, 1; R. B. Kerr, 1; Hulda P. Loomis, 1; J. D. Wilhite, 1; C. N. Greene, 1; Emma Greene, 1; J. B. Phinney, 1; W. H. Boomer, 1; Henry C. Hanson, Illinois, 1; Walter Breen, 1; Ada M. Morley, 1; "The Chaplain" (A. Johnson), 1; G. B. Wheeler, 1; "Frank," 1; Oscar Schleif, 1; Thirza Rathbun, 1; H. P. Ebers, 1; J. Allen Evans, 1; W. P. Ward, 1; Dr. A. B. Stockham, 1 (this letter was written August 1 and was delayed enroute); G. W. Morgan, 1; Gertie Vose, 1; Bessie Ostrom, 1 (with sprig of cedar from Puget Sound); George Boecklin, 1; Myra, 1.

Say to Brother Phinney that I would gladly accept his kind invitation to visit him at his Springfield (Mo.) home on my return to Chicago (if I should live to return), but that it will not probably be in my power to do so.

Say to R. B. Kerr and to Emma Greene that I much appreciate their friendly criticisms in regard to what I said in a recent letter to you in reference to women as leaders in humanitarian work. I knew I would "catch it" when I wrote the paragraphs, and wanted much to mention the names and work of such women as Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lucretia Mott, Susan B. Anthony, and many others living and dead, but I did not have room at the time.

Brother Kerr mentions that "all Europe is stirred up over woman suffrage owing to the activity of Teresa Billington, Annie Kenney and other English women known as 'suffragettes'." I am glad to hear such news—not that I expect much good to follow in the near future from the entrance of women into the field of machine politics, but rather because I think the agitation of woman's wrongs in this particular will help to arouse the public conscience to a sense of the wrong done whenever man attempts to govern either woman or man without the consent of the governed. It will help to bring people to see, with Abraham Lincoln, that "no man is good enough to govern another man," and if not good enough to govern his fellow man it will easily be seen that no man is good enough to govern a woman—with or without her consent.

I have long contended that woman should have all the civil and political rights that men have; that she should vote and be voted for, if she so desires, or leave it alone if she so desires, as I have practically left it alone for the past twenty years. This means that I have little faith that the entrance of women into active politics will do any good so long as our fundamental laws are what they now are—our land laws, money laws, tariff laws, transportation laws, etc.—and I have little faith that women will help to change these old-time laws that build up privileges for the few and rob the many. Women are by nature more aristocratic, more conservative, more monopolistic than are men. See what the women did in Colorado. It was a populist administration, a populist wave, that enfranchised the Colorado women. What did the women do to show their gratitude? I do not need to say that they overthrew the populist administration and gave the political control to the conservatives, the monopolists. Why? Because, as just said, women's sympathies are towards conservatism, not towards radicalism; towards the old, the "respectable," the venerable, and not towards the new, the untried, the plebeian, the democratic, the equalizing of rights and privileges. Of course, I now speak of women as a sex; there are many honorable exceptions, and with the possession of political power it is to be hoped more women will do their own thinking than now; that a sense of responsibility will cause them to reason more and not allow themselves to be governed by emotion and prejudice so much as now. But, as with the masses of masculine voters, women will follow the leaders, the bosses, both political and clerical. In Kansas women vote for certain offices in municipal affairs. I once knew a clergyman in a small Kansas town to threaten his women parishioners with "the constable" if they did not go to the polls and vote his ticket. In the Woman's Tribune, Washington, D. C., dated July 28, 1906, under the head "Woman Suffrage Coming," Bishop McQuaid, of Rochester, "one of the most honored of the Catholic bishops," is quoted as saying: "The time will come when women will vote, and then we will see the greatest voting the world ever saw. We [the Catholics] are not afraid of woman suffrage. Our women will save the day for us."

Women do not like politics; it is too much like war. They prefer to stay at home and raise sons to go to war—of bullets or ballots—if fighting is necessary; but from a sense of religious duty, as outlined above, women may go to the polls and vote—vote as their religious confessors instruct them to vote. It has long been predicted that woman suffrage would result in civil war, and would bring back the days of the "Holy Inquisition," when heretics and infidels were banished, imprisoned, tortured and burned at the stake. I do not share this view, but that there is reason to expect a serious reaction towards a hierarchy I think probable.

Time up. With love,

M. H.

[Since writing the above letter my father has received a copy of LUCIFER No. 1076—the second copy of his paper that he has seen since he went to prison last February. We have no good portrait of my mother, and I would not wish to print a poor picture of her. But even had I possessed a good picture I would not have cared to publish it in that issue. The pictures of my father's children and grandchildren were given place, not because of any interest which the reader might possibly feel in their personality, but because as his descendants they have their place in the record of his life's work. For that reason, also, nothing was said of them except as I found it necessary to mention myself in my recollections of my father's experiences and observations.—L. H.]

We can still supply copies of LUCIFER No. 1060. This is the special number devoted to the prosecutions of the editor of LUCIFER and the attempted suppression of his paper. Price, 25 cents a dozen.

FORTIFY YOUR CHILD WITH THE TRUTH.

If your child is old enough to go to school, and you have not told it something of the principles of life, nature's wise and beautiful laws for perpetuating the flowers, the birds and the animals, and human beings, your child is keeping concealed from you a morbid curiosity which is injuring it. Innocence is "purity of heart, freedom from that which is harmful." If you would make the false and vulgar speculations of ignorant playmates forever uninteresting to your boy or girl, start it with the truth, so far as you know it.

Maybe your own child is so unfortunate as not to have been born of love. If so, you can at least imagine one more purely born. Make a story of it and tell it to your boy or girl. Are you ashamed to do so? Why then did you bear a child? Do you want him to be ashamed that he was born? If not, make no mystery of the story of creation. If your thought is high and pure and your words frank and honest, you will see the eager little face of your listener soften with loving confidence and satisfaction. No more wondering, no more mysteries, no more lies.

And you need not fear that your plain speaking will be promiscuously advertised among the other children. The child that knows, generally keeps still. It is the unsatisfied mind that speculates and investigates and talks.—"H." in Truth Seeker.

"Personally I feel that it is an extremely foolish law, and if I had been a legislator I never would have voted for it."—Judge John R. Brady, on Comstock postal law.

"As to the evil which results from a censorship, it is impossible to measure it, because it is impossible to tell where it ends."—Jeremy Bentham.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 76 years and 13 days of age. He has served 227 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan. Purely private subjects should be avoided, as all letters are read by prison officials and withheld if not approved. Do not ask questions requiring answer. All such questions, matter pertaining to LUCIFER, changes of addresses, etc., should be sent to the office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

THE IMPURITY OF PURITANS.

The letter of Mrs. Loretta R. (in No. 1075) is much to be welcomed as an honest and naive expression of the opinion of our opponents, and in its way as important as the clear-headed reply to it of the editor. Sometimes we may learn from such expressions what influences coming from older ideals are to be cherished—influences which perhaps may be weakened or lost because conservative people are seldom earnest and capable enough to set them forth.

But in this letter we have chiefly to note the essentially low view of those who defend bond love. Truly their very souls seem in bondage, and their intellectual vision darkened by the obscurity of a dungeon of the mind.

It is all there. First there is the contempt for sex love. Though I am not fond of theological threats, I must here quote that true saying of the Koran: "The contemptuous shall not enter Paradise." No moral loss can be greater than that of those who do not know that sex love is the most beautiful of all human instincts which make for a noble civilization. Its intense and passional manifestations are to be studied and welcomed as the sailor welcomes the strong wind and uses its strength. It would be a poor yachtsman who would never go to sea for fear of the storms that sometimes come.

Mrs. Loretta refers to sex feeling and courtship as "dirty impulses" and "hunting company." Contrast these words with those of Gladys V. Lamb: "Never regret having loved. Be sorry if you must for anything but that. The days when you hated, blamed, condemned you will recall with sorrow; but give a shout of joy, let your heart exult for every precious moment when you gave love freely!" Which spirit is the more likely to guide the future, the spirit of honor and joy in sex, or the spirit of contempt?

Then there is the view that the one great maternal duty is to provide material support for the children; and this materialism of maternal ideal is so insisted on that it is thought right that a woman should sell herself for life to a man to insure, or try to insure, its fulfilment, regardless of the love needs of either man or woman. But man does not live by bread alone. How many men and women continue to love deeply under the exclusive bond of marriage? What kind of education have the children of an unloving pair who are bound together, daily witnessing the effects of jarring temperaments? We may scarcely blame a woman who is compelled to sell herself, for a day or for a lifetime, in order to give her children bread; but surely this cannot be our ideal; and until such time as maternity is honored and supported by the community it is best that women who aspire to motherhood should try to secure a self-respecting position of work, though it may be double work, as women's work so often is. Free and honored motherhood is becoming easier in America. Paternal care which is only compelled by law is not worth having. And, as the editor also well reminds us, undesired children are much more characteristic of bond unions than of free unions. Sex radicals advocate the teaching of knowledge and self-restraint—the teaching that Comstock persecutes and suppresses.

I would like to say something on sex love in "dogs, cats and other animals," as to which Mrs. Loretta seems to me to be not only contemptuous but inaccurate. The ways of domestic animals are especially instructive and even afford moral lessons; and we should note that they are races which are bred by selection and have been largely selected for gentleness as well as for other qualities.

It is certainly not characteristic of the female of any species, nor of the human species, to seek the male. When the queen cat goes abroad to hunt it is usually to bring home a rabbit or other prey for her kittens. She prefers being courted to courting. Breeders of dogs say that the female often insists on her own selection, usually a former mate, firmly refusing others; and finely-bred animals are probably much more instinctively selective than male man is. Our marriage system, which is so unfortunately dominated by bread-and-butter needs, suppresses this important principle of selection.

DORA FORSTER.

Whoever hesitates to utter that which he thinks the highest truth, lest it should be too much in advance of the time, may reassure himself by looking at his acts from an impersonal point of view. Let him duly realize the fact that opinion is the agency through which character adapts external arrangements to itself—that his opinion rightly forms part of this agency—is a unit of force, constituting, with other such units, the general power which works out social changes, and he will perceive that he may properly give full utterance to his innermost conviction, leaving it to produce what effect it may.—Herbert Spencer.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

W. W. M., New Haven, Conn.—I saw in No. 1075 a suggestion, taken from Tomorrow Magazine, that upon the release of Moses Harman from prison there be held in Chicago a convention of free-thinkers to organize an association and to celebrate Mr. Harman's release. I think this a grand idea and sincerely hope it may be carried out to a grand success. I should be delighted to be present at such convention. I don't think it possible for me to be present; nevertheless I would be willing to bear a small portion of the expense—what I can afford. I will inclose $1 as a voluntary contribution toward such expense and will further pledge that, if the convention is held and the funds received should fail to meet the expense, I will contribute another dollar toward it. Anyway, if there should be no convention, still there should be a celebration to welcome home our dear old martyr-editor. I hope a universal effort will be made along these lines among the readers of LUCIFER and lovers of Moses Harman. If such an idea is to be carried out, it is none too early to begin now.

O. S., Chicago.—Dear Uncle Moses: Lillian says today is your birthday. Now, I'm not writing for that reason, but just because I want to. Virna, Mr. R. and I attended the Wednesday afternoon session of the Purity League conference at the Abraham Lincoln Center, Oakwood boulevard and Langley avenue. We went particularly to hear Theodore Schroeder, attorney for the Free Speech League. When we arrived the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones ushered us to comfortable chairs. A man was reading a paper on "The Work of Trade Unions in the Promotion of a Pure Life," written by John B. Lennon, treasurer of the American Federation of Labor. The part we heard was very interesting. He concluded by saying that no church or other organization had done so much for purity among the working people as had trades unions. I suspect that statement was not thoroughly appreciated by the clergymen present. The next speaker was Mr. Schroeder. What he said was evidently quite shocking to some of those present. Around us were heard such remarks as "Did you ever," "Well, I never in my life," etc. Every word he uttered was right to the point. His subject was "Liberty of Press and Speech Essential to the Purity Propaganda." After quoting from the statutes relating to obscenity, he read the judicial formula for the test of obscene literature and pictures, which is, as you already know, "Whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscene is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall." Then he cited a number of cases in which books and pamphlets, after having been read, approved and commended by ministers, educators and other influential and honorable persons, had been seized and destroyed, and the publisher or bookseller fined or imprisoned. The courts have ruled that if one paragraph or sentence is adjudged obscene, the entire publication is to be adjudged obscene. Calling particular attention to this ruling, Mr. Schroeder mentioned the case of a man who had been challenging a minister to debate on certain texts from the Bible. The preacher accepted the challenge and the man wrote the text for the debate on a postal card and mailed it. He was arrested, tried, convicted and imprisoned for sending obscene matter through the mails. Now, asked Mr. Schroeder, why was not the entire Bible destroyed as had been done in cases of other books? . . . To arouse the attention of the masses of the people to the purity propaganda there must be some means of disseminating a knowledge of the causes and effects of, and the remedies for, the present evil conditions. To do that there must be a free press and free speech. As long as the present laws are in operation we are prevented from taking the most effective steps. So his remedy is to repeal all laws on obscenity and pass a law forbidding minors receiving mail until it had been inspected and approved by the parents or guardians. This is only an inkling of what he had to say. He did not mention LUCIFER'S case. His time was so limited that he could not deliver in full the speech he had prepared. Let us hope that some at least who heard him will awaken from their lethargic state and begin a fight for free speech and a free press. . . . With the exception of a few statements, the paper on "The Foundation of Character," by Dr. Mary Wood-Allen, of Brooklyn, editor of American Motherhood, was excellent. It was a psychological study of the various periods of life—the periods of childhood, of adolescence and of womanhood and manhood. She urged that parents teach their children when young the functions of all their bodily organs and the proper care of them. She emphasized particularly the care of boys and girls during the period of puberty. In my opinion she erred in intrusting to the church the education in sexual matters of boys of widowed mothers. She said, in effect, something like this: "Take the example of a widowed mother's young son. Now, there is a chance for the church to do its work. This boy can win the friendship of some good man in the church who will give him the information he should receive." Why couldn't the mother instruct her boy as well as her girl? It is an injudicious mother who cannot. The ideas of the Purity League are away behind the age of your work, yet it has its place and is a stepping-stone to broader and wider fields of thought.

J. ALLEN EVANS, Box 733, Mitchell, S. D.—Kindly give notice to all our comrades of my change of address to this place, and also convey my thanks to all comrades who have written to me and who have extended other favors.

GEORGE B. PAXTON, St. Louis, Mo.—Inclosed find $1 for this year's subscription, which expires January 18. Would miss LUCIFER very much, so do not drop me from your subscription list as long as the paper is published. I consider it one of the pioneers, if not the pioneer, of the new era which is beginning to dawn on the antiquated prudish, foolish and contemptible heritage of the dark ages, miscalled modern "civilization."

ED SECREST, Randolph, Kan.—The last number of LUCIFER is certainly "a daisy," with its intensely interesting literary contents as well as artistic merit in the way of fine portraits. I sat right down and wrote a congratulatory note to your father at Leavenworth on his seventy-sixth birthday. Was very glad to hear of his regaining his usual health. I hope my message passed muster this time. I inclose 25 cents for eight or nine copies of your last week's issue, if any are left.

J. M. GILBERT, Randolph, Tex.—Find inclosed 75 cents, for which send a copy of LUCIFER, No. 1076, to each of the following names. I greatly appreciate the last issue of LUCIFER. I am much pleased to see the pictures. They are all fine. The "Reminiscences" make excellent good reading. By reading it we can see that Moses Harman is great. He rises superior to all the beggarly elements. I would like to have the finished autobiography. I hope I may have a chance to get it in the near future.

JAMES MYERS, Cooke, Mont.—I notice in Tomorrow Magazine for this month (October) a suggestion for a meeting in Chicago about the time of your father's release for the purpose of organizing all the forces of free thought, free speech and free press. I want to shout Bravo! to the wise and timely suggestion of that able and fearless magazine. I want to second or indorse the suggestion. It may be there are others who have good suggestions to make relative to what ought to be and what might be done when your dear father comes home from jail. I for one suggest that LUCIFER'S columns be thrown open for suggestions (in as few words as possible) as to the best method of action and procedure, so as to bring the outrage heaped upon Mr. Harman by the postoffice autocracy before the people. Good and effective propaganda may be made for free speech, press and thought at the time of your father's release from prison by bringing the cause and arrest of Mr. Harman before the people of this land. Those who cannot attend the convention and reception to be held in Chicago, as suggested by Tomorrow can send letters to be read, or hold similar meetings in their own home town or city, reports of such meeting to be made and sent to as many radical publications as possible.

D. L. BEAUCHER, Lincoln, Ill.—I received the book, "The Strike of a Sex," and have read it with a great deal of interest, and I regard it as a very good story, well written, on a very important subject, calling attention to many of the notorious abuses, abominations and infelicities of married life. I do not regard the large family alone as responsible for these, but the abuses of the "husband's privileges," which are popularly supposed to be such as few men would dare to take with any other woman than his wife. I would take issue with the author of this little book on the question of it's being easier to raise a small family (say one or two) than a large one. The labor bestowed on the efforts to make children comfortable and happy must not be regarded from a commercial standpoint. It all depends on the nature of the mother. If she loves her children more than the blandishments of society, and is unselfish in her labors, child-bearing is no great hardship, unless she be unfitted by temperament or physical adaptation. To some women it is almost death to bear children, while to others it comes as natural and almost as easy as breathing.

BRUNO LEHMANN, New York.—Inclosed $1 on subscription to LUCIFER. I wish to express my sincere sympathy for the work you are engaged in and am furious over the outrage committed against your noble and venerable father. I heartily hope Mr. Theo. Schroeder in his speech before the purity folks will succeed in striking a heavy blow to all Comstockery and fashionable amateur reform fads. I trust that Mr. Harman may come out of his undeserved confinement unimpaired in body and mind, and shall be happy if I may be able to meet him personally to tell him how I appreciate his labor of love for mankind and his unflinching courage to defend his principles in spite of all. As a true and enthusiastic adherent and advocate of freedom, I am, yours respectfully.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFERS on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFERS on sale at meetings.

HUGH O. PENTECOST lectures every Sunday morning at 11 o'clock at Lyric Hall, Sixth avenue, near Forty-second street, New York. Lucifer for sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

"Our Monthly Programme," a neat and interesting little magazine of eight pages and cover, is "published in the interest of the Los Angeles Liberal Club and the general cause of free thought." It is in its second volume, is distributed gratuitously at the meetings and sent by mail for 25 cents a year. Ask for sample copy.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Weitstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,

52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.

1434 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

START a business of your own. Make barbers' supplies. We teach you free by mail. Puritan Correspondence School, 619 Third street, Louisville, Ky. 1077

Love's Coming of Age.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation. American edition, cloth, prepaid, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Way to Perfect Humanhood.

BY AGNES BENHAM.

An excellent companion for Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age." The keynote of the book, found on page 76, reads thus: "The soul itself is pure and heavenly, and if at the moment of conception and through the prenatal time when it is building its earthly house it could meet with entirely responsive and congenial conditions, then would the earth be peopled with a race of gods." Price $1. Published by the author, Agnes Benham, Adelaide, South Australia.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Communism and Conscience—Pentecost and Paradox—Crimes and Criminals.

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

Equal Liberty, Equal Rights—not equal liberty to invade, but equal right not to be invaded; not equal liberty to interrupt a meeting, but equal right to listen without being interrupted; not equal liberty to steal, but equal right not to be robbed; not equal liberty to wantonly kill, but equal right to be secure against murder.

The Law of Liberty, definitions by Clifford and Stephen. Fashionable to Deny Natural Rights, Spencer on the Scope of Evolution, Rights of Children, Increasing Complexity of Life, Interdependence of Individual and Society, Close Connection with the Past, The Boycott, Its Relation to Liberty, The Paradox is Uncertain, That "Right to Invade," Liberty and Responsibility, "Free Will," Necessity and Defense, The People the Source of Invasion, Conscience—What It Is, What It Does; Undiscriminating Rejection of Morality, Changing Names and Institutions, "Wine of Omar Khayyam," The All-is-Good Discovery, Whitman a Reformer, Defensive Associations, "Right" and "Might," The Secular Principle, Vicarious Atonement, We Are in Nature, We are Natural, Property Rights, What is Evolution?

CRIMES AND CRIMINALS: Suggestive, Not Dogmatic. What We Are Not Considering. Two Stages in the Study. How Should We Act Toward the Anti-Social? Gain in the Direction of Humanity. Six Important Rules to Guide Social Action. Relative Values of Deterrents. Capital Punishment. "Labor," and Labor in Prisons. The Principle of Restitution. Reason Guides from the Old to the New. Tradition and Reason. Price, 25 cents.

MOSES HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

What the Young Need to Know.

A PRIMER OF SEX RATIONALISM.

BY E. C. WALKER.

SUGGESTIONS OF CONTENTS: Is There Necessity for This Knowledge? Analogous Dangers and Safeguards. Unwisdom of Custom-Sanctioned Ignorance. Teachers Better If of Opposite Sex. Divisions of the Subject. Definitions of Sex. Evolution of Sex; Differentiation. Reproduction Less and Less Perilous. Inestimable Value of Use. Joy Is Positive, Upbuilding. The Deciding Majority of Two. The Tendency to Multi-Selection. A Serious Error in Exchange. Effects of Meat, Stimulants and Narcotics. Reproduction and Social Happiness. Not so Many Children, but Better Ones. Legal Intrusion Has a Limit. Voluntary Complexity, and Health. Comparative Exemption of the Jews. The Upward March. Cure and Irremediable Punishments. Origin of the Shame of Sex. Derived from Other-World Mania. "The Son of God" and Sex. Faithful Followers of Jesus. Relation of Past Asceticism to Existing Type. Mental Slaves Are Not Investigators. Romauld and Clarimonde. Sex Manifestation Below Our Race. Sex Inspiration in Human Endeavor. What is Immodesty? Primitive and Present Day Savage Customs in Dress. Civilized Customs and Costumes. What We Affirm on This Subject. Bathing and Dress. Asceticism and Honesty in Art. Arguments of the Puritan. Judge Phillips and Mr. Moody. To Take the Purity of Nudity in Art for Granted. Asceticism and Literature. Foolishness of Hiding Social Wrongs. Take off the Taboo.

Price, 15 cents.

MOSES HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

Who Is the Enemy: Anthony Comstock or You?

BY E. C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.

THE "MORAL" CENSORSHIP—The Inspiration of the Censor; A "Protection" that Betrays; Utter Lack of Discrimination; Vain Denial of Facts; A Greater Wrong to the Child; Some Officers' Zeal; Imagined "Plots"; The Law as Administered; The Vicious Law of Obscene Libel; Obscene Libel and Expert Testimony; Judge and Jury and "the Facts"; Some Criticisms Answered; The Common Law Yesterday and Today; Wrong Principles of Action; The Censorship and the Bible; Moncure D. Conway on Censors; Where Lies Responsibility—on Censor or You? The Cause of Slow Advance; Sex a Mistake—"Somebody Blundered"; Superstition Not Seriously Crippled; The Worship of Death and Decay; Characteristic Eruptions of Sex Panic.

THE "FRAUD ORDER" FRAUD—Remarkable Deliverance by Judge Thomas; The Courts and the Constitution; The Persecution of "Freedom"; Grateful for Injuries Received.

THE CENSORSHIP OF SECOND-CLASS MATTER—The Department's Rules of Exclusion; Statistics of Official Financiering; Two Arguments About Government Socialism.

Price, 20 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Do You Want Free Speech?

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Concentrated, but comprehensive. It is specially valuable at the present crisis, since it is the only pamphlet exposing the entire conspiracy against free speech in America. The facts it cites are startling, but absolutely verifiable. The brochure is needed by all who would realize whither we are drifting, the magnitude of the issue we are called on to face, the fundamental principles involved in the battle for free speech, and the means of combatting the enemies of liberty. Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Free America.

BY BOLTON HALL.

Dedicated "To Those Who Are Poor and Wish to Become Rich, or Who Are Rich and Wish to Become Richer."

The book shows, in an interesting and amusing way, the evils from which we suffer as individuals and as a society, the causes of them and their cure—which is liberty. The illustrations are by Dan Beard. Two hundred and fifteen pages, 18mo. Price, postpaid: Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Woman's Source of Power.

LOVE ATTRACTION, THE FEMININE PRINCIPLE, is the builder of all living forms. LOVE IS THE CREATOR.

In the inception of human life the first step is destructive of a previous condition, but when the work is given into woman's keeping the action is reversed, becomes constructive; from then on, till growth ceases the feminine is the predominating power. Here is where the principle which can continue youth should begin its work.

BY LOIS WAISBROOKER.

Price 25 cents. For sale at this office.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emasculated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

1077

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly Russianizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charge, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Price, 3c each; 25c a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "missionary document" relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and as some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy, we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

A collection of verse which will be sure to attract attention among those who are looking for new poetry. The author has been a contributor to American magazines for several years, and is well known as a poet of modernity with a remarkable gift of imaginative expression. 12mo cloth; gilt title; 160 pages. $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The American Institute of Phrenology.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,

For the Supersoul and Superwoman and The New Civilization,

2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, NOVEMBER 8, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1078

THE "SCIENTIFIC" CARE OF CHILDREN.

Several times lately I have been drawn into discussion of the Home Colony now being organized by Upton Sinclair and others, and have been asked to give my opinion of the "scientific" care of children as proposed in "A Prospectus," by Mr. Sinclair. The temptation is strong to give my opinion of the whole prospectus, but I will try to confine myself to that portion relating to the children. Adults going to the colony can leave on being disillusioned, but children have no such alternative and need defenders.

I do not think all children should be kept with their parents all of the time. In fact, I think it is better that they get away part of the time and see life from other surroundings, meet new faces, learn the ideas and observe the manner of living of different persons, and thus escape getting into a rut. For this reason I would not want a child that is dependent on me to pass its time in a colony home, because any institution conducted according to fixed regulations, with the same doctors, nurses and teachers day after day, develops a deeper rut than the ordinary family can make before its child becomes of age. Our public schools are fair examples of this, but the pupil is saved by changing teachers every year. Before the child becomes completely affected by the mannerisms of one teacher it is transferred to another. Then it lives at home, where the society of its parents and friends exerts a counteracting influence.

But in the Home Colony "each would erect his own home, according to his own taste—a home, of course, of a kind hitherto unknown, with no provision for the cooking of food, or the training of children, or other trades and professions. It would be a place where the family met to rest and play and sleep." Further along, in the description of the establishments for children, there is mention of night watchmen, nurses to dress children, etc., so it evidently is not meant for the children to sleep at the parents' home. The family does not include children.

"Children should be cared for in accordance with the principles of science." As the ideas presented in "A Prospectus" seemed to me in many cases incorrect, I sought Webster's definition of scientific. "Science, knowledge, penetrating and comprehensive information, skill, expertness, and the like." Do the rules laid down in "A Prospectus" represent "penetrating and comprehensive information, skill, expertness, and the like"? If those who have succeeded in child culture would write, we might learn more on the subject; but those who have failed are the ones who think science is needed. Science is needed, but those who fail are not the ones to tell what is scientific in child raising. Sinclair says of his boy: "I tell what is scientific in child raising. Sinclair says of his boy: "I have had him two weeks in a New York flat and seen him turn four able-bodied adults into fit subjects for sanitarium treatment." Is he the man to tell how children should be trained?

Again I quote, numbering the points I wish to criticise:

(1) "There should be two separate establishments—one for infants who like to sleep and one for children who like to run and shout. Both should be scientifically constructed and ventilated, and kept as clean as an up-to-date hospital. (2) The food should be prepared under the general direction of a physician. No building for children should be over two stories high, and (3) the upper windows should be beyond the reach of children. No matches or explosives should be permitted, and there should be a night watchman, fire-extinguishers and automatic sprinkling apparatus. (4) These establishments should be under the supervision of a board of women directors; and (5) the actual work of caring for the children, washing, dressing and feeding them, playing with them and teaching them, should be done by trained nurses and kindergarten teachers who live in the colony. . . . Playgrounds for children where there are no stoves and no boiling water, no stairways and no wells, (6) no cats and dogs, (7) no workbaskets, lamps, pianos, sewing machines, jam closets, inkstands and authors' writing tables. Instead there should be sleeping rooms and bedrooms, and sun parlors for nursing mothers; a separate building for the sick; kindergarten rooms and indoor playrooms for bad weather, and a big all-outdoors romping ground, with sunny places and shady places, swings, rocking horses, sand piles and all other accessories of a children's heaven. Of course, any mother should come and play with or care for her own children just as much as she pleased, or take them home as she chose; though I think that no one would care to assist this plan who did not believe that children should be cared for in accordance with the principles of science and (8) preserved from the corrupting influence of grandmothers and aunts. Of course, any mother who believed that her work in the world was caring for children, and who wished to care for her own and others, according to the (9) methods of the commonwealth, would be free to do so and to earn her living by doing it."

Sinclair talks of a colony of one hundred families, and the idea is to have society for the children and keep them from all bad influences. Sinclair's boy "played with a little girl who stuttered. After a week or two we found that he was stuttering, too, and stopped the visits, but too late; and now, for all I know, he may continue to say every word three times over as long as he lives." If stuttering children cannot play with little David, can David play with children who do not stutter? Is it not as contagious from him to others as from others to him? Is he to be isolated? Surely it would be as unscientific to allow him to associate with children who do not stutter as it was to allow him to get the habit from the country girl. Are no children to be admitted to the colony who have defective speech? Or are such things not contaminating in a colony?

But to the quotations:

(1) Infants do not sleep all the time, and there is nothing that amuses an infant better or teaches it more than watching and playing with older children. Nothing gives greater development of character in sympathy, love, strength and tenderness in older children than the caring for and amusing of infants.

(2) Under what kind of a physician should food be prepared—allopathic, eclectic, homeopathic or a no-drug doctor? Few physicians understand diet, and even if they were supposed to understand the subject, can any one imagine one hundred fathers and mothers agreeing to the dietetic rule of one doctor for their children?

(3) The windows of any room for children should be so low that a child could lie in bed or sit on the floor and look out of doors. To imprison children in a room, night or day, in sickness or health, where the windows are above their reach, would rob them of many advantages and pleasures. Children love to gaze at the sun, moon, stars and clouds; love to see the trees bend in the wind, and watch the leaves toss and hear them rustle in the breeze. Is everything æsthetic to be taken from the life of a child when it is put into the hands of scientists? Where, then, are our artists to come from? There must be scientists within an hour's ride of New York who could think of some plan by which children could be kept from breaking glass or falling from windows and still be allowed the privilege of looking out. One old grandmother suggested "they might nail chicken-wire over the windows; the children could see through that." There would surely be a few sane children who ought not be imprisoned in such rooms. There might be some reason in making windows above reach in rooms for authors, that their minds be not taken from their work by passing objects.

(4) Why women directors? Men as well as women are interested in children. Some men understand children and their needs. Some women do not. One of the chief needs in the ordinary home is a father's influence. Children scarcely see their father, as work keeps them away all day, so the children are left wholly to the mother or to a woman hired to look after them, and a great deal is lost to the life of a child that belongs to it by right. A child needs a father as well as a mother in the home; in an institution, the influence of men and women. Is it consistent to refer to the "corrupting influences of aunts and grandmothers!" and then up point a board of women directors? When a woman on the board becomes an aunt, will she be considered incompetent? Women with married brothers or sisters must see on what a frail foundation their official capacity rests.

(5) Some of the most disagreeable children are the daughters and sons of former kindergarten teachers, and an extended acquaintance with trained nurses is convincing that, as a rule, their knowledge of the care of a child in health is limited to bathing; does not extend even to dressing the child when bathed.

(6) One of the most successful summer homes for children asks the parents to allow the children to bring dogs, cats or other pets, and the caretakers claim that such pets are beneficial to the development of character. Again imagine one hundred families agreeing on that point.

(7) Workbaskets, lamps, pianos, sewing machines—yes, and typewriters, or any other useful or interesting thing that is attractive to a child—should be in the playrooms for bad weather, and the caretakers, who should be both men and women, should let the children "help use them." Children enjoy nothing more than little interns and lamps, and if taught to care for them, light and use them, they are less likely to get burned when left alone with matches and lamps. Children like to print words on a typewriter as fast as they learn them. Learning to use such things is as interesting as a new play, and keeps them out of mischief. Children that are allowed to use things are not the ones that meddle with them when left alone.

(8) If a woman is a good mother, having a proper influence over her own children, what will make her have a corrupting influence over her sister's children or her children's children?

(9) Who is to decide the methods of the commonwealth?

A home colony may be a better place for some children than they have at present. But for children with parents that will protect them in their individuality, give them a chance to be themselves, with an opportunity to live their lives all along from infancy up, the change would be bad. We never hear of great men and women who were raised in an institution, and child-life as represented in "A Prospectus" as certainly "instituted" and planned and restricted. Children should grow up with persons and things, and learn to respect the persons and use the things.

I fear Sinclair will soon find his socialistic, salaried servants as hard to manage as the "vulgar and egotistical" personalities he met in family life, and will find that putting his children under another roof, where he does not hear the noise they make, may not insure the scientific development for which he hopes. He "has a right to his experiment," however.

M. FLORENCE JOHNSON.

TWO STUDIES IN DISAPPOINTMENT.

[An English correspondent sends us the following interesting sketch by H. G. Wells. It is No. XVIII. of a series under the title "The Future in America: A Search After Realities," by this well-known author.]

Now, this case of MacQueen has exercised my mind enormously. It was painful to go out of the gray jail again after I had talked to him—of Shaw and Morris, of the Fabian Society and the British labor members—into sunlight and freedom; and over and again as I went about New York, having the best of times among the most agreeable people, the figure of him would come back to me quite vividly, in his gray dress, sitting on the edge of an unaccustomed chair, hands on his knees, speaking a little nervously and jerkily, and very glad indeed to see me. He is younger than myself, but much my sort of man, and we talked of books and education and his case like brothers. There can be no doubt to any sensible person who will look into the story of his conviction, who will even go and see him, that there has been a serious miscarriage of justice.

There has been a serious miscarriage of justice, such as (unhappily) might happen in any country. That is nothing distinctive of America. But what does impress me as remarkable and perplexing is the immense difficulty—the perhaps insurmountable difficulty—of getting this man released. The governor of the state of New Jersey knows he is innocent, the judges of the Court of Pardons know he is innocent. Three of them I was able to buttonhole at Trenton, and hear their point of view. Two were of the minority and for release; one was doubtful in attitude, but hostile in spirit. They held, he thinks, the man on the score of public policy. They put it that Paterson is a "hotbed" of crime and violence; that, once MacQueen is released, every anarchist in the country will be emboldened to crime, and so on and so on. I admit Paterson festers, but if we are to punish anybody, instead of reforming the system, it's the masters who ought to be in jail for that.

"What will the property owners in Paterson say to us if this man is released?" one of the judges admitted frankly.

"But he hadn't anything to do with the violence," I said, and argued the case over again—quite missing the point of that objection.

Whenever I had a chance in New York, in Boston, in Washington, even amidst the conversation of a Washington dinner-table, I dragged up the case of MacQueen. Nobody seemed indignant. One lady admitted the sentence was heavy; "he might have been given six months to cool off," she said. I protested he ought not to have been given a day. "Why did he go there?" said a Supreme Court judge in Washington, a lawyer in New York, and several other people. "Wasn't he making trouble?" I was asked.

At last that reached my sluggish intelligence. Yet I still hesitate to accept the new interpretations. Galiano, who preached blind violence and made the riot, got off scot-free; MacQueen, who wanted a legitimate strike on British lines, went to jail. So long as the social injustice, the sweated disorder of Paterson's industrialism vents its cries in Italian in La Questione Sociale, so long as it remains an invisible misery so far as the great public is concerned, making vehement yet impotent appeals to mere force and so losing its last chances of popular sympathy, American property, I gather, is content. The masters and the immigrants can deal with one another on those lines. But to have outsiders coming in——!

There is an active press campaign against the release of "the anarchist MacQueen," and I do not believe that Mr. Wishart will succeed in his endeavors. I think MacQueen will serve out his five years.

The plain truth is that no one pretends he is in jail on his merits; he is in jail as an example and lesson to any one who proposes to come between master and immigrant worker in Paterson. He has attacked the system. The people who profit by the system, the people who think things are "all right as they are," have hit back in the most effectual way they can, according to their lights.

That, I think, accounts for the sustained quality of the lying in this case, and, indeed, for the whole situation. He is in jail on principle, and without personal animus, just as they used to tar and feather the stray abolitionist on principle in Carolina. The policy of stringent discouragement is a reasonable one, assuredly no doubt, but understandable. And I think I can put myself sufficiently into the place of the Paterson masters, of the Trenton judges, of those journalists, of those subordinate officials at Washington even, to understand their motives and inducements. I indulge in no self-righteous pride. Simply, I thank heaven I have not had their peculiar temptations.

But my riddle lies in the attitude of the public—of the American nation, which has'n't, it seems, a spark of moral indignation for this sort of thing, which, indeed, joins in quite cheerfully against the victim.

It is ill-served by its press, no doubt, but surely it understands. . . .

* * *

Then I assisted at the coming of Maxim Gorky and witnessed many intimate details in what Professor Giddings, that courageous publicist, has called his "lynching."

Here again is a case I fall altogether to understand. The surface values of that affair have a touch of the preposterous. I set them down in infinite perplexity.

My first week in New York was in the period of Gorky's advent. Expectation was at a high pitch, and one might have foretold a stupendous, a history-making campaign. The American nation seemed concentrated upon one great and ennobling idea—the freedom of Russia, and upon Gorky as the embodiment of that idea. A protest was to be made against cruelty and violence and massacre. That great figure of Liberty with the torch was to make it flare visibly half-way round the world, reproving tyranny.

Gorky arrived, and the éclat was immense. We dined him, we lunched him, we were photographed in his company by flashlight. I very gladly shared that honor, for Gorky is not only a great master of the art I practice, but a splendid personality. He is one of those people to whom the camera does no justice, whose work, as I know it in an English translation, forceful as it is, fails very largely to convey his peculiar quality. He is a big, quiet figure; there is a curious power of appeal in his face, a large simplicity in his voice and gesture. He was dressed, when I met him, in peasant clothing, in a tolled blue shirt, trousers of some shiny black material, and boots; and, save for a few common greetings, he has no other language than Russian. So it was necessary that he should bring with him some one he could trust to interpret him to the world. And having, too, much of the practical helplessness of his type of genius, he could not come without his right hand, that brave and honorable lady, Mme. Andreieva, who has been now for years in everything but the severest legal sense his wife. Russia has no Dakota, and although his legal wife has long since found another companion, the orthodox church in Russia has no divorce facilities for men in the revolutionary camp. So Mme. Andreieva stands to him as George Eliot stood to George Lewes, and I suppose the two of them had almost forgotten the technical illegality of their tie—until it burst upon them and the American public in a monstrous storm of exposure. It was like a summer thunderstorm. At one moment Gorky was in an immense sunshine, a plenipotentiary from oppression to liberty; at the next he was being almost literally pelted through the streets.

I do not know what motive actuated a certain section of the American press to agitate this plotting of Maxim Gorky. A passion for moral purity may perhaps have prompted it, but certainly no passion for purity ever before begot so brazen and abundant a torrent of lies. It was precisely the sort of campaign that damned poor MacQueen, but this time on an altogether imperial scale. The irregularity of Mme. Andreieva's position was a mere point of departure. The journalists went on to invent a deserted wife and children; they declared Mme. Andreieva was an "actress," and loaded her with all the unpleasant implications of that unfortunate word; they spoke of her generally as "the woman Andreieva"; they called upon the commissioner of immigration to deport her as a "female of bad character," quite influential people wrote to him to that effect; they published the name of the hotel that sheltered her, and organized a boycott. Wherever dared to countenance the victims was denounced. Professor Dewar, of Columbia, had given them a reception; "Dewar must go," said the headlines. Mark Twain, who had assisted in the great welcome, was invited to recant and contribute unfriendly comments. The Gorkys were pursued with insult from hotel to hotel. Hotel after hotel turned them out. They found themselves at last after midnight in the streets of New York City with every door closed against them. Infected persons could not have been treated more abominably in a town smitten with a panic of plague.

This change happened in the course of twenty-four hours. On one day Gorky was at the zenith, on the next he had been swept from the world. To me it was astounding—it was terrifying. I wanted to talk to Gorky about it, to find out the hidden springs of this amazing change. I spent a Sunday evening looking for him with an ever-deepening respect for the power of the American press. I had a quaint conversation with the clerk of the hotel in Fifth avenue from which he had first been driven. Europeans can scarcely hope to imagine the moral altitudes at which American hotels are conducted. . . . I went thence to seek Mr. Abraham Cahan in East Side, and thence to other people I knew, but in vain. Gorky was obliterated.

I thought this affair was a whirlwind of foolish misunderstanding, such as may happen in any capital, and that presently his entirely tolerable relationship would be explained. But for all the rest of my time in New York this incessant campaign went on. There was no attempt of any importance to stem the tide, and to this day large sections of the American public must be under the impression that this great writer is a depraved man of pleasure accompanied by a favorite cocotte. The writers of paragraphs racked their brains to invent new and smart ways of insulting Mme. Andreieva. The chaste entertainers of the music-halls of the Tenderloin district introduced allusions. And amidst this riot of perdition Russia was forgotten. The massacres, the chaos of cruelty and blundering, the tyranny, the women outraged, the children tortured and slain—all that was forgotten. In Boston, in Chicago, it was the same. At the bare suggestion of Gorky's coming the same outbreak occurred, the same display of imbecile gross lying, the same absolute disregard of the tragic cause he had come to plead.

One gleam of comedy in this remarkable outbreak I recall. Some one in ineffectual protest had asked what Americans would have said if Benjamin Franklin had encountered such ignominies on his similar mission of appeal to Paris before the war of independence.

"Benjamin Franklin," retorted one bright young Chicago journalist, "was a man of very different moral character from Gorky," and proceeded to explain how Chicago was prepared to defend the purity of her homes against the invader. Benjamin Franklin, it is true, was a person of very different morals from Gorky—but I don't think that bright young man in Chicago had a very sound idea of where the difference lay.

I spent my last evening on American soil in the hospitable home in Staten Island that sheltered Gorky and Mme. Andreieva. After dinner we sat together in the deepening twilight upon a broad verandah that looks out upon one of the most beautiful views in the world—upon serene large spaces of land and sea; upon slopes of pleasant, window-lit, tree-set wooden houses; upon the glittering clusters of lights, and the black and luminous shipping that comes and goes about the Narrows and the Upper Bay. Half-masked by a hill contour to the left was the light of the torch of Liberty. . . . Gorky's big form fell into shadow; Mme. Andreieva sat at his feet, translating methodically sentence by sentence into clear French whatever he said, translating our speeches into Russian. He told us stories—of the soul of the Russian, of Russian religious sects, of kindnesses and cruelties, of his great despair.

Ever and again, in the pauses, my eyes would go to where New York, far away, glittered like a brighter and more numerous Pleiades.

I gauged something of the real magnitude of this one man's disappointment, the immense expectation of his arrival, the impossible dream of his mission. He had come, the Russian peasant in person, out of a terrific confusion of bloodshed, squalor, injustice, to tell America, the land of light and achieved freedom, of all those evil things. She would receive him, help him, understand truly what he meant with his "Russia." I could imagine how he had felt as he came in the big steamer to her, up that large converging display of space and teeming energy. There she glowed tonight across the water, a queen among cities, as if, indeed, she was the light of the world. Nothing, I think, can ever rob that splendid harbor approach of its invincible quality of promise. . . . And to him she had shown herself no more than the luminous hive of multitudes of base and busy, greedy and childish little men.

MacQueen in jail, Gorky with his reputation wantonly bludgeoned and flung aside; they are just two chance specimens of the myriads who have come up this great waterway bearing hope and gifts.

A. JOHNSON, 202 Cherry street, Walla Walla, Wash.—Have been "down and out" since "God destroyed 'Frisco for its wickedness," as a Christian lady here told me he did. I asked her to go downtown with me and I'd show her something on Main street that 'Frisco would not tolerate. She blushed and declined. Just got hold of 45 yesterday, so inclosed find $1.25—the 25 cents for extras of No. 1076, your write-up. Think it great for propaganda among Christian women here—women are bound to admire that baby of yours and will read your article—fine tribute to a noble father. I always smile when I think of our first breakfast in 'Frisco. He told me what morning he would be up, and I thought I'd "spread my self" on a swell breakfast, the same as a Christian woman does for her preacher. I had my own flat and "hotched" above. When I had things fixed—white table-cloth, flowers and all; hot muffins, eggs, bacon, Saratoga potatoes—I called him in. He sat down and said, "I'll just take a glass of hot water." Talk about one's heart being "bowed down"!—there I had to sit and eat my swell breakfast alone; but I forgave him because of the intellectual banquet he gave me.

GEORGE G. DEITRICH, Caledonia, Pa.—I was greatly pleased that you gave such knighty reference to Dr. E. R. Foote, Sr., as he has been my ideal man for nearly forty years. I went to see him twice at Chicago while he was attending the World's Fair in 1893. I was more favorably impressed with him than any man that I have ever met. During the last two months of his life I received two friendly letters from him and at the same time he made me a present of two radical books, which I shall always value very highly. In my opinion Dr. Foote was the most practical reformer of modern times, if not of all time. In one of the last letters I had from him he said: "I am glad to see that you are in sympathy with Mr. Harman. It is a shame that he is spending this hot weather in a prison cell. He is simply in advance of his time, for the time will come, and the sooner the better, when people will be mated with reference to the quality of stock they can raise, rather than from any plane standpoint." Trusting that LUCIFER will continue to shine.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

In response to inquiries regarding the "Home-Coming" of the editor of LUCIFER, will say that a committee is taking the matter in hand. I am not able to say just what arrangements are being made, but those interested may send suggestions to and make inquiries of S. T. Hammersmark, Norwood Park, Ill. My personal conviction is that my father should not come home at all before spring. The climate of Chicago has never agreed with him very well, especially in winter, and I think it would be best for him to go to the Pacific coast for the winter. I presume, however, he will desire to come home for a few weeks at any rate, to see his many friends and to take part in the work of issuing his paper.

There will certainly be a public meeting, with a number of speakers, probably including one or more from the east. Before making definite announcements the committee wishes to hear from as many as possible of those interested in the matter. L. H.

THE HOME-COMING OF MOSES HARMAN.

"TOUSSAINT," NORTH MANUS,
P. O. CORNCON, CONN., October 20, E. M. 306.

Dear Mrs. Harman: Things beyond my control prevented my writing the article I promised you, but it will come some day—and I think before long.

I must stop just now to congratulate you on LUCIFER of the 11th inst., containing the pictures of Moses Harman, yourself and brother, and your daughter and son, and the account of your father as a teacher and pioneer reformer. These are the best documents that have been offered in evidence yet, and if "by their fruits ye shall know them," they go very far to carry your case. The way you all stand by each other in sustaining your father and illustrating his teachings, if persisted in, will make you invincible as far as you are right, and will throw upon your opponents the task of showing that you are wrong. Until they do this you will stand as the long-sought exponent of a new life—the woman "who dares" and conquered! If one leads safely and happily into the new world of "the love of the future," millions will follow.

Perhaps the next best step will be to reap well the harvest which your opponents have sown by their persecution of your father. The retrograde, cruel and immoral motives of these persecutors must be kept before the public until all intelligent, honest and human people shall begin to see what reform and advance in love affairs really means. Then these persecutors will become as heartily ashamed of themselves as the burners of Bruno and Servetus would be if they were alive today—as are these their persecuting successors.

To this end "the home coming" of your father should be celebrated as a notable event as it is. Would it not be well if some of the local friends of unpersecuted progress should act as a committee to make suitable preparations and invite other such friends, who could reply in person or by letter?

Another matter of still greater importance is to secure the future of LUCIFER upon a firm foundation—by a decisive increase of its circulation. Just as the persecution of D. M. Bennett, the editor of the Truth Seeker, was the insurance of the future of that paper, so the imprisonment of your father should insure the future existence, growth and improvement of LUCIFER. But that result can only follow from decided efforts of the free-minded people of every kind in a common devotion to the sacred cause of the rights and liberties of all.

In this cause your father has served long and well, and this last service in prison is likely to become the most precious of all. As such it should be paid for in part—in full it never can be—by a pecuniary recognition. It would be well and the proper thing if he should find a check for a respectable sum—say $5,000—awaiting him when he next reaches home. How some well-to-do friend of Liberty would honor himself and his cause by such an act of payment!

But for fear that may not be done, the committee might offer to receive that or some sum from the thousands of such friends of Liberty—of free thought, free speech and inviolate mails throughout our country. Let that be considered by every one as the payment of a personal obligation. In the hands of the editor of LUCIFER it would, of course, only mean that its star would become a greater "Truth-Bearer" than ever! Hoping that thousands will so think and act, I remain, sincerely yours, T. R. WAKEMAN.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

HOSPITAL, U. S. P., LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Oct. 28, 1906.

My Dear Daughter: Two letters from you since last writing day, dated October 11 and 18; also a copy of LUCIFER No. 1076, sent by special messenger from the warden's office, with autograph permission, dated October 17, 1906. That I was agreeably surprised and much delighted to get it can easily be imagined. My surprise was double. First, to get a copy of the anniversary number, and, second, to find in it pen pictures of myself so flattering, so eulogistic, that I scarcely recognized my own identity therein. First, I want to thank you, but cannot find words that adequately express what I feel, for your "reminiscences" of my life, as you recall them. I only wish I deserved your high opinion of myself better than I feel that I do. Am specially glad you resurrected that old "prenuptial contract." I had not seen it for so long I had almost forgotten its existence. If no other reward had come to me, outside my own internal consciousness, for what little I have done and endured in the past thirty-three years (since your first recollections of me), this published statement of years, which I believe to be perfectly sincere and honest, though naturally more or less partial, would be regarded by me as ample reward. No other person now living has known me so long, so well and so continuously as you have done.

The same criticism, if such it may be called—namely, that the estimate of me and of what I have done is overdrawn—applies, as I think, but in still greater degree, to what Brother R. B. Kerr says of me in the same number. While it is very true that quite early in life I was impressed with a sense of the crying need of radical reform in our popular, conventional and law-protected marriage system, to the end that motherhood could be untrammeled and children born well, if born at all, I have never regarded myself as a pioneer in the movement for Free Motherhood—erroneously called "free-love" movement. Lois Waisbrooker, mentioned by Brother Kerr, was a writer, publisher and lecturer along these lines of reform long before our "Son of the Morning" was started, as was also Dr. Juliet H. Severance, Dr. Alice B. Stockham, Lucinda B. Chandler, and others now living, not to mention many who have gone "to join the majority," such as Dr. E. B. Foote (lately deceased), Stephen Pearl Andrews, Mary S. Gove and many more that could be named. While claiming no originality as such, I will say that when young I avoided reading books that assailed conventional marriage, for the same reason that I avoided those that assailed popular theology. Study of physical science made me doubt the current theology and personal observation made me a skeptic in marriage ethics. On leaving the church of my parents I could say with truth that no "infidel" writer had led me to doubt the "plenary" inspiration of the Bible, and when I wrote a "prenuptial contract," quoted by Lillian in No. 1076, believing no other ceremony needful and believing the usual promise "to love while life lasts" to be an essentially immoral promise, I could say in all candor that I had never read Rousseau's "Confessions" nor any book more pronounced in its opposition to Christian marriage than is the Christian New Testament itself. What I mean by this statement is that while giving all honor to those who have been my generous and faithful helpers in the publication of the only "free-love" paper that has lived," quoting Brother Kerr (I prefer the term sex-reform paper), I have not followed nor imitated other and older workers in the same field—not consciously followed any one. While making this simple statement I wish to give full credit to all others who have helped to give our little "Star of the Morning," now in its twenty-seventh year, the success to which it has attained.

First among these helpers, I think all will agree, stands my daughter Lillian; next, perhaps, should be placed Edwin C. Walker, who was for several years my partner in publication, co-editor and general canvasser for subscribers. Among the earliest helpers a prominent place is due to son George, also to my kinsman, Noah H. Harman, and his wife, Emily. Then follow, thick and fast, a multitude of names of those who with tongue and pen and pocketbook united to send the little white-winged evangel on its mission wherever the English language is spoken, and even to countries in which English is not spoken, except through interpreters. While it is quite impossible to recall the names of all those who deserve an honored place in this list, I will venture to mention a few without whose faithful and unselfish codperation the paper must have gone the way of its many predecessors and contemporaries in the same field of reform. Giving precedence somewhat according to age, I mention with deepest gratitude, not to say reverence—Elizabeth H. Russell; Elmina D. Slenker; ex-Governor Charles Robinson (deceased), with his honored companion, Sarah; T. D. Robinson; Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr. (deceased); Abner J. Pope; John Ernst; Joseph Anthony; T. C. Deuel and companion; Susan and John Reicherter; Delos Dunton; Lois Waisbrooker; Lucinda B. Chandler; Harriet Garner; Dr. Juliet H. Severance; C. Amory Stevens; Colonel James S. and Aunt Phebe Freeman; John S. Barber; Dr. Mark Rowe and wife; "B. M.," New York; Henry M. and Annie E. K. Parkhurst; Ed. W. Chamberlain; Oswald Dawson, England; Agnes Benham, Australia; Lady Florence Dixie, Scotland; Judge Warner Mills; C. B. Hoffman; Arthur Wastall, South Africa; F. W. Frankland, New Zealand; George Bedborough, England; J. William Lloyd; Lizzie M. Holmes; Lillie D. White; C. L. Swartz; Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.; Henry E. Allen and wife; Robert B. Kerr and Dora F. Kerr; Emma Wardlaw Best, Australia. This list might be extended much further, but time and space forbid. Many of these made donations of books that were sold to keep the light of LUCIFER burning. Others gave hospitable entertainment for weeks, if not months, to the old editor when obliged to seek recuperation of energy and health in travel.

Whether I shall live long enough to achieve anything worthy of a place among the honored names mentioned by my very partial friend, R. B. Kerr, remains to be seen. "While there is life there is hope." Meantime, I beg him to accept sincerest thanks for his highly eulogistic opinion of my humble self.

I am not getting the Chicago Tribune now, so did not see the reference therein to Brother Schroeder's address at the purity conference. Should be glad to see it. Saw Schroeder's article in Critic and Guide, Chicago, for October. Please "ex" with that magazine and see the article on "Etiology of the Social Evil" in same number. Wish you could use part of same in LUCIFER.

Had a pleasant call from Mrs. Tanner, of Kansas City, Mo., at whose house I visited three years ago, while on my way to California.

From George Bedborough, London, I have received "Meredith Pocketbook," also "People's Songs" and "Rime of the Ancient Mariner," and several picture cards, since last writing. From F. A. de Crane, Iowa, a beautiful photo of Evadne de Crane, with good letter. From Elbert Hubbard an autograph copy of "Love, Life and Work," a most beautifully gotten-up book. Two copies of Light of Truth, with marked articles, from Lucinda B. Chandler, with good letter.

Of magazines, have received November Tomorrow and Physical Culture; also October American Magazine; also Arena and Balance.

Channing Severance sent marked copy of Progressive Thinker. Please ask Sercombe to send me copy of "Chicago Cave Dwellers." Will try to pay him from here. From W. H. Wilgus came a copy of his monthly, The Whole Simple Truth, and letter. From John E. Boultenhouse came about sixty picture cards (unaddressed) and nine addressed to me, different dates, with brief messages.

A letter addressed to Dr. Yoke, physician to the U. S. P., dated October 22, 1906, and signed D. Ryan, 219 West Twenty-fourth street, New York City, says, among other things: "Mr. Moses Harman, in his LUCIFER, speaks of a convict's ill-selected and meager and unhygienic rations." Will you kindly write to Mr. Ryan and ask him in what number of LUCIFER he finds such language. I have no recollection of using such language and certainly such statement would not be true in reference to this hospital, or to the general convict's table. Tell him to write to me, if possible.

Under date of October 18 our dear old friend Elizabeth H. Russell writes to correct the statement made in No. 1076 in reference to the accident at the Cleveland "enamel" works. It was Harry Lees, son of our old friend Thomas Lees, who lost his life in the explosion, and not Harry Russell. I don't know how I got the matter so badly mixed. It was my fault. Our nonagenarian friend says she is much pleased with the anniversary number, as in fact

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

Today Moses Harman is 76 years and 27 days of age. He has served 241 days of his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan. Purely private subjects should be avoided, as all letters are read by prison officials and withheld if not approved. Do not ask questions requiring answer. All such questions, matter pertaining to LUCIFER, changes of addresses, etc., should be sent to the office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

does every one else who writes about it, and adds: "Many thanks for your kind sympathy for me in my long-continued ill-health. I hope you will be able to travel all winter. I should love to clasp your hand again, although I never expect to do so." Please write her for me; cheer her up all you can. Say I hope to find her much improved in health if I live to visit California again.

Another small error or two, in the splendid anniversary number, please correct for me: On page 602, second column, thirteenth line, the word "prayer" should read power. Page 603, first column, tenth line, should certainly read "'unto life' to life eternal," instead of "unto death," etc. Page 602, fifteenth line from bottom of second column, should read "Why do they not cry out," etc. Please pardon my calling attention to these few "spots on the sun." I know you want to have everything just right, but I know, too, that your manifold duties prevent your eyes from seeing everything that goes wrong in time to correct it. I often had trouble of the same kind in the linotype office, as well as when we set our type at home. Ten days ago I tried to send you a bunch of letters, but never learned whether they left the prison. Please let me know if they reached you.

My two sheets are full and I find on counting that I have twenty-one letters and sixteen cards, of which no mention has yet been made, all received in the past two weeks. One of these, from Dr. Marion Hammer, contained $1 to "buy fruit and extra food." Please thank him and his old friend, the donor. Love and thanks to all who wrote me. Yours, M. H.

[In one of his letters my father mentioned his "one meal a day—dinner." This may have caused the impression that his food is insufficient. But it is by choice, not necessity, that he eats but one meal a day; indeed it is his almost invariable habit when at home.—L. H.]

MINISTER PLEADS FOR RACE IMPROVEMENT.

[That the belief in the right of children to be born well is growing, in spite of the demands of President Roosevelt and Kaiser William that women should bear numerous children "to fight, to toil and to serve," in order to prevent "race suicide," is evident to all who note the expressions made on the subject by men and women of brains who have given it serious thought. Herewith is published a great part of a sermon delivered by the Rev. A. H. Harnly, pastor of Austin Baptist Church, Chicago, on November 28, in which the minister takes practically the same view as the editor of LUCIFER as to the right of children to be born well. Readers of LUCIFER will observe that the minister uses the declaration, "Every child has an inherent right to be well born"—almost word for word the same declaration which has been made numerous times in this paper by its editor.]

"We hear much talk about the decadence of home and home life. If there is deterioration in the home, it must be because there is deterioration in fatherhood and motherhood. You have gone into domestic establishments, and pretentious ones, too, in which you saw stamped upon the very faces of the children, 'Wanted: a father and a mother.' A man took his meals there and slept there and went in and out, and the children called him papa. A woman kept her wardrobe there and the children called her mamma; but there was no father and no mother, and there was no home.

"With all due regard for Roosevelt's anti-race suicide hobby, I do not believe there is a crying call for more mere parents. The market is already overstocked. Whole armies of men and women are parents who have hardly one qualification of intelligent fatherhood or motherhood. But there is an urgent call for fathers and mothers who look upon fatherhood and motherhood as a sublime calling, a sacred trust for which God will hold them responsible.

"There has been no end of talk about what the child owes the parent. But I want to say the first and gravest duty is that of the parent to the child. He is responsible for the child being here, and the child may not look upon it as an unalloyed favor being projected into this world, so full of hardships and heartaches and heartbreaks.

"We hear a great deal of cant about the sacrifice parents make for their children, as if that were an act of supererogation for which they deserved special praise. They don't. It is simply the performance of an imperative duty, the neglect of which ought to be made a crime and punished as such. And don't forget this: you have not done your full duty to your children when you have fed them and clothed them and housed them. That is a duty recognized and discharged by every brute parent of field or forest. But true fatherhood and motherhood is lifted infinitely above the plane of brute instinct. It carries with it joys and privileges and duties that are immeasurably above feeding and clothing and housing.

"Had I the power to coin into law my fixed convictions, a prospective benedict must have something more to show than the price of a license—he can stand the preacher off—before he could be legally married. He must be able to show himself of sound mind and sound body and sound morals. He must show both the ability and the disposition to maintain a home.

"The generations yet unborn have a right to protection. Every child has an inherent right to be well born. Multitudes of children are not so much 'born into the world as they are damned into it.' Their fate is sealed a hundred years before they are born. There is a tremendous miscarriage of justice in every criminal court. In many cases the father or the grandfather or the great-grandfather should have been hanged or imprisoned instead of the poor fellow who receives sentence.

"Are you a father? Then take time to be a father. Are you a mother? Then take time to be a mother. No enterprise can be so deceiving, no cause can be so sacred as to justify the neglect of your children. Too busy, do you say, to have a share in the rearing of your family? Then are you too busy to have a family. You have no moral right to be a father if you cannot find time to do the work of a father than you have to be an alderman if you cannot find time to do the work of an alderman.

"Many a father spends more time on his driving horse or his automobile than he does on his boy; and yet he expects that boy to be a credit to him. That father makes a serious mistake who will not take time to be a companion to his boy. God pity the father whose boy goes away from him and to others for counsel and sympathy. And especially, God pity the boy! Do you want to save your boy, your girl? Then make home the dearest spot on earth. Make it just as attractive and cheerful as you can—not for the occasional guest, but for the boy and girl.

"The child deserves more than the occasional guest. If you have one cheerful sunshiny room in the house, give it to the child. If any one must sleep on a straw tick on a slat bed in the attic, let it be the occasional guest. And may I enter a special plea for the boy? Is it not true that if any one is neglected in the home it is the boy? 'Anything is good enough for him.' I say it is not. Nothing is good enough for him but the very best home can afford. Many a boy takes to the street because there is no room for him in the home. Had he a pleasant cheery room, all his own, well stocked with good reading and wholesome games, to which he might be free to invite his friends for a pleasant evening, the street would have no attraction for him. And when he takes to the street he is lost to all that is good and pure and noble in boyhood and young manhood."

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our home. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

G. B., Springfield, Mass.—You can possibly place the inclosed clipping in the hands of some Press Writer, with knowledge of the facts, who will care to answer it or write on the subject. I did not happen to see the editorial note to which Mr. Ballantine refers, and know nothing of the facts of the case referred to, but am absolutely opposed to Comstock's war on the diffusion of knowledge, whatever the nature of that knowledge may be. Mr. Ballantine is one of the leading clergymen of the city—one that I had been inclined to believe was rather more liberal than some of the profession, but just here his liberality fails.

I was greatly pleased with your reminiscences of your father in No. 1076 of LUCIFER. I am especially interested in heredity, both mental and physical, and was extremely interested in the account of his ancestry. An autobiographical consideration of such a subject is the very best kind, for no one is better fitted to judge of the sources of various traits, mental and physical, than the person himself. Introspectively he can balance and weigh his own character better than any one else. Best wishes for LUCIFER and the Harman family.

* * *

The clipping to which reference is made appeared in the Springfield Republican, under the caption, "Defense of Comstock," and is as follows:

"An ir justice was done in last Monday's issue to one whom all good men should delight to honor as a Christian hero. In a little editorial note it was stated that Anthony Comstock had been 'exposed' in 'charging up mileage to a United States court as a witness when admittedly using a free railroad pass,' and the remark was added: 'Even his legal title to a pass remains to be shown.' . . . For more than thirty years Mr. Comstock has served as a special inspector of the postoffice department, guarding the mails from indecent matter. Like other officials of the department, he travels thousands of miles, and of course on a pass. It is odd if 'his legal title to a pass remains to be shown.' The Revised Statutes of the United States provide that all witnesses before the courts shall receive $1.50 a day and mileage. No witness is expected to say whether his time is worth the $1.50 or whether his actual expenses equal the mileage. . . . For forty years Anthony Comstock has stood between the youth of America and those fiends who would make money by the corruption of innocence. In this noble work he has been assailed by murderous malice in every conceivable form. Smallpox scabs and infected rags have been mailed to him. The knife of a would-be assassin has left a long scar on his face. But the bitterest of his trials has been the unceasing misrepresentation which has often deceived even the elect. Very respectfully yours, W. G. BALLANTINE."

The editor of the Republican remarks:

"Mr. Comstock's work merits all commendation, and there has been with the Republican no attempt whatsoever to depreciate it. But no work can be made meritorious enough to justify sharp practices of the character in question. There is no difference between Mr. Comstock's action on behalf of excluding obscene matter from the mails, in charging up mileage to the government when there is no expense of mileage, and the action of a congressman in doing the same thing while on his way to Washington to enact an antiobscenity law. We have not hesitated to take the free-pass congressman to task for charging the government for expenses not incurred, and can see no reason why Mr. Comstock's similar performance should be excused. If Mr. Comstock is regularly attached to the mail inspection service and travels free under a government contract with the railroads, then nothing is to be said against him on this score. Otherwise something would have to be said in consistency with the effort to reduce the railroads strictly to a business basis, free from discriminating relationship even with the most worthy of moral causes which are to be supported by the people and not by business enterprises considered simply as such."

The incident in court which occasioned these comments was reported widely in the daily press. The following brief notice is from the New York American of October 19:

"Lawyer Hugh Gordon Miller, who once punched Anthony Comstock in the jaw in answer to the epithet of 'liar,' attacked the same gentleman again yesterday, but this time in words.

"'I charge this man Comstock with being a fakir and grafter of the first water,' thundered Lawyer Miller to a jury in the United States circuit court, where his client, Ernest Richardson, was on trial jointly with Joseph J. Koch, charged by Mr. Comstock with improperly using the mails.

"'He never fights the big fellows, but persecutes the little ones,' said Mr. Miller. 'Yesterday, when he contended that he thought he had a moral right to charge the government mileage, he did not tell you that to get the money he had to swear to an affidavit that he had expended such sums in the government's behalf. But swear to it he did until Marshal Henkel refused to pay him further witness fees and mileage.'

"At this point Mr. Comstock, upon whom all the jurors had concentrated their gaze, consulted a notebook and suddenly left the courtroom.

"The jury freed Richardson, Mr. Miller's client, but held Koch guilty, and he was remanded for sentence."

A GERMAN FREETHINKER, New York.—Have received the copies of LUCIFER and enjoyed them immensely. Hope you will get your father back in good health. I wrote a few lines to him and hope to see him some day and clasp his hand. I shall carry his name and fame to Germany, where I expect to be in a few weeks. Four years ago myself and sweetheart yielded to temptation and a little girl was the result. The mother is not able to give the child a home and proper education, and marriage between us is impossible. I intend to bring the little girl over to America and hope to find some German-speaking freethinker's family which will, for moderate remuneration, give a temporary home to the child, for I shall not permit the church to get possession of its soul. Will you, therefore, insert an advertisement asking educated family living in the country in healthful location to send me offer and terms. I intend to go west after my return from Germany, as I wish to change my occupation. Since I left school I have been in the cooking business in hotels, restaurants, steamships, railways and for the last three years in private service of American millionaire families. The longer I am in it the less I like it, for it is a soul-killing occupation. As a "servant" of the American plutocrat it is especially depraving—this food destroying to tickle the palates of a small number of parasites and a dozen or so spoiled and ignorant servants, who have neither intellect nor individuality left after a few years of faithful service. I hope to find a place where I can make a decent living and have my evenings and Sundays for myself and child. I can see no charm in the mere making or possession of money, but I am often sorry that I am not wealthy, that I might be able to fight ignorance and superstition in all their forms.

[Persons desiring to communicate with writer of above letter may address Freethinker, care of 500 Fulton street, Chicago.]

BETTIE M., ROMNEY, Miller, Mo.—Dear Mrs. Harman: I wish to congratulate you on LUCIFER No. 1076. Mr. R. and I both thought it most excellent and we both wanted to go right down to Chicago to see and hug "baby George," but of course we couldn't. Mr. R. thought the extract from your father's autobiography well worth the price of the paper. I would suggest through LUCIFER that a fund be raised to present to your father at the convention to be held in honor of his home-coming, the fund to be turned over to him to use in sustaining LUCIFER or in any way he may think best for the work for which he has sacrificed so much. I would suggest a dollar donation, as nearly all of LUCIFER's readers could possibly spare that much for such a special occasion. If the names, with proper words of appreciation, were printed in some nice style for preservation and presented to him I think he would appreciate that also. However, act on your own good judgment about that, but it seems to me a most fitting occasion to raise a fund which will help LUCIFER and at the same time show appreciation of his work, and convince Comstockery that Mr. Harman's imprisonment resulted in a boom for his work rather than the death of it.

MRS. W. N. F., Los Angeles, Cal.—You deserve abundant congratulations upon bringing out the birthday number, with its splendid tributes to your noble father. How interesting it is to be permitted to come thus much closer to the lives of those we are happy to count dear. It enables those too far away to know you personally, to feel so much better acquainted. I cannot agree with the attitude of Mr. E. E. Carey in regard to suggestions attendant upon birthdays. What he opposes I deem the negative side of the matter, though, alas, it is too generally so regarded, I admit. But why not come out strongly on the positive side and claim it as the natal day it is—the day that marks the dedication of an individual life, when it became distinct from another's—its mother? Let it signify the beginning of a new year always, not the close of one; another year to be filled with the worthy endeavor of a constantly maturing, progressing being. Age should stand for ripeness—that delicious mellowness when the flavor is best—not senility and decay. Our standards need readjustment. For the sum enclosed please send me half a dozen copies each of Nos. 1060 and 1076, the birthday number. A year ago I was in Chicago and had just a peep at yourself, the then new baby and Miss Virna, when Mrs. Florence Johnson carried me off to the Spencer-Whitman Center, where I met the "prisoner in bonds"—what a precious memory!

We can still supply copies of LUCIFER No. 1060. This is the special number devoted to the prosecutions of the editor of LUCIFER and the attempted suppression of his paper. Price, 25 cents a dozen.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFERS on sale at meetings.

Nov. 11—"Comparative Divine-Human Law-Giving," by Milton S. Terry, D. D., Northwestern University.

Nov. 18—"The Making of Law," by William Otis Wilson, Secretary of the Legislative Voters' League.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

HUGH O. PENTECOST lectures every Sunday morning at 11 o'clock at Lyric Hall, Sixth avenue, near Forty-second street, New York. Lucifer for sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

"Our Monthly Programme," a neat and interesting little magazine of eight pages and cover, is "published in the interest of the Los Angeles Liberal Club and the general cause of free thought." It is in its second volume, is distributed gratuitously at the meetings and sent by mail for 25 cents a year. Ask for sample copy.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,
THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.
Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jewelry Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Thrown in the Crucible," free.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,
22 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.
Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Philip G. Peabody,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,
DENTIST.
3556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK.

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK.

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

POEMS OF VARIED FEELING.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

The author is well known to be readers of LUCIFER, many of the poems in this volume having made their first appearance in our columns. The title well expresses the character of the work; the verses breathe of life and liberty and love; the charms of the seasons and the beauties of nature. The spirit of revolution, too, is voiced in "Liberty and the Commune," "In the Hour of Execution," "Vive Ferrer Dead," and other poems. "To the Enemies of Free Speech"; "The Challenge of Liberty"; "A Ballade of Butterflies"; "The Roistering Knights"; "Father Damien"; "Four Loves"; "Death in Life"; "Looking on the Sierras"; "Mother-Heart," are a few titles taken at random, showing the varied scope of the work.

12 mo, cloth; gilt title; 160 pages; $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Stellar Ray.

SUCCESSOR TO SUGGESTION.

The Stellar Ray is a magazine for thinkers. Discusses thought force, will power, astral science, occultism, all forms of drugless healing, brain building, the cultivation of mental forces, and the psychological and physical conditions that bring health, happiness and success.

The Stellar Ray advocates no creed, no dogma, no fad or ism. It stands for progress and freedom in all lines of modern thought. It is a [illegible] how to live without disease or worry. It teaches how to have health without drugs or doctors, and self-mastery.

THREE MONTHS' TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION.

Write us a postal card as follows:

Editor The Stellar Ray, Temple Building, Detroit, Mich.

Please enter my name as a subscriber to your magazine, on the following conditions: After receiving three numbers I will either—

(1) Promptly notify you to discontinue my subscription, in which case there is no charge for the three issues received; or

(2) I will remit the subscription price, $1 (foreign, six shillings). I also reserve the privilege of canceling my subscription at any time, paying only for the numbers received.

Name .....

Address .....

The Jungle.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR.

BY UPTON SINCLAIR.

A somber and terrible picture of life in the Chicago stock yards from the point of view of the workingman. It shows the conditions that turn the hero into a criminal and a tramp. There are startling revelations concerning methods in the meat-packing industry, and glimpses of all Chicago's under-world of crime and graft. The story is hailed as "the greatest novel published in America in fifty years."

"It is one of the most powerful and terrible stories ever written."—Robert Hunter, Author of "Poverty."

12 mo. cloth. 413 pages, $1.50, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Who Is the Enemy: Anthony Comstock or You?

BY E. C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.

THE "MORAL" CENSORSHIP—The Inspiration of the Censor; A "Protection" that Betrays; Utter Lack of Discrimination; Vain Denial of Facts; A Greater Wrong to the Child; Some Officers' Zeal; Imagined "Plots"; The Law as Administered; The Vicious Law of Obscene Libel; Obscene Libel and Expert Testimony; Judge and Jury and "the Facts"; Some Criticisms Answered; The Common Law Yesterday and Today; Wrong Principles of Action; The Censorship and the Bible; Moncure D. Conway on Censors; Where Lies Responsibility—on Censor or You? The Cause of Slow Advance; Sex a Mistake—"Somebody Blundered"; Superstition Not Seriously Crippled; The Worship of Death and Decay; Characteristic Eruptions of Sex Panic.

THE "FRAUD ORDER" FRAUD—Remarkable Deliverance by Judge Thomas; The Courts and the Constitution; The Persecution of "Freedom"; Grateful for Injuries Received.

THE CENSORSHIP OF SECOND-CLASS MATTER—The Department's Rules of Exclusion; Statistics of Official Financiering; Two Arguments About Government Socialism.

Price, 20 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Do You Want Free Speech?

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Concentrated, but comprehensive. It is specially valuable at the present crisis, since it is the only pamphlet exposing the entire conspiracy against free speech in America. The facts it cites are startling, but absolutely verifiable. The brochure is needed by all who would realize whither we are drifting, the magnitude of the issue we are called on to face, the fundamental principles involved in the battle for free speech, and the means of combatting the enemies of liberty. Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Free America.

BY BOLTON HALL.

Dedicated "To Those Who Are Poor and Wish to Become Rich, or Who Are Rich and Wish to Become Richer."

The book shows, in an interesting and amusing way, the evils from which we suffer as individuals and as a society, the causes of them and their cure—which is liberty. The illustrations are by Dan Beard. Two hundred and fifteen pages, 18mo. Price, postpaid: Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

1078

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Our Advancing Postal Censorship.

BY LOUIS F. POST.

An extremely powerful review of the administrative process, which is rapidly disorganizing these United States. Contains a correspondence with the postal department in reference to the attempted suppression of LUCIFER, and Mr. Post's conclusions therefrom.

"The confiscation by postal clerks of any publication, for any cause, without specific charges, without opportunity to the publisher to be heard, without the verdict of a jury, without appeal, without any of the ordinary safeguards of personal rights and private property, and consequently without any assurance of guilt, is an ominous fact. No matter how objectionable or even dangerous a paper's teachings may seem to the censors, no matter how offensive its language in their estimation, so palpable an invasion of the commonest rights of citizenship is a direct menace to the independent press of the country."

Price, 5c each; 25c a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Administrative Process of the Postal Department.

A LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT, BY THADDEUS BURR WAKEMAN.

This is a most effective "splendorous" document relative to the attempted suppression of free speech by the postal censorship. It contains half-tone portraits of the author and of Moses Harman. We want this letter distributed as widely and as effectively as possible, and so some who might be able to distribute it may not be able to buy we have felt reluctant to set a price on it. Let such not hesitate to order any quantity desired, even though unable to send money. For those who can afford to help bear the expense of publication, the price is 5 cents a copy, or 25 cents a dozen.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The Clear Vase. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prevaid. 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The American Institute of Phrenology.

Incorporated 1866. Session opens the first Wednesday in September. Subjects: Phrenology; the Art of Character Reading; Anatomy; Physiology; Physiognomy; Heredity; Hygiene, etc. Address 24 East 22d street, New York, care of Fowler & Wells Co.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,

For the Supermen and Superwomen and The New Civilization.

2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, NOVEMBER 22, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1079

WOUNDED IN THE HOUSE OF ITS FRIENDS.

In the old Pall Mall Gazette days Mr. W. T. Stead made himself a name as a puritan of puritans. He led the movement in England which culminated in what we know as the criminal law amendment act of 1888. (It is probably better known in America as the age of consent raising act.) Mr. Stead and the National Vigilance Society of England have, of course, performed at times work which seemed to conflict with a liberal interpretation of the laws of liberty, but few of our friends have ever criticised the methods of work which he or the society named have adopted. On the other hand, the friends of liberty have often owed a debt of gratitude to Mr. Stead for his constant efforts on behalf of radicalism and freedom. I could tell you of a hundred ways in which Mr. Stead has helped the cause of liberty. I only pause in passing to mention his fight for free speech in Trafalgar Square, a story which is worth remembering; of his fight with his proprietor for the right of an editor to let the then abhorred Mrs. Besant speak for herself in his journal; of Mr. Stead's praise of Havelock Ellis' book, "Sexual Inversion," at a time when I was under arrest for selling it. Nor must we forget the heroic stand he made against the Boer war while no man's life was safe from the fury of an almost unanimous England thirsting for the liberties of the two republics.

All the time, however, Mr. Stead has in season and out of season denounced the free-love movement. He is the most determined enemy of the theory of freedom in sex imaginable. This is the only excuse I have for mentioning him in the same breath as Comstock, a man to whom he bears no other resemblance. Stead's weapons against a theory he dislikes are argument, or at the worst to ignore it. He is remarkably ready with his fiery scorn and denunciation. He lays about him with a literary whip more like a scorpion than a pen. His latest enemies have been the theaters of London, whose immoral plays have moved him to a wrath which would seem extravagant if applied to worse offenders against decency. He only began going to the theater a short time ago, and will probably feel merely bored at the average play when he has seen as many plays as most of us. His often wisely discriminating attacks on indefensibly crude, vulgar and unreal plays have made his name sweet to many who hate the very idea of a play. He has praised a number of good plays, including those of Bernard Shaw, which your puritans found so immoral. This praise must have been accepted by our Comstocks as the price they had to pay for the more frequent condemnation.

Now enter on the scene various priests. Father Vaughan steps into fame by a denunciation of the smart set. Rev. Copeland Smith is allowed to cry out in horror and the Daily News against the awful vice of a certain music hall, the London Pavilion, where appears nightly "The Modern Venus," a lady whose lovely form is said to be the nearest approach to Venus of Milo this generation is likely to see. Nudity, vice, the two things are the same to our Comstocks. Let the police close this awful den at once, said Mr. Smith and his friends. If only Mr. Stead would aid them with his pen the thing would be done.

Poor old Comstockian Smith! Mr. Stead has been to see the Venus. He came, he saw, and Venus conquered. Let the judgment of our modern Paris be heard. There are some sore places on the soft heads of our Comstocks as they read their chosen champion's account of his first visit to a music hall:

"La Milo was the only redeeming feature in the long monotonous succession of ugliness and vulgarity. La Milo posed as if she were carved out of marble. She represented Hebe pouring out a libation, Circe the Enchantress (in bronze), Maidenhood, Hiram Powers' 'Greek Slave,' the Tambourine Girl, the Venus de Milo, and the Velasquez Venus. Of these, Circe, the Greek Slave, and the Velasquez Venus were undraped, and the others were more or less clothed. Absolute nudity is out of the question, being forbidden by the law of the land; the semblance was statuesque rather than life-like. In each of these poses La Milo occupied a pedestal in the center of the stage. The question of the propriety of displaying the original statue, bronze or marble, of Circe and the Greek Slave on the music hall stage—there could hardly be any question about the others—is one upon which opinions will differ. There can, however, be no difference of opinion as to the beauty and ideal loveliness of the pictures of which La Milo formed the center figure. As to the suggestion of indecency, that is a fraud, and I fear that those who sell tickets on the strength of it are open to an accusation of obtaining money on false pretences. La Milo is indecent as statues are indecent, no more and no less. Those who came to gloat over indecency were pretty considerably sold, but the audience, unintelligent and vulgar though it was, seemed to be thrilled for a moment by the beauty of the spectacle."

GEORGE BERNONOUGH.

CRAMMERS OF FURNACES AND SITTERS ON SAFETY-VALVES

The Czolgosz memorial meeting and the events followed suggest a serious and dispassionate consideration of elementary principles of association, assembly, utterance and the preservation of the peace.

Under a republican form of government, such as that of the United States, where changes in policy and administration may be and are brought about by private and public discussion and the formal registration of opinions at the polls, it would seem to be self-evident that the appeal of dissentients, as of conformists, should be, always, to reason, and to enlightened self-interest, if you will; and the object should be the orderly formation and ascertainment of social aspirations and purposes. Only the most grave and continuous denial of the rights of investigation and expression could warrant even the hint of a resort to force, for that appeal would mean the abandonment of reason, of deliberation, of peace, and the exaltation of unthinking physical force, of frenzy, of war. Whatever denial there has been of the right to fully discuss moral themes, there has not been, in all this part of the country, any obstruction of peaceful political agitation, except the foolish attack upon Single Tax speakers in Delaware a few years ago. And whatever interference there has been in the domains of morals and religion, whatever interference there may be in any domain of thought in the present or future, the remedy therefor has lain and lies and in all probability will lie in the hands of the people themselves. They cannot be gagged by their officials save by their own active or passive connivance. Constitutionally, traditionally and historically they may place their feet in paths which broaden into highways that lead out of every ambush and labyrinth of any and all censorships. Only their own superstition, indifference and sluggishness, on the one hand, or their unfamiliarity with their new environment, their impatience and their blind passion, on the other, can avail to make permanent, extensive and really dangerous any sporadic and embryonic manifestations of old-world surveillance and suppression that now annoy or alarm thoughtful men and women.

Whenever a minority's only danger lies in the majority's non-acquaintance with or prejudice against or reasoned rejection of the principles and proposals of that minority, it is folly and suicide for the minority to resort to force or to threaten to resort to force. When it thus dethrones reason and puts brute might in the seat of authority, it succeeds only in deepening the prevailing ignorance concerning its sound ideas and good intentions, it makes the prejudice against its theories absolutely unamenable to argument, and it immeasurably strengthens the brief of every attorney who pleads at the bar of thought for its condemnation and conviction. When a minority drops the pen of reason and draws the sword of physical force, does it expect still to be opposed by reason and waved back with olive branches? The appeal to the arbitrament of war is an extremely serious challenge, and when a hopeless minority, in a country where persuasive agitation is at least fairly safe, issues such a challenge, its folly is equaled only by its criminality.

I have spoken of the bigoted harrying of the Single Taxers in Delaware. If that persecution had developed a Czolgosz, and if from that day to this the orators and organs of the Single Tax party all over the country had been eloquent with guarded apologies for or fulsome laudations of that ill-balanced assassin, what would be the status of the Single Tax idea and its advocates? Instead of meeting, at the worst, indifference, and at the best, eager inquiry and welcome, would not those advocates be despised and hated? Would not their meetings be under police espionage, their propaganda practically nil in results?

While the organizers of Czolgosz meetings and the editors of Mother Earth—these Communists and revolutionists who miscall themselves "Anarchists"—have been guilty of incredible folly in pursuing the course they have, they have stultified themselves as well. Why they are not Anarchists and how they have stultified themselves I shall show later. First, however, attention must be called to equally stupendous folly on the other side.

These propagandists would be the champion blunderers were the police not neck-and-neck in the race with them. While the Communists have been busy "cramming the furnace with resin and pine," the police have been sitting on the safety-valve. Under such conditions explosions always are due. Appeals to passion, to hatred, veiled incitements to violence, always are reprehensible and often are dangerous. But the real statesman is inclined to let the talking proceed, even when it is most unwise and may become very perilous. Except in grave crises, equal freedom for all to talk will be the surest guarantee that the foolish will not overbear the wiser part of the people. Necessarily, this condition of equal freedom is absent in a blood-thirsty mob, where no dissent is permitted, and then it is the first and urgent duty of the forces of order to intervene. But no evidence is forthcoming that the managers of the meetings attacked, that the editors of Mother Earth, would have gagged critics. So there can be no doubt, as it appears to me, that the police were very ill-advised when they piled themselves onto the safety-valve of speech. Theoretically, any government is justified to itself when it meets violence, or incitements to violence, with violence; the attacking or threatening faction invites such a counter-stroke, and it need not be astonished or scandalized if that stroke is delivered. But not all violent defensive action that is permissible is politic. It is not probable that any wholly sane man or woman has been converted into a Czolgosz admirer or apologist by anything that was said at the interrupted meetings or that was printed in Mother Earth. On the other hand, it is quite likely that the assault by the police has created more or less sympathy for those who were arrested, and this sympathy, naturally, is not always as discriminating as it should be. And the misguided action of the police has confused the issues. Before, no one not to some extent susceptible to the attacks of the assassination microbe, or very young and unthinking, was likely to go to such a meeting. Now that the police, unintendingly, have raised the question of free speech, many will hear protest addresses and read protest articles, and in some of these addresses and articles there will be little or no clear thought and much confused and confusing rhetoric, in the mists of which the ideas of many hearers and readers will become foggy and uncertain, divided between approval of force as a "reform" weapon and disapproval of force as a police weapon.

Yes, the police have done foolishly, badly; almost or quite as foolishly and badly as the Communist Czolgosz apologists.

The police, led and misled by the ideals now put before them, and knowing little more of small parties than their names used as epithets, are not the men to deal officially with sociological problems and pass judgment on the truth or error preached by men they do not know, and often in a language with which they are unfamiliar. It is pretended that the detective bureau knows all about the "Anarchists" of the East Side; knows who the leaders are, and all the other particulars. But when a raid is made, most of those caught in the net are girls and boys, and mere auditors at that; many of them drawn to the place by curiosity or childish enthusiasm. When a gambling house is raided, only the proprietor and the employees running the games are held; the visiting gamblers and the onlookers are released. Why is not this rule followed when an "Anarchist" assemblage is caught in the toils? Why hold the members of the audience, the youths of either sex who are neither managers nor speakers? Are the police anxious to make malcontents, rebels, potential assassins, or are they simply so densely stupid that they do not know what they are doing?

If the American theory of social organization is sound; that is, if reason is to be the determining factor in ordering our associative life, then they are most unwise who favor, even if only by apology after the fact, the "removal" of chosen chiefs of state; and they are equally unwise who endeavor by force to suppress expressions of discontent, even if this discontent sometimes foolishly voices itself as sympathy for or approval of unfortunate unbalanced assassins. The surest way to weaken the influence and power of a tyrannous official is to let in the light upon his actions. To kill him is to rally his party and the overwhelming majority of all other parties to avenge his death. The surest way to prevent incendiary utterances is to let folks talk. On the one side, do not throw in too much fuel, raising the steam above the danger point; and on the other side, do not sit on the safety-valve.

The so-called "yellow" press of this and other cities has done vast harm by its sensationalism, its appeal to class feeling, to passion, to undiscriminating hatred of what is; by its magnifying of relatively unimportant issues and its minimizing of vital questions; by its prying into private affairs and its sinister disregard of personal liberty and the salutary freedom of speech, press and life. But is there a careful student of human nature and human history who for a moment thinks the evil would have been less had this most unsanitary press been subjected to a rigid official censorship? Are we not as certain as that we live that an attempt to muzzle these unwholesome sheets would have multiplied ten times the evil wrought by any through them? The very badness of their conduct has made the saner, more thoughtful, less invasive, even if "conservative," journals much more welcome to earnest men and women than they might have been had they not constantly been confronted and warned by these "horrible examples." The most nearly effective censor of the press is the press itself.

To return to our examination of the policy of those who stand forth as apologists or quasi-apologists for political assassination in the United States: In the first place, as heretofore intimated, they are not Anarchists, for if Anarchism means one thing more than any other, it means opposition to the government of man by man. To take man's life without his consent is the last, supreme, step in governing him. Therefore, assassination is superlative governmentalism, not Anarchism. If it be objected that the official is killed in self-defense and that defense is not government, the sufficient answer is that in a republic there are other and preferable means of defense; that the killing, instead of lessening the tyranny or the alleged tyranny, but intensifies it in its effect upon all whom it had affected before and extends those baneful effects to others, nonparticipants in the "propaganda by deed" and non-sympathizers with that method of evangelization; and, finally, so far from the killing being an act of self-defense, it is an act of self-destruction.

In the second place, radical reformers of all schools, including the various divisions of Anarchists and Socialists, acclaim themselves the especial champions of anti-militarism, the opponents of armies and navies, the apostles of "the peaceful conquest of the earth." Needless to say, assassination is an act of war, an act kindling the war spirit in others, fanning afresh the fires of hatred, and leading almost inevitably to more and more bloodshed. It is an act of war wholly unnecessary here, wholly futile, and worse. Strangely enough, nearly all those who are ready to order or approve the "execution" of disliked officials are strenuous opponents of capital punishment! Will they see the point when they are asked, as I ask them now, if an "execution" is not the infliction of capital punishment? And in carrying the decree of execution into effect, how many innocent men, women and children are maimed and slaughtered!

But the question I am leading up to is this: Why should missionaries of peace select as their hero a fighter with bomb or knife or pistol; a killer, an assassin, a man who, like Czolgosz, never, so far as any of them knows, gave to the world a single day of study, a single thought, a single beautiful emotion to cheer and uplift in hours of loneliness and affliction? Why should they select this man, whose mad act has made it almost infinitely harder for thousands of us, men and women, to express our thoughts, to do our work for human betterment—why should they issue memorial numbers of magazines and hold commemorative meetings for him? Have there not been, are there not now, any soldiers of thought in their own ranks?

Has there not been, is there not now, a solitary man or woman in their company or outside it who has done noble work for the race in the fields of discovery, invention, science, letters, art, peace? How pitifully small, how hideously malformed, how unspeakably a failure, crouches a Czolgosz at the feet of a Bruno, a Voltaire, a Howard, a Paine, a Kropotkin, a Reclus, a Tolstoy, a Spencer, a Darwin, a Haeckel, a Proudhon, a Garrison, a Whitman, an Ibsen, a Marx, a Thoreau, an Emerson, a Mary Wollstonecraft, an Elizabeth Cady Stanton, a Susan B. Anthony! A mere blood-letter set high on a pedestal above all these creative workers! And this done by the proclaimers of peace!

In less than forty years three presidents of the United States were done to death by assassins. Two of the murderers were half-demented, to say the least. Perhaps the third, Booth, was, also. Anyway, his deed was a result of five years of civil war; it was born of the fierce passion of internecine strife. Guiteau's act was the outcome of a factional fight in the Republican party. Guiteau's brain could not stand the strain. Probably the influences leading to the murder of Mr. McKinley were more complex. The suggestion to be made here is, What would the whitewashers and gibers of Czolgosz think if certain citizens or aliens were to assemble in meetings today or issue memorial numbers of periodicals intended to "put a good face" on the assassin of Abraham Lincoln or James A. Garfield? But why should they not, if such actions are allowable, necessary, or useful in the case of the murderer of William McKinley?

What could be more absurd and repulsive than for adolescent youths, misses in short dresses, and declamatory agitators to expend breath in fervent periods over such a gruesome event as either of these assassinations? But it has been done in one case; why not in the others?

These assassinations furnish material for serious study, but no excuse for truck-end oratory. An association of mature scientific men and women might profitably spend some hours or days in examining facts and comparing inductions. Alienists, neurologists, pathologists and psychologists would find much that they could make use of in their studies and apply in the amelioration of human suffering. Here were three assassins, coming from different walks in life, acted upon by environments differing widely, and yet producing subjective and objective results essentially similar. It is a rich field for scientific investigation—for careful, painstaking collection of facts; for analysis and synthesis; for dispassionate drawing of conclusions. But for callow, frantic, partisan speech-making there is no occasion. We had too much of that preceding and immediately following the respective murders. Long ago the demagogue should have made way for the psychologist and the scientific sociologist.

Freedom of speech is necessary to freedom of thought and is a condition precedent to sanity of thought. Reason and comity can do their best work only when fear of punishment is absent. Fear of punishment may be induced by memory or record of former persecution, by present persecution, or by threatened persecution. Persecution may be instituted, without provocation, by the enemies of freedom of thought and expression, or these enemies may resort to it because of the blunders or mistaken methods of the friends of freedom of thought and expression. The man who prayed to be delivered from his reckless friends, at the same time declaring his ability to take care of his enemies without assistance, simply voiced the thought of every sane reformer since the race began its evolution.

Free thought postulated as a method is the antithesis of the methods of physical violence. No new society that shall be at the same time a better society is possible unless its component units exert themselves to the utmost to rid their minds of the force-ideals of the old society and to keep their hands from that crucifixion of reason and persuasion which is the gravamen of their indictment of the old society. It is incumbent upon the new men and women not only to talk better in glittering generalities, but to plan more wisely and to do more equitably than have the old men and women whose places they would take in the direction of human affairs. "We learn to do by doing" as we want others to do, not by doing as they do while we brand them as criminals because they do not do as we preach.

Where there is even only a partial liberty of investigation and utterance, as in this country, it is the extreme of unwisdom to throw argument and moral appeal aside and revert to the weapons of the savage. To kill officials, to hint at the alleged justifiableness or expediency of killing them, or to condone the killing of them, is the rankest folly, from every point of view. It is suicide. It solidifies against such propagandists not only "the powers that be," but all who stand for peaceful inquiry and scientific demonstration. Strike thus at officers of government in a republic, and you strike at the vast majority of the people of all schools of thought; you harden their hearts against you; you shut their ears to your arguments, to your just complaints, and your best suggestions. You drive your audience from you and force into silence nearly all reformers, nearly all advocates of change save those whose counsel is to further madness and greater destruction.

Even to argue for the right or alleged right to advocate the performance of criminal acts, on the ground that without unrestricted freedom for such advocacy of invasion the right to liberty of expression is denied, is to sacrifice essential substance to empty form. It is to transform a living principle into a dead dogma, whose worship is blindness and culminates in disaster. Your appeal to reason, or his, or mine, is nullified just in the ratio that insistence is laid on a real or assumed free-speech right to advocate the training of a battery of Nordenfeldts on dissenters or the throwing of a bomb at an official elected by those dissenters by those who do not agree with you or him or me. What may or may not be a theoretical right in the premises is relatively unimportant; what is important, vitally important, is the fact that to insist that we have such a right is to menace and cripple our perfectly defensible right of expression, to seriously limit, if not destroy, our opportunity to teach and persuade. It is enough for us to affirm the right and benefit of the utmost freedom for the discussion of all suggested peaceful changes in belief and society, and to keep it ever before all authorities that in the long run their tenure of office depends far more on non-interference with even the most incendiary utterance than on suppression of that utterance.

The assassin and the arrogant police official play into each other's hands and postpone indefinitely the day of reason and self-rule. Every act of legal or administrative oppression augments sullen discontent and trains potential murderers. Every murder of an official puts another drastic law on the statute-book and a thousand more men into the ranks of the police. Blindness and madness are pitted against blindness and madness, and between the two armies of hate the men and women of thought and peace vainly cry for truce and calm study of causes and remedies.

EDWIN C. WALKER.

244 West 143d street, New York, N. Y.

[I do not know to what extent Mr. Walker depended on the newspaper reports of the "Anarchist" meeting which was raided by the police. We all know that such reports are usually exaggerated, to express it very mildly. In order that no injustice may be done, I append Miss Goldman's account of the meeting, as published in Mother Earth.—E. H.]

Liberty by the grace of the police and the might of the club was again brought home to us in the most brutal and unspeakable manner. A club of young boys and girls peaceably assembled Saturday night, Oct. 27, to listen to a discourse as to whether or not Leon Czolgosz was an Anarchist. At the close of the meeting three of the speakers—Julius Edelson, M. Moscow and M. Rubinstein—were arrested and placed under $1,000 bail each. Tuesday, Oct. 30, a meeting was called to protest against the arrest of these boys and the suppression of free speech. Mr. Bolton Hall, H. Kelly, Max Baginski and myself were announced to speak. The meeting proceeded in absolute order, with Julius Edelson, who had meanwhile been released on bail through Mr. Bolton Hall, as the first speaker. He had spoken barely twenty minutes when several detectives jumped on the platform and placed him under arrest, while twenty-five police officers began to club the audience out of the hall. A young girl of eighteen, Pauline Slotnikoff, was pulled off a chair and brutally dragged across the floor of the hall, tearing her clothing and bruising her outrageously. Another girl, fourteen years of age, Rebecca Edelson, was roughly handled and put under arrest, because she failed to leave the hall as quickly as ordered. The same was done to three other women—Annie Pastor, Rose Rogin and Lena Smith—for no other reason except that they were unable to reach the bottom of the stairs fast enough to suit the officers. I was about to leave, when one of the officers struck me in the back and put me under arrest.

Fortunately, Mr. Bolton Hall and H. Kelly could not be present at the meeting; they, too, might have been clubbed out of the hall.

Six women and four men were packed like sardines into a patrol wagon and hustled off to the station house, where we were kept in vile air and subjected to vulgar and brutal annoyance by the police until the following morning; then we were brought before a magistrate and put under $1,000 bail each for assault. Fancy girls of fourteen and eighteen, of delicate physique, assaulting twenty-five 250-pounders!

If we as a nation were not such unspeakable hypocrites, we should long since have placed a club instead of a torch in the hand of the Goddess of Liberty—the police mace is not merely the symbol, but the very essence of our "liberty and order."

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:

E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light: affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

The anniversary memorial meeting in honor of the Anarchists hanged in Chicago Nov. 11, 1887, was held in Brand's Hall on Saturday, Nov. 10. Miss Voltairine de Cleyre's tender and loving tribute to their memory deeply touched the immense assembly. Mrs. Lucy Parsons, widow of Albert R. Parsons, was the only other English speaker,—Sunday evening, Nov. 11, at the Social Science League, Miss de Cleyre read a brilliant paper on "Anarchists in Literature" before a large and critical audience.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

HOSPITAL, U. S. P., LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Nov. 11, 1906.

My Dear Lillian: Thursday last I was honored with a visit from Elbert Hubbard, of East Aurora, N. Y., the world-famous Roycrofter, and with him came our good friend Maude Pepper Hazelton, of Kansas City, Mo.; also Mr. Wylie, of same city. To say that I enjoyed the visit most keenly is commonplace. Brother Elbertus was most kindly fraternal in words of sympathy and appreciation and in offers of aid if in need of financial assistance. He insists I must spend a week with the Roycrofters when my present engagement at the U. S. P. is ended. He is now on one of his frequent lecture tours, being billed to speak in Leavenworth the same day on which he called on yours truly. Sorry the nature of my business here did not permit my hearing the lecture. More correctly speaking, I regret that the nature of the business of the prison officials with me would not permit me to hear the lecture.

Mrs. Hazelton renewed her kind invitation of some weeks ago, insisting that I must call at her home when on my way to Chicago. Says she will meet me at the prison gate, morning of Dec. 26, at which time I expect also Brothers Shepherd and Young, of Leavenworth, and perhaps others. Of course I shall be anxious to get home as soon as possible, but as Mrs. Hazelton's mother, Myra Pepper-Weiler, is expected to visit the daughter about that time, and as Dr. L. M. Hammond expects me to visit her place, a suburb of Kansas City, before returning to Chicago, I feel much inclined to comply with these kind invitations, more especially so since Dr. Hammond writes me that she expects to go to California in the near future. Please write her at once and say that visits to prisoners are in order every day except Sundays and holidays. Be sure not to neglect this. Dr. Hammond has made several unsuccessful attempts to find out when she can visit me. Mrs. Hazelton brought me a basket of excellent fruit—assorted varieties.

From Edwin C. Walker come copies of World's Work, Moody's Magazine, Liberal Review and Life; also good letter on the political situation in New York, with clippings. Tell him I have seen no copy of Truth Seeker since leaving home.

Did I tell you I had a visit from Brothers Shepherd and Young, of Leavenworth? Seems to me I mentioned it in my last to you.

From George Bedborough, London, Eng., comes an autograph copy of a book called "The Hundred Best Poems in the English Language (Lyrical)," selected by "A. L. G."; also card.

Please thank L. A. Heald (Washington, D. C.) for writing, and J. D. Shaw, editor Searchlight (Waco, Tex.), for publishing the little poem entitled, "Life's Best Hero (Respectfully dedicated to Moses Harman)." Say to Brother Heald my only regret is that the said Moses Harman is not more worthy of having such lines inscribed to him. It seems from his editorial note that Mr. Shaw holds much the same attitude towards me and my work that Louis F. Post, editor the Public (Chicago), does. Neither of these men share with "Mr. Harman the theories in advocacy of which he has been made to suffer." To this statement Mr. Shaw adds: "However, it [the Searchlight] believes that in their advocacy he is perfectly honest and that his motives are pure. . . . If a man's spirit and motives may be honored while his actions are deprecated, then the lines referred to are consistently admitted to these columns." There is this difference, however, between the attitude of the Searchlight and that of the Public: While the former has in the main been silent, the latter has given much of its space to a defense of what it believes the right of publication—the right of every man and woman to free expression of honest opinion, so long as the personal and property rights of no one are invaded. In thus saying I wish to censure the motives of no one who differs from me in "theory." Claiming to be honest in my views on all questions, I freely grant honesty of purpose to all others. I refuse most positively to sit in judgment upon the motives of others, even upon the motives of those who deprive me of what I claim as my natural and civil rights. I am always glad to get copies of the Searchlight, and sincerely thank Brother Shaw, whom I once met in Chicago, for sending me his magazine for November of this year.

In my last letter I failed to acknowledge all the letters and cards I had received up to that date. Lest I crowd out these acknowledgments again, I will begin now, and will include letters and cards received since last writing: F. A. de Crane, 1; Ed. Secrest, 1; G. B. Wheeler, 3; Joseph M. Bare, 1; W. W. Miller, 2 (and clippings); Emma B. Greene, 2; Flora McPhillipps, 1; E. L. Small, 3; Oriole E. Lloyd, 1; Albert Wichman, 2; Fannie Bellis, 1; Ada M. Morley, 2; Hebron A. Libbey, 1; Rosa B. Parkhurst, 1; J. M. Gilbert, 1; T. F. Meade, 1; Frank Theodore Allen, 1 (and literature); C. N. Greene, 2; Thirza Rathbun, 1; Helen Philbrick, 1; I. Jamison, 1; Fred P. Young, 1; J. Allen Evans, 2; Lois Waisbrooker, 1; Edward P. Foster, 1 (and literature); Bruno Lehman, 1; John E. Boultenhouse, 2 letters and 10 picture cards; Dr. J. E. Price, 2; Florence Johnson, 1; Bettie M. Roberts, 1; Sadie A. Magoon, 1; Ollie Steedman, 1; Annie E. K. Parkhurst, 6 picture cards; Philip G. Peabody, 11 picture cards; Dr. Robert Greer, 1 (with booklet); Grace Moore, 2; Grace Potter, 1 (with 60 unaddressed picture cards); C. P. Holt, 1; Dr. Hardcastle, 1; Lucinda B. Chandler, 2; A. E. Ellis, 1 (with literature). From foreign countries: Bodh Raj Shah, Langhoi, Dist. D, Jelum, Punjab, India, 1; Dora Forster-Kerr, British Columbia, 1; Robert R. Kerr, same, 2; a card, written in Spanish (or Latin), mailed at Tepic, Mexico, and addressed to "Hon. Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan., E. U."—I suppose was meant for me, judging from the sub-title or number appended to my name, but not being able to read the writing (except the address) I am left to infer that my Mexican friend has got my name mixed with that of some distinguished United States legislator, hence has tacked the handle—"Hon."—to the wrong name. If this line should meet his eye I respectfully ask him to write again, and get some one to translate the message into "United States" before putting it into the international mail bags. While I plead guilty of having committed the folly of making a political canvass as an antislavery man in a proslavery state during the rushing times of 1862, I hope I have so far outgrown the inanities of youth that no one, native or foreign, can justly accuse me of wanting to see the title "Hon." prefixed to my name.

A good letter from Arthur Wastall, East London, South Africa—the third from him, as I think, since I was sent to Joliet—tells me that two of his friends had written letters to me this year and got no acknowledgment—namely, Fred Weeks, of Sussex, Eng., and Mrs. Hallam, of Sydney, Australia. I certainly have seen no letters from either of these good friends. Perhaps misdirection is the cause.

Brother Wastall tells me there are many surprises awaiting me when again I am free to read what has been done and said and written during the months of my present incarceration. Among other things he mentions the publication of a book in German, called "Marriage of Happiness," and promises to bring this book (soon to be translated into English) to the attention of our readers. Please remind him of his promise, if he should forget it. Again Brother Wastall speaks of the interest his Japanese friends are taking in our work. "You will be glad to know that the more intelligent Japanese are reading your literature and greedily asking for more." Again, too, he speaks of his "ambitious idea of planting a 'Harman colony' in British East Africa, on a site already chosen by Dr. Theodor Hertzka, the noted German or Austrian writer whose work on land and cooperative industry we have been selling for a year or two."

Many other letters I should like to notice, but space fails. I lost an hour or two today from writing by going to chapel to hear Mrs. Booth. She is evidently a fine speaker, but I could not hear much she said. Will send another package of letters soon.

M. H.

THE FEARS OF AN ANTIPURITAN.

In the discussion of the sex question England lags far behind America, notwithstanding its freer press. The boldness of experiment which has long existed on this side of the Atlantic is as yet unknown over there, and even the theoretical free-lovers of England are too few and scattered to have any influence. At last, however, there are signs of a coming awakening. Many writers of some reputation have begun timidly to allude to the subject of sex, and to hint that some kind of change is needed. One of these is Hubert Bland, who did more perhaps than any one to create the Antipuritan League, and who has now published a book called "Letters to a Daughter," in which there are signs of a progressive spirit. This book is criticised in Fabian News for October by Cecil Chesterton, secretary of the Antipuritan League, and some of his remarks are so characteristic of persons who are just beginning to study the sex question that I wish to make a few comments on them. Speaking of Bland's position on the sex question, Chesterton says:

"Neither the sentimentalities of the conventionalists nor those of the revolutionists can disturb the balance of his judgment. His point of view is unconventional, but he is not an anarchist. He knows that without conventions civilization, and indeed human life as we know it, could not exist. He criticises them freely, but he does not urge a blind revolt against them, as such. He sees the complexity of human problems, notably of the problem of sex. He has no sudden and clear-cut solution."

These statements are rather vague, but I gather from them that Mr. Chesterton, while dissatisfied with things as they are, cannot summon up courage to cut the knot by the simple method of individual freedom. He thinks the community must superintend the love relations of individuals, otherwise something dreadful, he hardly knows what, would happen. As there are many who think like Mr. Chesterton, perhaps the best thing I can do is to mention other subjects regarding which a similar belief formerly prevailed, but has now been abandoned by all intelligent persons.

Not long ago it was the universal belief of mankind that the state must superintend the religious opinions of the individual, otherwise society would be in a state of chaos. Francis Bacon, though far in advance of his age in religious toleration, wrote an essay on "Unity in Religion," in which he described the dreadful things that would happen if men went to different churches. "Heresies and schisms," he says, "are of all others the greatest scandals, yea, more than corruption of manners." Little more than two centuries ago John Bunyan spent twelve years in jail for preaching in an unlicensed conventicle, and the vast majority of Englishmen thought it served him right. A few years earlier Roger Williams was driven from Massachusetts for advocating freedom of conscience. It was not for fear that men's souls would be damned that writers like Bacon abhorred heresy, but because they believed that social life would become impossible if heresy were allowed.

Little more than two centuries ago it was the universal opinion of mankind that if books could be published without being licensed by a government official the most disastrous consequences would ensue. Even when licensing was abolished the press was still severely restrained by the law courts, and liberty was only very gradually secured. The liberation of the press has been approved by historians of every shade of opinion. The rather prudish Macaulay says:

"From the day on which the emancipation of our literature was accomplished the purification of our literature began. That purification was effected not by the intervention of senates or magistrates but by the opinion of the great body of educated Englishmen, before whom good and evil were set, and who were left free to make their choice. During a hundred and sixty years the liberty of our press has been constantly becoming more and more entire, and during those hundred and sixty years the restraint imposed on writers by the general feeling of readers has been constantly becoming more and more strict."

Ten years ago nearly all scientists, and the great majority of people who prided themselves on their intelligence, thought that compulsory vaccination was necessary, otherwise nobody would get vaccinated. In England, however, the untutored multitude made such resistance to compulsory vaccination that parliament, with many misgivings, abolished it in 1898. What has been the result? In the very first year of voluntary vaccination the number of vaccinations rose 33 per cent, and it has steadily increased ever since. In 1898, the last year of compulsory vaccination, only 47 per cent of the children born in London were vaccinated; in 1901, under voluntary vaccination, 85 per cent were vaccinated.

Not long ago everybody thought it necessary that the law should, by the severest penalties, punish the act for which Oscar Wilde was condemned. Most people still think so in English-speaking coun-

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan. Purely private subjects should be avoided, as all letters are read by prison officials and withheld if not approved. Do not ask questions requiring answer. All such questions, matter pertaining to LUCIFER, changes of addresses, etc., should be sent to the office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

tries, but hardly anywhere else. In Holland, Belgium, France, Italy, Spain, and probably other countries, such acts are no longer punished by law, and a great agitation with a like aim is going on in Germany and Austria. The legislators of those countries have had the sense to see that if persons who have this peculiarity are left free they will not marry, and will have no children to inherit their peculiarity; but if they are not left free, they will marry and have children like themselves.

One could give almost endless instances of regulations which were once thought indispensable, and are now thought ridiculous. But none of them were so absurd as regulations on sex. Religion and authorship are artificial things peculiar to man, and nature gives us no rules for our guidance in such matters. But the relations of the sexes are already regulated by the laws of physiology. Nature tells everybody when the age of love should commence, when it is good to have and when not to have relations with the other sex, whom it is good to have relations with and whom to avoid, how long love should last, and all other matters of the same kind. All these things have been settled by millions of years of natural selection. By the attraction of opposites and other feelings nature tells us what persons we should mate with in order to have superior children. If we choose an unsuitable mate, nature soon shows us our mistake. Now and again people are born with a tendency to sexual excess, just as they are born with a tendency to gluttony or drunkenness, but natural selection is always weeding such persons out. Throughout the whole animal world the relations of the sexes and the rearing of offspring are regulated to perfection by the laws of physiology, and animals are entirely free from many diseases and evils that afflict mankind. It is only when we come to man that we are told that nature cannot attend to the relations of the sexes without the aid of Roosevelt and Comstock.

The rules of moralists and legislators regarding sex consist of nothing but wholesale attacks on the laws of physiology. Women are told that they must not have love relations until many years after nature has commanded them to do so. Strong, healthy women are told that they must live and die as old maids. Vigorous young women are told that they must be "true" to old men with one foot in the grave. Women wedded to imbeciles, drunkards and diseased persons are told that it is their duty to have as many children by such men as possible. Young men are forbidden to have natural relations with clean and decent women and are driven to associate with those who give them the foulest ideas of sex and turn them into fountain-heads of disease and corruption. Variety in love is condemned as bad, although change of air, change of scene, change of diet, change of occupation, and every other conceivable form of variety are admitted by every rational being to be good.

I have no space to deal with all the groundless fears of those who think sex should be regulated, but I will deal with a difficulty Mr. Chesterton raised in the same paper some time ago, that children would be deserted under free love. The answer is that in many parts of the world marriage has already been abandoned by half the people and children are not deserted. In Vienna 45 children in every 100 are illegitimate, and in Prague and Munich 44. Did any one ever hear that the children of these cities were deserted? If they were, there would be a high death rate. According to Mulhall, the most legitimate of cities is Rotterdam, where only 7 per cent are illegitimate, and Vienna is the most illegitimate of cities; yet Rotterdam has a heavier death rate than Vienna. My own opinion is that children will never be really well cared for until they are publicly maintained, but at least they are as well cared for without marriage as with it.

That free love is better than bond love is not a mere theory, but a thoroughly tested and proven fact. For many years freedom in love has been practiced in America by individuals and by communities. Many persons have lived and died under it, and many children have been born and raised under it. Up to date it has been an absolute success, and it is preached and practiced by an ever-increasing number of persons, especially women. Messrs. Bland and Chesterton are well-known journalists and they should come to America and study free love on the ground and then publish an account of what they have seen and heard. Before many days were past they would laugh as much at their present ideas as I have no doubt they now laugh at Bacon for thinking that society would fall to pieces if men went to different churches.

R. B. KERR.

Think you, if Laura had been Petrarch's wife,
He would have written sonnets all his life?

—Byron.

CART BEFORE HORSE.

Helen Wilmans says:

"If the meddlesome brain had staid in the one room where it belongs and left the kitchen department alone, that department in which the action is involuntary, the stomach, lungs, bowels and kidneys, there never would have been any sickness. The involuntary system thinks more perfectly than the brain can think for it."

That the involuntary system can do its work better without the help (or hindrance) of the brain is quite true, but that such interference was the first cause of the sickness which prevails is not true. It is simply a wrong-end-to statement. The brain never troubled itself about the stomach till after that organ complained. You will have to look further, Helen, for the origin of disease.

That there is a close connection between the stomach and the sex organs is conceded by physicians, and the ignorant, excessive, because unsatisfied, creative life threw the involuntary system out of order, and then the brain began to inquire into the matter.

But Helen, in order to substantiate her theory, after accusing the brain of being the cause of the trouble, after saying that the involuntary organs can think for themselves better than the brain can think for them, actually commissions the brain to arouse the stomach to an unrecognized power by which said stomach can overcome the trouble caused by said brain. What nonsense!

Helen, you are pretty smart, but until you recognize the fact that "sex contains all," a fact stated by Whitman years before you assumed the position of leader, and until you further recognize that the sex fountain must be pure before its life streams can be healthy, and also that it never can be pure until woman is wholly free, sex receives our highest honor and we demand its highest use—until you recognize all this, your attempts to account for the origin of disease will be failures.

"If there is no malaria in the atmosphere there will be no malarial disease." With no poisonous sex aura in the atmosphere, disease and crime will be reduced to a minimum if not entirely eradicated. The sex relation in which woman is not a willing partner inevitably creates a disturbed, diseased, crime-producing aura, for such relation is of itself a crime.

Mind is powerful if it acts intelligently—that is, in harmony with nature's law—but even Helen Wilmans cannot make two and two five, or cause water to run up hill. All effort to do away with disease and crime, so long as the fountain of life is ignorantly, or otherwise, abused, must fail. Only a pure life-fountain can bring the desired result, and that we cannot have until woman is free—so free that she need not accept what she does not want, nor reject what she does want. Then there will be only mutually desired relations, and nature counts all such relations pure, children born of such relations legitimate. Motherhood is a natural right, and the public opinion which condemns such motherhood a false one. Women, some women, begin to see this and to act from it. I have a letter from a girl-woman of 24, who says:

"I want to have my little baby as soon as conditions will give me an opportunity. Please do not oppose me in anything I say. If you think me foolish do not tell me so. I recognize that the real genius of my being is seeking to manifest. I think as you do, my mind runs in the same channel, yet I have been compelled by circumstances to map out my own course. I must work in a different way and do my best with what is before me."

One year ago she was writing to come to me, but since then she has had experiences which have developed a very strong self-reliance, and she is planning to assume motherhood without the legal chain as soon as she can see her way clear. A few women have done what she is planning to do.

Over forty years ago a teacher in Iowa desired a child. She decided it was her right and acted upon it. She was of Quaker descent. She wrote to her parents, who lived in Ohio; told them she would go home if they said so; if not, that she had money enough to pay for being cared for where she was. Her parents said, Come home, and they tried in every way possible to ascertain who the father of her child was, but they failed. She said she wanted the child; he was not to blame and he should not be troubled. She never did tell. She has passed to the other side of life, but her son lives in Philadelphia and, I am told, is a man to be respected.

Since then others have asserted their natural right, lived it; some for awhile and then, becoming tired of the struggle, have married. Others continue even till now, utterly refusing to bear the legal chain. And what good has it done, do you ask? What does the sunshine do in early spring? As I have talked with women from time to time I have often thought of early vegetation just below the sight; only a little more sunshine and it comes to the surface.

True, it will take a good many mental bombs, a large amount of mental dynamite to penetrate conservative prisons, but they cannot imprison thought.

"Oh, foolish ignorance, that thinks to stop the rising sun of thought
By shutting up the thinker!
For thought, when shut from speech, flies o'er the walls like cannon balls when touched by powder's flame."

LOIS WAISBROOKER.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

ADAM BARBIER, Brewster, Neb.—Please find inclosed $1 for LUCIFER when present subscription expires. I like LUCIFER, with one exception—it is too lenient with its enemies. There is no manner of use in trying to fight a skunk with cologne water. If your father could lie about Thomas Paine like Roosevelt can, he might be president of these United States. If Thomas Paine were president thinkers like Moses Harman would be protected.

W. L. LIGHTBOUN, Washington, D. C.—I notice my subscription will expire with next number of LUCIFER. I am inclosing $2—one for another year's subscription and one to apply on fund to be raised for the editor's release and home-coming. I hope all the readers of LUCIFER will be prompt in adding their dollars to this fund as a reward for the sacrifices made by a noble hero in a just and noble cause. I would gladly give more if able, but this much I must give or be false to my ideals.

C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kan.—I send by today's mail a copy of "To My Daughter on Her Wedding Day." I wish you would forward it to your father with my love. Your father's and your courage has done much to uphold me and others in loyalty to the great cause of woman, which is also man's—humanity's cause. . . . Have you read the concluding chapters of Wells' "In the Days of the Comet" (October Cosmopolitan)? If not, be sure and do so. I think all that which bears upon the matter of love should be republished in LUCIFER—with explanation as to who Wells is and what the Cosmopolitan is. What wonderful progress after all! Hail the day when the light shall shine and melt away prisons and ostracism!

W. M., New Haven, Conn.—I have just received No. 1078 of LUCIFER. Have only had time to read, so far, the announcement of the "home-coming" of your father. You seem inclined to think that the best place for him, during the coming winter, is in California. You invite suggestions from those interested. My suggestion in the matter would be, do by all means whatever would add comfort or length to his life. I firmly believe that all his friends would most sincerely wish this with me. In order to carry out this idea I would say that a little later I will send a dollar towards defraying the expense for him of a sojourn in California through the winter. I have already sent a dollar to assist in the entertainment of his home-coming, with a promise of another in case you fall short in the cost of such entertainment. I think it would be "the time of my life" if I could only be present at that home-coming, but I really do not entertain any hopes.

OTTO BOESIEU, Mount Vernon, N. Y.—My subscription ran out some time ago, but this is the first chance I could get of renewing it, and you will find inclosed $1 for same. Would that I could make larger contributions to help along the great cause which you and your dear father espouse. The suggestion that his liberation from prison be celebrated by the liberals of the land is a good one, but I think it would be a good plan if at the same time steps be taken to form a national organization for self-defense against the governmental outrages which are becoming more and more frequent. We have many people in this land who believe in certain radical principles, but who are afraid to express themselves. It is this cowardly attitude of so many people toward the powers that be that makes such outrages as are perpetrated against LUCIFER and its editor possible. . . . Kindly send sample copy of LUCIFER to inclosed address. I made the chance acquaintance of Mr. W. some time ago, and as he did not seem dangerously conservative I started to discuss the sex question; of course I described the work of LUCIFER and its editor, and the outrages committed by the postal officials. As a patriotic American he was not inclined to believe it, but he agreed with me that the sex question was one of the most important, if not the most important question.

JOHN H. LANDES, Atlanta, Ga.—Your note, stating that the present supply of "Perfect Humanhood" has been exhausted, came yesterday, together with the pamphlets. LUCIFER was not among them, but I was much interested in reading "A Letter to the President" and L. F. Post's paper on "Postal Censorship." Living here in Georgia, as I am, one is practically isolated from the currents that make for real freedom and which make themselves felt more and more strongly in some sections of the country.

I am looking forward to the time when, as a nation, we will have a broader conception of things pertaining to the generative phase of human existence, for I am convinced that regeneration of the race can come to pass only by way of proper generation of the individual.

I, too, am sick of the theological hypocrisy which, under the mantle of sanctity, not only protects but most effectually enforces conditions of shame and degradation that are unspeakably revolting. No efforts seem more laudable than those put forth to enlighten the race along these lines. But the process of education in these points must naturally be slow, with that unmeasured amount of superstition and prejudice to be overcome. I wish to keep in touch with your movement, wishing it the broadest and widest success possible.

S. R. SHEPHERD, Leavenworth, Kan.—At last, having gained the use of my "pedal extremities," which were somewhat paralyzed after my summer's sickness, I got Brother Young to accompany me, and a few days ago paid a visit to the imprisoned martyr. And if it is an inch it's six blocks from the trolley terminus to the prison door. Then a standing wait of thirty-five minutes in the chilly wind at the entrance before admission—"on the even hour." A clear case of violating the law against cruelty to animals—of the two-legged variety. For we had no overcoats. I was reminded of (and quoted) the old saying: "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." And Brother Young punctured the period with "loud applause." If they'd only provide some rocks or soap boxes for guests to sit on, and a wind-break of cornstalks to prevent them from suffering and taking their death-cold, it would comport better with our boastings of high civilization. Well, we got in at last and had a splendid visit—hilarious and even uproarious, with jokes and laughter—with the victim of puritan persecution. I looked for the guard, every minute, to hush us up, but he let us go Gallagher. I congratulated him (M. H.) on how grossly healthy he looked. My friend Dr. Yohe came into the room to see who his callers were and what they brought (I brought only apples), and, seeing it was we-uns, waited and came to town with us.

CHARLES W. DICKINSON, Spokane, Wash.—Your letter of October 19, in answer to a request from me, received; also copies of LUCIFER. There is a feeling of true, honest sympathy that goes out from my being into the life and love of Moses Harman, although the copies of LUCIFER you sent me is the first acquaintance I have had with his noble and grand work. It is not convenient for me to send my subscription today, but I will do so soon. In the near future I hope to be able to subscribe to a fund to be given to the editor of LUCIFER, which will be accepted as an expression of our love and appreciation of his work in freedom's cause. I am in the work here in Spokane. I have a class of children which I am endeavoring to imbue with the idea of love and freedom. If you have any suggestions to offer that you feel would be of some assistance to me along this line, I would thank you very much. Will it be convenient for you to send me a copy of "Little Lessons for Little Folks"? If they are what I desire I shall want two or three dozen copies. If you have a good freethought song-book I would also like a copy for examination, and if desirable would want two dozen copies. The books surely would be desirable if on a true freethought basis. Can you inform me where I may procure some "reward of merit" cards, having freethought suggestions printed on them? What I want is a nice card, lithographed—one to give each Sunday to the children of my class.

[Perhaps some of our readers may have suggestions to offer to Mr. Dickinson. Letters addressed to him in care of 500 Fulton street, Chicago, will be duly forwarded.]

In the march of life, don't heed the order of "right about" when you know you are about right.—Holmes.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

HUGH O. PENTECOST lectures every Sunday morning at 11 o'clock at Lyric Hall, Sixth avenue, near Forty-second street, New York. Lucifer for sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

"Our Monthly Programme," a neat and interesting little magazine of eight pages and cover, is "published in the interest of the Los Angeles Liberal Club and the general cause of free thought." It is in its second volume, is distributed gratuitously at the meetings and sent by mail for 25 cents a year. Ask for sample copy.

The Jungle.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR.

BY UPTON SINCLAIR.

A somber and terrible picture of life in the Chicago stock yards from the point of view of the workingman. It shows the conditions that turn the hero into a criminal and a tramp. There are startling revelations concerning methods in the meat-packing industry, and glimpses of all Chicago's under-world of crime and "graft." The story is hailed as "the greatest novel published in America in fifty years."

"It is one of the most powerful and terrible stories ever written."—Robert Hunter, Author of "Poverty."

12 mo, cloth, 413 pages, $1.50, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Who Is the Enemy: Anthony Comstock or You?

BY E. C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.

THE "MORAL" CENSORSHIP—The Inspiration of the Censor; A "Protection" that Betrays; Utter Lack of Discrimination; Vain Denial of Facts; A Greater Wrong to the Child; Some Officers' Zeal; Imagined "Plots"; The Law as Administered; The Vicious Law of Obscene Libel; Obscene Libel and Expert Testimony; Judge and Jury and "the Facts"; Some Criticisms Answered; The Common Law Yesterday and Today; Wrong Principles of Action; The Censorship and the Bible; Moncure D. Conway on Censors; Where Lies Responsibility—on Censor or You? The Cause of Slow Advance; Sex a Mistake—"Somebody Blundered"; Superstition Not Seriously Crippled; The Worship of Death and Decay; Characteristic Eruptions of Sex Panic.

THE "FRAUD ORDER" FRAUD—Remarkable Deliverance by Judge Thomas; The Courts and the Constitution; The Persecution of "Freedom"; Grateful for Injuries Received.

THE CENSORSHIP OF SECOND-CLASS MATTER—The Department's Rules of Exclusion; Statistics of Official Financiering; Two Arguments About Government Socialism.

Price, 20 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Do You Want Free Speech?

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Concentrated, but comprehensive. It is specially valuable at the present crisis, since it is the only pamphlet exposing the entire conspiracy against free speech in America. The facts it cites are startling, but absolutely veridable. The brochure is needed by all who would realize whither we are drifting, the magnitude of the issue we are called on to face, the fundamental principles involved in the battle for free speech, and the means of combatting the enemies of liberty. Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Free America.

BY BOLTON HALL.

Dedicated "To Those Who Are Poor and Wish to Become Rich, or Who Are Rich and Wish to Become Richer."

The book shows, in an interesting and amusing way, the evils from which we suffer as individuals and as a society, the causes of them and their cure—which is liberty. The illustrations are by Dan Beard. Two hundred and fifteen pages, 18mo. Price, postpaid: Paper, 25 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Coming of Age.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation. American edition, cloth, prepaid, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Weitstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,

52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1079

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is dazzling—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

POEMS OF VARIED FEELING.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

The author is well known to the readers of LUCIFER, many of the poems in this volume having made their first appearance in our columns. The title well expresses the character of the work; the verses breathe of life and liberty and love; the charms of the seasons and the beauties of nature. The spirit of revolution, too, is voiced in "Liberty and the Commune," "In the Hour of Execution," "Von Plehve Dead," and other poems. "To the Enemies of Free Speech"; "The Challenge of Liberty"; "A Ballade of Butterflies"; "The Roistering Knights"; "Father Damien"; "Your Loves"; "Death in Life"; "Looking on the Sierras"; "Mother-Heart," are a few titles taken at random, showing the varied scope of the work.

12 mo, cloth; gilt title; 100 pages; $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,

For the Supermen and Superwomen and The New Civilization,

2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, DECEMBER 6, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1080

THE PRISON.

And I saw a gaol lifting its grimy walls to heaven.

And they that passed by looked at it askance, for they said, "It is the abode of Sin."

And to them the broad sky and all the earth was fair to look upon, for they saw the early buds opening and heard the birds that had come back from the south, and they felt the sun which was now warming the hearts of beast and plant.

But within the prison, and behind its cold, thick buttresses, and its small, round, triple-barred windows, that looked like tunnels, they heard faint groanings and sighings and much lamentation, and they said, "It is most just, for it is the abode of Sin."

And I heard a Voice saying, "Woe to the cause that hath not passed through a prison!"

And I looked again, and I saw in the gaol those deliverers who in each age have saved the world from itself and set it free, and gyves were on their wrists and ankles.

And I saw Israel in the house of bondage before it came forth to preserve Duty for mankind.

Woe to the cause that hath not passed through a prison!

And I saw the prætorian hall and One that was bound therein, and the soldiers bowed the knee before Him and mocked Him and then led Him away to proclaim Love to the world.

Woe to the cause that hath not passed through a prison!

And I saw within the gaol them that gave liberty to the slave, and them that unbound the mind of man, and them that strove to free his conscience, and them that led onward to Freedom and Justice and Love.

Woe to the cause that hath not passed through a prison!

And I saw there also those who in our own time have counted themselves as nothing if they could but point out God's way unto their brethren; and there were many, too, of the prophets who are still to come, and these also were in bonds.

Woe to the cause that hath not passed through a prison!

And lo, the sky became clouded, and night fell, and there were no birds nor blossoms, but a chill came upon the earth, and they that passed by shivered and trembled; and I beheld, and saw that they were not men, but that they were really wolves, and apes, and swine.

And within the gaol was a great light, and a pleasant warmth came from the barred windows, and I heard a burst of triumphant song.

And the gyves fell from the limbs of the prisoners, and there was great joy.

And they that passed by would now come in, but they could not; and now within was freedom and without was captivity.

And the hosts within held up their arms, and the marks of their shackles were upon them.

But I hid my arms behind me, for there was no mark on my wrists.

Woe to the cause that hath not passed through a prison!

—Ernest Crosby.

MOSES HARMAN NIGHT AT THE SUNRISE CLUB.

The Sunrise Club dinner, on Monday evening, January 7, will be Moses Harman night, with James F. Morton, Jr., as the historian-opener of the after-dinner talk. Among the other speakers probably will be Dr. Foote, Moses Oppenheimer, Edw. W. Chamberlain, Theodore Schroeder and members and visitors caught on the spot. The question will be something like this: "Moses Harman as a Man, as an Editor, as an Advocate of Free Womanhood and Free Motherhood, and as Federal Prisoner: His Purpose and His Method."

I hope the readers of LUCIFER in New York and vicinity will let me know at once if they intend to participate in the celebration of the veteran editor's release, so that I may have time in which to secure a restaurant or hotel large enough for the comfort of all who come.

EDWIN C. WALKER, Secretary.

244 West 143d Street, New York (Manhattan).

STORY OF ONE EFFORT TO RELIEVE MOSES HARMAN

By Ed. W. Chamberlain.

Believing that Moses Harman is the victim of conditions which, if allowed to prevail, will finally be a means of overthrowing our republican form of government, and having watched from its incipiency the growth of the irresponsible postal censorship which has persistently attacked Mr. Harman, and knowing the reckless way in which the first censorial legislation was enacted and the mischief of the statutes as well as the confused, contradictory, lawless and arbitrary decisions of the courts under those statutes,—having seen that the very parties who clamored for such legislation were the first to violate the laws of their own making, while ruthlessly insisting upon their enforcement upon others, and being familiar with such judicial outrages as were inflicted upon D. M. Bennett, Ezra H. Heywood, Ida C. Craddock, Charles C. Moore and others,—I consider that in taking the course described in the following resumé I performed a patriotic service of the highest character. Whether my countrymen will agree with me time and the outcome will determine.

Responsibility for Mr. Harman's prolonged suffering rests upon those whose ears were closed to our appeal fully as much as upon the judge whose management of the trial produced the unfortunate result. I am not informed whether this responsibility is with Mr. Moody or Mr. Roosevelt. If Mr. Moody has failed to make the most urgent presentation to Mr. Roosevelt in this case I do not hesitate to say that he is a very unfit man for any judicial position.

The petition signed by about two thousand reputable citizens having been duly presented, the gentleman who had charge of the presentation wrote in response to my inquiry:

June 29, '06.

Mr. E. W. Chamberlain, New York.

Dear Sir: I was over to Department of Justice today. There is no hope, in my judgment, of having the pardon recommended. They say this is the fourth conviction and that Mr. Harman stated when out he would defy the law again. You must admit that is not easy to overcome with a lawyer. Very truly,

C. F. NESBIT.

Thereupon the following letter was addressed to the pardon clerk:

IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION FOR PARDON OF MOSES HARMAN.
10 WEST SIXTY-FIRST STREET, NEW YORK, 26 June, 1906.

Peyton Gordon, Esq., Pardon Clerk, etc.

Dear Sir: The gentleman who presented the petition for the relief of Mr. Moses Harman writes me that he is met with the statement that the present is Mr. Harman's fourth conviction, and that Mr. Harman has proclaimed his defiance of the law.

This attributing defiance of the law to Mr. Harman must stand discredited by the source whence it originated and by the motives which prompt the persecution he suffers. The relation of "the law" to Mr. Harman may be learned from a "Review of the Prosecutions in Kansas," written in 1895 and reprinted in No. 1066 of Mr.

Harman's paper, a copy of which I send you herewith, and to which I beg you will give your earnest consideration. You may be thereby informed about this awful bugbear of four previous convictions. These matters have passed into history. The history of them is known to a great many of the signers of the petition now before you. The facts cannot be suppressed. I believe you will agree with me that this history is not creditable to the judges who have participated in its making.

Setting aside all this, which has nothing to do with the present case, an unprejudiced examination of the printed matters now in question will show that they are not obscene as pretended, and I make bold to say that no clean-minded man has ever said that they were obscene. One of these articles is a reprint from the Woman's Journal, a paper supported by the subscriptions of the most intelligent and progressive women in the country [Mr. Chamberlain is in error in this statement. The Woman's Journal article was not the subject of the indictment nor was its legality ever questioned in court. It was alleged to be obscene and on this pretense the issue of LUCIFER containing it was stolen from the mails.—Ed.], and the effort to hold these articles up in the light of obscene matters, successful as it appears to have been in the case of Mr. Harman, is a demonstration of the fact that under the procedure obtaining in this class of cases there is no safety for any citizen against whom the cry of "mad dog" is raised.

The manifest effort to excite your prejudice and poison your mind by such suggestions at the outset of your inquiry is characteristic of the methods of these cases.

I submit that this being so, ample and sufficient reasons to justify relief of Mr. Harman by executive pardon appear not merely in the absence of any obscenity in the articles themselves, but in the manner and methods of the trial as shown in the appeal book, some reflections upon which are printed in aforesaid number of Mr. Harman's paper, herewith enclosed. Other articles in the same paper may be considered as having some bearing upon the question before you—namely, the article upon the first page, and the one entitled "Government Follows Moses Harman's Lead." At least you might read these articles with profit.

One further reason I would urge for Mr. Harman's pardon, of an entirely different character from the foregoing, depending upon information received by me quite recently, to the effect that his custodians in prison are imposing cruel and unusual hardships upon him. At his age and with his frail constitution his life has been seriously endangered by confinement in the same cell with a consumptive, and a change for the worse has just been made by replacing this consumptive cell-mate by one whose fury of temper is a constant menace to Mr. Harman's personal safety.

If Mr. Harman had been guilty of theft or had murdered his grandmother or had committed some real crime it would still be the duty of his custodians to preserve his health and guard his safety. How much greater, then, is this obligation when, if guilty at all, he is merely guilty of a statutory offense of the most flimsy and fictitious character. His present treatment is more reprehensible than the offense he is claimed to have committed. It should meet with prompt and stern rebuke.

Mr. Ezra H. Heywood, the victim of a similar unrelenting persecution under the pretense of obscenity, was on one occasion arraigned before Judge Nelson in Boston, and the pretended offense being stated, the judge promptly discharged Mr. Heywood with the remark that the court was robust enough to stand that. A condition of robust morality is required at this time to resist the course of this outrage, and I feel confident that if my appeal is to a man of robust moral character it will not be in vain. I cite you the example of President McKinley's prompt action in the similar case of Mr. Charles C. Moore. Very respectfully,

ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

In due time the following answer was received:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY IN CHARGE OF PARDONS.
WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30, 1906.

Ed. W. Chamberlain, 10 West Sixty-First Street, New York City.

Sir: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 26th instant concerning the application for pardon of Moses Harman, and to advise you that inasmuch as a former application filed in behalf of Mr. Harman was adversely reported and the case closed June 11, 1906, the same cannot be reconsidered unless the President directs that the case be reported to him or either the district attorney or trial judge file a supplemental and favorable report in the case.

Your letter has been placed upon the files of this department.
Respectfully, PEYTON GORDON, Pardon Attorney.

To which I replied:

HEATON HALL, STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., 3 July, 1906.

Peyton Gordon, Esq., Pardon Attorney, etc.

Dear Sir: Acknowledging your courteous favor of 30th ultimo, I have to thank you for your prompt response as well as to express surprise at your like promptness in disposing of the application for the relief of Mr. Harman.

I see I was in error in presuming that my letter of 26 June would reach you soon enough after your receipt of the petition to engage your attentive consideration.

With no disposition at this time to reflect upon the officials to whom, under the rules of your department, you have referred the petition, I cannot fail to remark that it must be as obvious to the untrained mind of the ordinary layman as to the perception of the most acute lawyer that your sole reliance upon such reference is reaching your decision furnishes to delinquent officials a fine opportunity to conceal their delinquencies and increases the difficulty of obtaining a just result.

The case of Mr. Charles C. Moore, of Lexington, Ky., has been cited to you—a case which was closed as tight as Mr. Harman's now is. It was speedily reopened by President McKinley as soon as the true story of it was told him by Senator Lindsay.

Would it not be well for you personally to put this matter in such light before President Roosevelt that he will see the propriety of directing a more unprejudiced and impartial report to him if he wants anything further? And would that course not be fairer and preferable every way than to rest the administration of justice upon my ability to find some person whose influence is as potent with Mr. Roosevelt as was Senator Lindsay's influence with Mr. McKinley? Very respectfully,

ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

Receiving no answer after waiting long enough to be sure that the pardon attorney was taking refuge in silence, I then wrote to "the man higher up":

HEATON HALL, STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., 22 July, 1906.

Dear Sir: So much is said officially nowadays about a "square deal" that it seems worth while to try to practicalize the idea in a case which has attracted considerable attention.

An application for the pardon of Mr. Moses Harman recently filed in the Department of Justice is defeated by certain rules of the department, formulated before your incumbency, which I respectfully submit you might very properly amend in accordance with the ideals of a "square deal."

The manifest effect of these rules is to make it possible for prejudiced, designing or misguided officials to make the decision which should be made by your department, and indeed to preclude any investigation by your department. This may be a labor-saving arrangement for your subordinates, but it is certainly not a "square deal."

If you will without bias look into the record and the papers filed with the application in the Harman case you will find not merely that Mr. Harman is innocent of the offense charged, but that the methods of the trial were reprehensible and such as the judge and prosecuting attorney have good reason to be ashamed of and to desire to cover up by such means of concealment as the rules of the department give them a chance to avail of.

I address you personally because I consider this matter one of paramount importance. Very respectfully,

ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

Hon. William H. Moody, Washington, D. C.

To which Mr. Moody responded as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL, WASHINGTON, D. C.,
84 STATE STREET, BOSTON, July 30.

Dear Sir: I have received your letter of the 22d instant concerning the application for pardon of Moses Harman. It is absolutely essential that the President should have some rules regulating the consideration of pardon cases, otherwise so much of his time would be taken up with them that he would have little left for his other work. As it is, this branch of the work of the Department of Justice receives my personal attention and all reports to the President are made by me and then receive his consideration. In this case, as the application of Harman, who was convicted of a violation of the postal laws, was adversely reported upon by both the judge and district attorney who tried the case, and who are in full possession of the facts, it would not, under the rules, be presented to the President for his consideration. The facts in this case as they have come to me are most unfavorable to the petitioner's application, but if you have any facts in your possession which you think would justify the exercise of executive clemency I should be glad to receive them and can assure you of the fullest consideration. Very truly yours, W. H. MOODY.

Mr. E. W. Chamberlain, Heaton Hall, Stockbridge, Mass.

To which I returned answer:

HEATON HALL, STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., 3 August, 1906.

Dear Sir: Acknowledging your courteous favor of 30 July and thanking you for your gratifying assurance of the fullest consideration of the case of Mr. Moses Harman, while bespeaking an open mind on your part, I respectfully submit:

That you cannot fail to have observed the force of first impressions, and doubtless you can recall cases in your own experience when the cry of "mad dog" has been thoughtlessly reiterated to the detriment of those not deserving condemnation.

The accusation of "obscenity" acts peculiarly as an exciting cause and stimulant of prejudice, and when fulminated against a poor man by a prosecution eager to acquire a character for purity in a court where the outside shell of appearances must be preserved, however withered the kernel, the situation is a dangerous one even to the most honest victim.

Unfortunately we have no such sturdy jurors nowadays as composed the jury which acquitted William Hone when the infamous Lord Ellenborough got out of a sickbed that he might more successfully than his associate judges manage the conviction of the parodist.

In my possession, as I write, is a letter from a prominent United States senator, not addressed to me, referring to his efforts in another case under § 3893, U. S. Rev. St., from which I quote: "The President, judging from what he stated to us, is opposed to granting executive clemency in cases of this kind."

If the President's mind is so constituted that the "kind of case" weighs more with him than the merits of the case it is possible that Mr. Harman may have to suffer for the President's prejudices, but Mr. Harman and his petitioning friends want to know that. It amounts to this, that if Mr. Harman were a thief or criminal malefactor his case might receive intelligent consideration, but being, as he is, a man of the highest integrity under an accusation which inspires prejudice the prejudice is allowed to prevail over all sense of right.

I have likewise a letter of Hon. Fred C. Stevens, M. C. (not addressed to me), in which he says "a gross injustice has been committed, which demands remedy by the President and a pardon for Mr. Harman."

It is difficult to condense within the limits of this letter my observations of this subject, extending over thirty years, but I enclose a copy of the paper which Mr. Harman publishes and I trust to the spirit of fairness which finds expression in your letter that you will read considerately the history of the Harman prosecution on page 522, under the title "Review of the Prosecutions in Kansas," and its continuation on page 527, entitled "Harman Case Reviewed by a New York Lawyer."

When you have read these the question may arise in your mind whether public purity and a respect for law and the administration of justice may best be promoted by enlarging Mr. Harman or by continuing him in confinement. I leave this question with you, and I shall feel bound to answer frankly any further questions you may wish to ask me.

The unfortunate title LUCIFER may have augmented the shock to the "average juror," but however that may be I maintain Mr. Harman's right to publish his paper and I ask you to maintain it, for, whatever the vagaries of the law, there is as yet no law in this country to compel anybody to subscribe for it or to read it. The subscribers of a paper are its best censors.

You refer to the unfavorable character of the report made upon this case by the judge and the district attorney. A rumor has reached me that the tenor of the reports made by these worthy gentlemen might be reversed if Mr. Harman would discontinue the publication of his paper. You might be interested to verify this rumor by judicious inquiry.

Feeling that this country is not yet prepared for the Russian form of censorship, and awaiting your pleasure, I remain, very respectfully, ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

To Hon. William H. Moody, 84 State Street, Boston, Mass.

Immediately after mailing the foregoing letter I received by mail a copy of the printed petition signed by Hon. E. H. Gillette, a member of the Forty-Sixth Congress, which I forwarded to Mr. Moody with the following letter:

HEATON HALL, STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., 5 August, 1906.

Dear Sir: Since writing you, the enclosed paper has come into my possession.

You may be told that no one is interested in the effort to relieve Mr. Moses Harman but those who pander to vice. I send you this paper not as a makeweight to my former letter, but as indicative of the standing of at least one petitioner. Other names of equally responsible persons will be found signed to the petition on file. Very respectfully, ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

To Hon. William H. Moody, 84 State Street, Boston, Mass.

Nothing transpiring as a result of my efforts, after waiting over three weeks I again wrote Mr. Moody.

HEATON HALL, STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., 29 August, 1906.

Dear Sir: I have your kind favor of 30 July last, relative to the application for pardon of Mr. Moses Harman, in which you say that "this branch of the work of the Department of Justice receives my personal attention," and in which you give me your assurance of "the fullest consideration."

In the tumult of business which presses upon you you may have delayed this full consideration, but it is inconceivable that an intelligent and unprejudiced examination of this case can result otherwise than in an understanding of the silly pretense and the wretched trickery by which Mr. Harman has been deprived of his liberty.

Your early attention may save a very worthy old man the continued torment of imprisonment and may to some extent restore a confidence in the administration of justice which has been badly shaken by the persistent persecution of Mr. Moses Harman. Very respectfully, ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

Hon. William H. Moody, 84 State Street, Boston, Mass.

Mr. Moody having apparently lapsed into silence in imitation of the example of the pardon attorney, I visited Boston about the middle of September and made several efforts to see him personally at his office. I never succeeded in finding him there, but I had a conversation with his confidential secretary which inspired my further action. It was upon this gentleman's suggestion that upon my arrival home I sent to Mr. Moody a new petition, accompanied with this letter:

10 WEST SIXTY-FIRST STREET, NEW YORK, 27 October, 1906.

Dear Sir: Relying upon the kindly assurance of your letter of 30th July, in which you say that such matters receive your personal attention and promise me the "fullest consideration" of such facts as I think would justify the exercise of executive clemency, I am sending you by this mail under separate cover a new petition for the pardon of Mr. Moses Harman.

While in Boston in September I made several efforts to see you at your office, without success. I did talk with your secretary there, and it is upon his suggestion that the petition comes to you in its present form.

I urge your early attention to this matter, as the relief sought may be unavailing if delayed. Very respectfully,

ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

Hon. William H. Moody, Attorney General, etc.

For purposes of conformity to the reasonable requirements of the Department of Justice I took the printed form of petition which the readers of LUCIFER are familiar with and annexed to it the following presentment:

To Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States.

I ask the pardon of Moses Harman for the following reasons:

FIRST. Because he is a man of such exalted moral character, such integrity of purpose and such sturdy devotion to principle that the attempt to stigmatize him as obscene recoils upon its instigators.

While a jury may be deceived into conviction by the trick of exciting their prejudice, a deliberate and unbiased judgment must recognize the purity of his act and motive.

I invoke an unprejudiced examination of the inculpated matter.

NOTHING TOO SACRED FOR SERIOUS DISCUSSION.

"Even if I disagreed entirely with the sentiment of LUCIFER and its editor, I should feel it a duty to stand up for the rights of free speech. But believing as I do, not only in the purity of thought and high purpose of Mr. Harman, but convinced of the shamefulness of the treatment accorded him, officially or otherwise, I shall be glad to have my protest recorded. There is nothing too sacred for serious discussion, and when questions relating to the sexes are treated with conviction and plain speech it is usually 'lewd fellows of the baser sort' who throw up their hands in holy horror. I shall be glad to receive and read the paper.

"WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.

"Lexington, Mass., Feb. 28, 1906."

SECONDLY. Because of the unfairness of the trial.

I annex clipping from Mr. Harman's paper, issue of May 24, 1906. The entire paper from which this clipping comes is already on file in the Department of Justice.

RIGHT OF PROTEST DENIED BY COURT.

"The record made up by the district attorney alleges that in imposing sentence upon Mr. Harman Judge Landis asked him if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon him. Mr. Harman denies this and says this little ceremony was omitted and that he was prepared to state very cogent reasons why he should not be sentenced.

"Mr. Harman being a man absolutely worthy of belief, the conclusion must be that the judge, fully conscious of the iniquity of the part he was playing, sought to avoid giving Mr. Harman any opportunity to justify himself. The sentence this time was a year's imprisonment in the state penitentiary at Joliet, Illinois.

"The record shows other things, foremost among which is the picture of a kindly old humanitarian eager to be courteous, even under the most aggravating circumstances, toward the prosecutor, who misrepresented and maligned him and tried to prejudice the jury with the notion that former convictions had some bearing upon the case then at bar.

"Even the judge, seemingly, tried to inspire the jury with the idea that 'a man of his [Mr. Harman's] years should know better'—just as if it were a foregone conclusion that Mr. Harman had done something wrong. It should be stated here that Mr. Harman was over 76 years old, and had reached a time of life when an attempt to attribute prurience to him is simply absurd.

FEATURES OF THE JUDGE'S CHARGE.

"Two features of the judge's charge in this case attract especial notice as indicating his animus.

"First: 'I charge you that you need not concern yourself in this case whether a time may come when a verdict of guilty here may result in the exclusion of the Holy Bible from the mail. The court will take care of that question when it arrives. Nor the exclusion of the works of Paine, Ingersoll or Shakespeare. These questions are not before this jury for determination.'

"The Bible, Paine, Ingersoll and Shakespeare were referred to by Mr. Harman's counsel, not to put any imputation upon these works, but to enlighten the jury as to what might and what might not properly be classified as obscene, and to show that the same plainness of speech which was the merit and glory of Mr. Harman's publications is to be found freely in our best literature and no one thinks evil of it, any more than they would of LUCIFER if their ignorant prejudices were not aroused by designing trickery.

AS TO THE QUESTION OF INTENT.

"Again: In one part of his charge the judge tells the jury that they 'have a right to consider the fact that this man has heretofore been convicted of the same offense—that is to say, of violating the same statute—in determining the question of intent'; while subsequently in his charge he says: 'I charge you as a matter of law that the motive of this defendant is not to be considered by you in determining whether or not the articles published in these papers are lewd,' etc.

"It has been iniquitously held in some similar cases that the jury may not consider the motive or intent of a defendant, and had Judge Landis given such instruction he might have excused himself on the ground that he was blindly following a bad precedent, but no judge, up to this case, so far as I am aware, has gone to the extent of charging the jury that they may consider intent adversely, but not favorably, to an accused. Such, however, is the clear implication from this charge.

"An appeal was taken, with as good results as might have been expected in early New England times in a case of witchcraft, and Mr. Harman is now in the state penitentiary at Joliet, Illinois."

THIRDLY. Because of the inherent wickedness of the law itself.

The statute is a dragnet embracing all kinds of offenses, from pandering to abortion down to petty violations of literary taste, and bringing all under one sweeping punishment.

The decisions under the law are confused and contradictory, depending more upon the character of the judge than upon the act of the accused.

Mr. Harman has given the history of the passage of this enactment in a leaflet entitled "Whither Are We Drifting?" which I inclose herewith.

FOURTHLY. Because of the viciousness and malignity of the prosecution.

The prosecution claims that Mr. Harman is defiant. Mr. Harman is standing upon the rights guaranteed him by the constitution, which rights the prosecution, in defiance of law, have distinctly violated.

Much dust is raised about former convictions. An epitome of the history of former convictions may be found in the copy of Mr. Harman's paper on file in the Department of Justice.

Upon one occasion a malicious judge sentenced Mr. Harman to five years' imprisonment. That judge died in middle life. Had he led as clean a life as Mr. Harman he might have been living today.

I understand that an offer to suppress further pardon was made to Mr. Harman, conditioned upon his discontinuing the publication of his paper. Such an offer is an affront to common honesty and should be promptly rebuked.

FIFTHLY. Because of the outrage he has been subjected to in prison.

He describes his treatment in a letter published in his paper, which I annex:

ANOTHER BRIEF GREETING FROM THE U. S. PRISONER.

"ON TRAIN, June 29, E. M. 306.

"After a lapse of four months and two days I find myself again on the Santa Fe train, in charge of the same deputy marshal that conducted me from LUCIFER's office to the state prison at Joliet, bound for the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan. I know not whether the change from state to national management will be an improvement or not, but am optimist enough to hope for better conditions at Leavenworth. And now that I am free for a few hours to write letters that will not have to pass the ordeal of a prison censor, I will try to tell the faithful friends who remembered the prisoner in bonds by writing to him or calling upon him, also those who may have sent him messages of cheer and hope over unseen wires, something of what I have experienced during the four months since my letter entitled 'Greeting and Farewell,' written under the same difficulties as now—the shaking of the train, added to the temptation to talk to my fellow passengers, several of whom have expressed much interest in my case.

"My main trouble has been the failure to get a cell to myself—except for five days—and the condition, body and mind, of the men with whom I was doomed to inhabit a stone cell 4 feet wide, 6½ feet high, and about 6½ feet long. These men are both physical wrecks and much of the time mentally deranged. The first is a Finlander, speaking very little English and reading still less. He is now in the hospital, slowly dying of tuberculosis. I was with him nine weeks. His cough was simply terrible to hear, so hard and so nearly incessant, especially at night. My bunk was less than two feet above his. I was not allowed to sleep with my head at the opposite end of the bunk, consequently was compelled to inhale the air thrown off from his lungs. This was only half the trouble. His consumption of tobacco was unusually constant, and his use of the night vessel to relieve a chronic dysentery—from three to six times per night—continued without intermission the whole of the nine weeks, to the best of my recollection. He was morose and misanthropic, often to the verge of downright insanity, repelling all advances towards friendship or civility on my part.

"The second cell-mate was different—a strong man in muscle, weighing 225 pounds, and yet a physical wreck—a tobacco fiend; 55 years old, but so shaky in his nerves that he could seldom thread a needle; a man who, when not under the influence of passion, could talk rationally, even positively, yet when the humor seized him was a very devil incarnate for unreasoning abuse, tongue-lashing or vituperation. Whatever I did or did not do was nearly always wrong. If I held my tongue and was silent, then I was accused of 'sulking'; and if I answered in any way, whatever I might say was met with a fresh outbreak on his part. He killed a man in Chicago last summer and was sentenced to ten years in Joliet; said he had no friends, either outside or inside the prison; had no money to buy even a tooth-brush or tooth-soap. Twice I supplied him with these articles—he lost the first brush and box of soap—at a cost of $1; gave him a pair of eye-glasses for which I had paid $1; gave him a picture of myself and grandchild, for which he had frequently asked and which he declared he must have, else he would kill himself or do some other desperate thing; and yet when I began to cough at night and disturb his rest he scored me unmercifully because I would not be guided by him in matters of hygiene, declaring that I 'knew too much' to keep myself well, that I was a d—ned old crank on the questions of diet, bathing, etc., and if I would have sense enough to listen to him I would not cough and disturb his sleep.

"Finally, after nine weeks of purgatorial life with my second cell-mate, I succeeded in getting a divorce from him and was given a cell to myself—just two days before the order came for my transfer to Leavenworth.

"From this hasty description of my two cell-mates I hope my readers will not infer that I am leaving Joliet with feelings of hatred or revenge in my heart for these two unfortunately organized men, and for the officers who shut me up with them in a living tomb, and who persistently turned a deaf ear to my requests for a separate cell or for a change of some sort. If I can now get rid of the harassing cough referred to in the last two paragraphs I shall freely forgive and try hard to forget whatever cause of revengeful feeling I may have suffered at Joliet. M. HARMAN."

Mr. Harman's daughter, commenting on the above, writes as follows:

"The information concerning the treatment received by my father at Joliet, and its effect on his health, will bring pain to his many friends. They may, perhaps, wonder why so little has been said concerning the situation while he was enduring it. I myself did not realize how bad it was until my last visit to him, two weeks before his removal to Leavenworth. He then told me that at the time he entered Joliet the deputy warden said to him: 'We have a place up on the hill here where we plant such fellows as you, and the sooner you go there the better.' At another time, when he was working on the rock pile and had, through exposure, contracted a bad cough, and asked the same man, who was passing, to allow him to go to the hospital to see the doctor, he was gruffly told that he ought to die. On each occasion that his friends asked that he be assigned to a cell alone, they were told that it had been ordered and would be given him—with the result as given in his letter. Nothing, seemingly, could avail for better treatment at Joliet, and we could only hope for the transfer, the order for which probably arrived only in time to save his life. No other commentary on the difference in treatment is necessary than the fact that the man who was required by the officials at Joliet to break stone for long hours every day, exposed to physical and mental strain both by day and night, is, by the officials at Leavenworth, recognized as in need of hospital nursing and care.

"It is difficult to fairly judge the motives of others, but I cannot avoid feeling that there was a positive determination to break his spirit, and, if not a desire to kill him, there was certainly no reasonable care taken that he should continue to live. And yet, while telling me of these things, he said, in commenting on the denial of the application for pardon, that he could not feel sorry that such had been the result. He would not and could not himself ask for release. He did not want liberty with an implied bond on the future. As long as he lives he will certainly publish LUCIFER, and if he dies it will be in furtherance of this life work. L. H."

Please bear in mind that all this is done under pretense of promoting "purity."

In lieu of further argument, I beg to submit the following pamphlets inclosed herewith:

"Administrative Process of the Postal Department. A Letter to the President." By Thaddeus Burr Wakeman.

"What Is Criminally Obscene?" By Theodore Schroeder, Esq.

"Liberty of Speech and Press Essential to Purity Propaganda." By Theodore Schroeder, Esq.

"Our Despotic Postal Censorship." By Louis F. Post.

"Our Advancing Postal Censorship." By Louis F. Post.

Respectfully submitted, EDWARD W. CHAMBERLAIN.

10 West Sixty-first Street, New York City, October 25, 1906.

No word coming from Washington for some days I supposed the attorney general had lapsed into silence and was therefore quite surprised to receive the following letter:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
WASHINGTON, D. C. November 14, 1906.

Sir: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 27 with its inclosures, concerning the application for pardon of Moses Harman.

I have examined the evidence in the case and considered the facts of the trial judge and district attorney. As both these officials recommended that the petition for pardon be not granted, the case, under the rules of the department, is not reported to the President, unless at his special request. I may add that there is nothing in the case which leads me to believe that I should disagree with the judge and the district attorney. Very respectfully,

W. H. MOODY, Attorney General.

Edward Chamberlain, Esq., 10 West Sixty-first Street, New York City.

10 WEST SIXTY-FIRST STREET,
NEW YORK, November 22, 1906.

Dear Sir: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of 14th instant and to thank you for the attention you have personally given the matter of Moses Harman. I believe it is more attention than is usually given "under the rules of the department" in the cases of many innocent victims of what has come to be known as the American Inquisition, and I want you to know that I am not unappreciative of such unusual favor. I only regret that I have not succeeded in opening your eyes to the real situation in this and similar cases.

You say you have considered the facts of the trial judge and district attorney. Had the representations of these gentlemen been communicated to me I might possibly have furnished some explanation or refutation of them. I cannot regard the concealment of these representations, under the rules of the department, otherwise than as a direct encouragement of official duplicity.

My action in this matter was taken without the knowledge or approval of Mr. Harman himself and solely with a view to a better appreciation of the so-called administration of justice. As Mr. Harman's term of imprisonment will soon expire, it seems useless to pursue the matter further.

The unfortunate condition remains unremedied that our courts, through popular prejudice and the uncertainty of the law, lend themselves to the purposes of self-constituted censors, whereby these latter are enabled to thrive on the contributions of the gullible and credulous under pretense that they are suppressing obscenity, regardless of the pain inflicted upon the innocent victims. It was this condition to which I sought to arouse your attention.

Again thanking you, I have the honor to be yours very respectfully, EDWARD W. CHAMBERLAIN.

Hon. William H. Moody, Attorney General U. S., Washington, D. C.

A VICTIM OF THE POSTAL INQUISITION.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR OF LUCIFER.

His crime was the admission into LUCIFER of a serious discussion of the marital relations of men and women.

One of the two articles on which prosecution was based was written in criticism of LUCIFER and was published because the editor believes that only through free expression of opinion is the truth to be reached.

The other article was written by an elderly woman, a mother of several children—a grandmother as well—in advocacy of self-control by men and women.

Address personal letters to Moses Harman, 5326, Box 7, Leavenworth, Kan. Purely private subjects should be avoided, as all letters are read by prison officials and withheld if not approved. Do not ask questions requiring answer. All such questions, matter pertaining to LUCIFER, changes of addresses, etc., should be sent to the office, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

THE HOME-COMING OF MOSES HARMAN.

On the afternoon of January 1, in Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, the friends of Free Speech and Free Press will tender a reception to the editor of LUCIFER. Names of speakers and further details will be given in our next issue.

EXPLICIT.

Answering your implied question, which follows my "Crammers of Furnaces," in No. 1079 of LUCIFER: In writing that article, I did not depend in any degree upon the newspaper reports, most of which I had not read. My strictures and affirmations were called out by and rested upon facts and considerations not affected by the accuracy or exaggeration, the truth or falsity, of the dailies' accounts of local happenings. The facts just mentioned included the Saturday anniversary meeting and the memorial issue of Mother Earth, these two then current facts determining the time of the appearance of my paper. EDWIN C. WALKER.

The trustees of the public library of Worcester, Mass., have discovered that the book "Eve's Diary," by Mark Twain, is obscene and unfit for general circulation. The board of trustees of the Worcester library is composed of the town clerk, an undertaker and a Congregational minister.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year	$1.00	Three months	25 cents
Six months	50 cents	Single copies	5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR.

U. S. P. (HOSPITAL), LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Nov. 25, 1906.

My Dear Daughter: Three letters from you since my last writing day. Thanks. All the papers came except Examiner. I did not see that. From George Bedborough, London, I have received three more beautiful and interesting booklets: "Best 100 Love Poems in the English Language"; "Pippa Passes," drama by Browning; "Adonais," poem by Shelley. Also New Age, magazine, Edinburgh, Scotland. A roll of very interesting clippings from London papers, sent by A. Wastall, South Africa, showing how the political and ethical questions are waxing hot among British reformers. From C. Amory Stevens, New York, came marked copies of New York World and American, wherein "eugenics" is discussed in a way indicating great interest in that hitherto tabooed subject. Please write to the Evening Telegram, Portland, Ore., and ask for a copy of that paper dated November 9, and thank the editor for publishing and Eleanor F. Baldwin for writing the article, "The Woman's Point of View." Write also to the editor of Newspaperdom, 150 Nassau street, New York, and ask him for a copy of his paper containing references to the case of U. S. prisoner 5326. Send stamps for these papers, please.

Sent package of letters five days ago. Please glance through them and use, if you think fit. Am glad Brand's Hall has been secured for New Year's day. Hope I shall be able to be there. Am not feeling as strong as I should like—my old troubles, cardiac and gastric—but if I am no worse off than now when turned out of the prison, one month from tomorrow, I think I will go straight to Chicago, except a short stop at Leavenworth and Kansas City. Don't know whether I can get a "stop-over" ticket to Chicago. Will find out in time to let you know.

November 11 P. H. Sercombe, editor of Tomorrow, wrote me thus: "While we all feel like making considerable preparation for your home-coming to Chicago, Lillian and others of your friends are no doubt correct that, in the interest of your general health, and in order to escape coming here in the most trying part of the winter, it is best for all of us to urge you to make the California trip first and get back here in the spring." As you say nothing of this plan in your later letters I take it you have changed your view, and think I had better come to Chicago first. What do you hear from our friends in California?

Mrs. Chandler wrote me an interesting account of the National Purity Convention in Chicago, some weeks ago, mentioning the lecture of Catherine W. McCullough on "Motherhood"; also Mr. Schroeder's speech on suppression of knowledge, etc. Am glad to see those subjects introduced into many papers. The Toledo News-Bee, November 21, gives account of lectures in that city by Mrs. Mary E. Teats, representing the National Purity League, in which she says: "There is no subject in all the realm of thought more important than that of parentage, and there is more effort put forth today in the interest of the child that is to be than ever before. . . . A subjected motherhood can never give to the world the best in child life. The mother must be free in every sense of the word. She should therefore have the right to franchise, in order to help the man of the household to protect their children."

Mrs. Chandler says the "Spiritualist Association has communicated with all liberal bodies (or not evangelical) on the proposition to have a fraternal league of all, secular and religious. All were in favor except Christian Scientists. The spirit of unity seems increasing rapidly." I rejoice to hear of this movement, and while it would have been pleasant to know that the Christian Scientists had met the proposition in a spirit of liberality and fraternity, there is nothing unexpected in their refusal. I attended, by invitation, three or four of their meetings, and was told by one of their leaders, in so many words, "We do the teaching, you do the learning." As between the Eddy cult and that of John Calvin and Cotton Mather, I certainly prefer the former; but if I know the meaning of the word bigotry, then, for genuine, unadulterated, simon-pure bigotry in "original packages," the Eddyites "take the cake." Perhaps the Roman Catholics, of the "Daddy" Lambert section (never say "sect" to Roman Catholics!), might divide honors with the Eddyites in this regard. I heard Lambert deliver a course of five lectures some years ago, and have read many of their publications, therefore am not wholly ignorant of what the "Mother Church" teaches. "Let each be fully persuaded in his own mind." "Charity for all, malice towards none."

Speaking of the suffrage movement, am glad to hear, by letter from R. B. Kerr, that the agitation in England goes bravely on—bravely, if the invasion of the "parliament house" by the "suffragettes" can be taken as a sample. Without assuming to dictate, however, I would modestly suggest that instead of storming the masculine parliament house the British suffragettes would better, as I think, build a little parliament house of their own, then proceed to pass laws for the feminine half of the population, elect their executive officers, carry on their government to suit themselves, and go to jail rather than support in any way the rule of Edward the Seventh, his cabinet, his lords or his commons.

Of letters and cards received since last writing day, not yet mentioned, I thankfully acknowledge: C. Amory Stevens, 1; Bolton Hall, 1; Philip G. Peabody (picture cards with brief message), 9; Elizabeth Breese, 1; Abert Wickman, 1; C. N. Greene, 1; J. T. Small, 1; George B. Wheeler, 1; Ada M. Morley, 2; Emma Greene, 1; Harrison D. Barrett, 1; "Myra," 1; J. A. Evans, 1; D. Legelke, England, 1; A. J. Merskergaard, 1; "Frank," 1; Annie E. K. Parkhurst, 2; J. E. Boultenhouse, 3; Walter Broen, 1; Nancy McKay Gordon (with book on "Psychology of Finance"), 1; Katharine S. Fry, 1; A. Wastall, South Africa, 2. If any have been omitted the writers will please let me know.

Reading matter accumulates faster than I can properly attend to it—of course I don't mean letters and cards; of which I never have too much, no matter how long or how frequent; I mean papers and magazines; but the patients in hospital and convicts in the cellhouses are always glad to get them. Have done more reading in the five months just past than ever before in my life, as I think, in the same length of time. You will think I must have abused by eyes, knowing how much trouble I have had with them in the past ten or more years. I have tried to be careful with them—have rested them by frequent bathings, hot and cold; also by using glasses of differing magnifying power. Of library books, have generally been fortunate in getting those with large print. A few, however, were not. Among these is "Les Miserables," which, in solid type and medium size print, was hard on my eyes. I had never read the book through before and decided that now is the time to do it. A most wonderful production of a wonderful man. Another book hard to read, but well worth the reading, was "Narrative of Discovery and Adventure in Africa," especially that part of it giving an account of the two journeys of exploration by Mungo Park, a Scotchman in the employ of a British geographical society. The first journey was made alone, on foot and sometimes on horseback, most of the time unarmed and without provisions or money. Often robbed by the Moors or Mohammedans, and often very narrowly escaping with his life, he was generally well treated by the negroes. Once, when in the suburbs of a large city, Sego, on the Niger river, when all doors were closed against him, and when he was preparing to spend the night in the branches of a tree, because of danger from wild beasts, he was invited to her hut by an old negro woman, who gave him a good supper of fish and a pallet on which to sleep. Quoting the narrative:

"She then desired her maidens, who had been gazing in fixed astonishment at a white man, to resume their tasks, which they continued to ply through a great part of the night. They cheered their labors with a song which must have been composed ex tempore, since Mr. Park, with deep emotion, discovered that he himself was the subject of it. It said in a strain of affecting simplicity: 'The winds roared and the rains fell. The poor white man, faint and weary, came and sat under our tree. He has no mother to bring him milk, no wife to grind his corn. Chorus: Let us pity the white man; no mother has he to bring him milk, no wife to grind his corn.'"

I read this story when a small boy, and when, many years afterward, I heard the stentorian voices of fifty or a hundred negro slaves on a southern plantation singing their extemporized "corn songs" around a monstrous pile of unshucked corn, I was reminded of Mungo Park's experience, fifty or more years before, in central Africa.

The compiler of the many narratives given in this book says: "The negro character appears to be distinguished by some features usually amiable, by a peculiar warmth of the social affection and by a close adherence to kindred ties. If some travelers have been ill-treated and plundered, others have been relieved with the most signal and generous hospitality."

Park was gone two years on his first journey and was given up as dead. His story of what he had found only whetted the appetites of his employers for more extended knowledge of the great unknown interior of the "Dark Continent," so they sent the explorer back; this time with a company of soldiers, well-armed and provisioned. But, as might have been expected, the simple-mannered and naturally kind-hearted natives did not like the sight of soldiers and fire-arms. They had good reason to suspect that the object of the expedition was not peace and good will, but war and robbery. Speaking of the way in which the peaceful and unoffending negroes had been treated from time immemorial, the compiler of these stories of exploration says: "Troops surrounded a town in the dead of night, watching till the first dawn, when the gates are opened—then they rush in, set fire to it, and while the victims, with shrieks and cries, are seeking to escape, bind and carry them off into slavery."

No wonder Mungo Park found it impossible to convince people who had had warnings without number such as just described, that his intentions were peaceful. The upshot of his expedition was that, at a narrow pass of the river on which he and his few remaining companions were floating in a boat, they were assailed by volleys of stones, clubs and spears and all killed but one, and that sole survivor was not Mungo Park.

Reading these stories of the character and history, so far as known, of the negroes in their native land—as well as in the land to which they were taken by cruel kidnapers, and sold into slavery for life, and their children after them—I cannot help asking who it is that is chiefly to blame for the "race war" that now threatens to desolate the southern third of the United States of America. Park's account of the inoffensive, peaceful and moral character of the negroes of central Africa is corroborated by the experience and observation of Mrs. French-Sheldon in her book, "From Sultan to Sultan." This writer testifies that during her stay of some months with these naked natives she never heard of a case of sexual outrage, and that crimes of all kinds were rare, as compared with lands called civilized and enlightened.

Time up and sheets full. With love to all, yours hopefully,

M. HARMAN.

A VISIT TO THE EDITOR.

[The following account of a visit to the editor of LUCIFER was written by Mrs. Maude P. Haseltine, of Kansas City, to her mother.]

My Dear Mamma: A party of three—Elbert Hubbard, Ralph Wylie (a violinist and the local manager of Hubbard's lecture here), and I—went to Leavenworth on the early afternoon train. The prison is about two miles from the depot. It was a fine day. The prison is about two miles from the depot. It was a fine day, so we walked both ways. I took a small basket of different kinds of fruit. Elbert Hubbard knows Major McClaughry, who is at the head of the prison, and had expected to see him, but he was up in Iowa, so we had to wait outside the gate by the little round house of the chief sentry while he telephoned in to the main building about admitting us. While we waited Hubbard and I had a good talk, while Wylie was trying to talk to the rather uncommunicative but very civilly disposed guard. A number of trusties were hauling loads of dirt, and one load was of the refuse leaves of cabbages. This load stopped immediately in front of the sentry and the driver took a bayonet and jabbed over and over again through the pile to the bottom of the wagon. Hubbard explained it was to show to the sentry that no man was in hiding beneath the cabbage.

In about twenty minutes we were admitted. Two young prisoners with good-looking, boyish faces unlocked the first gate and two others the second gate. We went to an officer's parlor, and they took the basket of fruit to have it examined and sent a guard with us to show us the place. Hubbard said we wanted to see Harman, so the officer detailed a man to tell Harman to come down from the hospital to the visitors' room to meet us. We were surprised at the roominess, the extreme cleanliness and beauty of a certain kind of the entire prison. The rooms are large, ceilings lofty, fresh air everywhere, and not a particle of dirt to be detected, even by my eye. Floors that look like tiling—mosaic—but we were told they are of a rubber-like substance, to deaden sound. One element of their composition is sea-water. The more the floor is used the smoother and better it becomes—much as a real oriental rug improves with age and use. I never so fully realized how much horror was done away with when they abolished the prison stripes. The men are dressed in blue suits, the only mark of prisondom visible being the number sewed on one trouser leg in front just below where the jacket comes. The dining-room has walls of marble one-third of the way up. The room looked like a large schoolroom, as the arrangement for eating seemed to be like school desks and seats—one for each person. There were perhaps forty men in this room, standing in military fashion by the seats as we went through. In the kitchen were immense cooking vessels with shining copper tops. One man was washing the already clean floor. A young Chinese prisoner was cleaning a large enameled kitchen sink. Another room held trays upon trays of loaves of bread, and we saw different lots of provisions, all prepared in cleanly fashion. Then we went through a long corridor-like room, all divided into little places like a stateroom on the Lake Michigan steamers I have used. There are two narrow beds or berths, one above the other, in each room, and I noticed the sheets and pillow-cases were clean. Each bed was made up "exactly so," and on the top of almost every bed was placed, in methodically, painfully neat fashion, a comb, toothbrush, mug, some carefully placed photographs (sometimes a pretty-faced girl or a baby, or of elderly men and women), and generally a book or two, and sometimes two red apples. The guards said the apples were given them at meal times (dinner) and they were allowed to put them in their sleeping-rooms to eat in the evening if they wanted to. Hubbard picked up one book from a bed; it was Froissart's tales. Another was a history; on one colored boy's bed was a dictionary. There was excellent plumbing and sanitary arrangement—a wash basin and faucets, and a closet seat, which the guard flushed to show us it was in good order. The cleanliness of everything is of the hospital order—absolute.

We could have looked about still more, but we thought Harman might be waiting, so we went to the visitors' room. I have a vivid picture in my mind of the eager, bright eyes and majestic gray head of Harman as he sat with his crutch on the long seat. I wish you could have seen the greeting of the two, Hubbard and Harman. They hugged each other, and if they had been women they would have cried. Hubbard bent down his head and said: "Look, brother; I'm almost bald, and your hair is thick as ever," running his hand through Harman's bushy mane. Harman remembered me, and was introduced to Wylie. Then we three sat down on one side of a long mahogany table, Harman on the other side, and a guard at one end. Then how Hubbard and Harman did talk! Maybe I didn't chuckle inwardly to watch the change from a look of boredom on the guard's face to one of mystification, then slightly veiled interest, then hardly veiled admiration apparent in his looks at both Harman and Hubbard. Hubbard told Harman of talking in Chicago with Alice Stockham and his saying to her that she ought to be here (prison) too. Of course Harman saw how Hubbard meant it, yet he said, "No, no; it is better as it is."

Hubbard told him he and Alice (Hubbard) want him to come and spend a week at East Aurora as he (Harman) takes the trip he is planning to make to New York. Hubbard also asked him if he shouldn't leave some money with him for expenses going home in December, but Harman refused it, thanking him for the thought. The guard said that the authorities there pay the train fare of those whose time is up. Then I said to Harman that you and I expected him here, and the question came up if the railroad will allow a stop-over. So then and there Hubbard made plans which I promised I would carry out. That is, that you and I go to Leavenworth the night before, so as to be able to meet Harman at the gate early on the morning of the 26th. When we reach Kansas City we shall find out at the depot if there is a stop-over allowed. If there is, well and good. If there is not, we will get him a sleeper ticket on a Pullman, so he may have a comfortable journey to Chicago. And Hubbard said he would be looking for a letter from me about December 28 or 29, saying we had done so.

I was glad to find they were still keeping Harman in the hospital. Still, to me he looked in better health by far than when he was here that evening three years ago last month.

We talked, I should judge, about a half-hour; then we left, with Harman accompanying us down the corridor as far as another room, where they notified him the basket of fruit was ready for him. As we went down the steps the young guard who sat at the table during our visit asked Hubbard: "Are you the editor of the Philistine?" "Yes," said Hubbard. "I read them," said the guard, "but haven't had them steadily."

It was about five o'clock. We walked to the town, where I boarded a street car for home. Hubbard and Wylie went to a hotel, for Hubbard was to lecture in Leavenworth that evening.

As you may know, it was a great day—one I shall always remember. A day such as that seems to be a fruitage of the many preceding days where "nothing happens." Occasionally there comes a birthday that proves there has been a useful foreground, a necessary period of gestation or growth that we had not thought held any promise of significance. Nicht wahr? Write and tell me that of course you will be here to do as we have planned. I wrote immediately to Lillian Harman, telling her a little of our visit—indeed, Hubbard asked me to do so—and I told her you would send her this letter, so she might know a little more about it in detail.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

Adam's Diary.

BY MARK TWAIN.

The only fault to be found with Mark Twain's new book, "Extracts from Adam's Diary," is that there is not more of it, both pictures and print. It is Adam's daily record of his life from the time he found the "new creature with the long hair," which was a good deal in the way and which he wished would stay with the other animals, to the time he finally found that he could not be happy without it, and found that it was better to live outside of the garden with her than inside it without her. The story is very briefly told—too briefly—but every line sparkles with wit. The pictures, one to each page of text, are by F. Strothmann. Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Eve's Diary.

BY MARK TWAIN.

This is a companion volume to "Extracts from Adam's Diary," which thousands have laughed over. It purports to be a "translation from the original," and tells of Eve's experiences in the Garden of Eden and afterwards. It is a delightful whimsical satire, written in the veteran fun-maker's broadest style. There is much to be amused at in Eve's naïve observations and in her many experiments in natural science and psychology. Altogether, "Eve's Diary" is one of the cleverest and most amusing of Mark Twain's many absurdities.

With 55 full page Illustrations by Lester Ralph. Crown 8vo. Cloth, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Haeckel's Last Word on Evolution.

BY ERNEST HAECKEL, OF JENA UNIVERSITY.

A popular retrospect and summary. Translated from the second edition by Joseph McCabe. With three plates and Haeckel's latest portrait. Price, $2.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Jungle.

THE BOOK OF THE HOUR.

BY UPTON SINCLAIR.

A somber and terrible picture of life in the Chicago stock yards from the point of view of the workingman. It shows the conditions that turn the hero into a criminal and a tramp. There are startling revelations concerning methods in the meat-packing industry, and glimpses of all Chicago's under-world of crime and "graft." The story is hailed as "the greatest novel published in America in fifty years."

"It is one of the most powerful and terrible stories ever written."—Robert Hunter, Author of "Poverty."

12 mo, cloth, 413 pages, $1.50, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Who Is the Enemy: Anthony Comstock or You?

BY E. C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.

THE "MORAL" CENSORSHIP—The Inspiration of the Censor; A "Protection" that Betrays; Utter Lack of Discrimination; Vain Denial of Facts; A Greater Wrong to the Child; Some Officers' Zeal; Imagined "Plots"; The Law as Administered; The Vicious Law of Obscene Libel; Obscene Libel and Expert Testimony; Judge and Jury and "the Facts"; Some Criticisms Answered; The Common Law Yesterday and Today; Wrong Principles of Action; The Censorship and the Bible; Moncure D. Conway on Censors; Where Lies Responsibility—on Censor or You? The Cause of Slow Advance; Sex a Mistake—"Somebody Blundered"; Superstition Not Seriously Crippled; The Worship of Death and Decay; Characteristic Eruptions of Sex Panic.

THE "FRAUD ORDER" FRAUD—Remarkable Deliverance by Judge Thomas; The Courts and the Constitution; The Persecution of "Freedom"; Grateful for Injuries Received.

THE CENSORSHIP OF SECOND-CLASS MATTER—The Department's Rules of Exclusion; Statistics of Official Financiering; Two Arguments About Government Socialism.

Price, 20 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Coming of Age.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation. American edition, cloth, prepaid, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 25 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,

52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
13 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST,
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1080

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number as date.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK.

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment.—If it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes, but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think: Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

POEMS OF VARIED FEELING.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

The author is well known to the readers of LUCIFER, many of the poems in this volume having made their first appearance in our columns. The title well expresses the character of the work; the verses breathe of life and liberty and love; the charms of the seasons and the beauties of nature. The spirit of revolution, too, is voiced in "Liberty and the Commune," "In the Hour of Execution," "Von Flotow Dead," and other poems. "To the Enemies of Free Speech"; "The Challenge of Liberty"; "A Ballade of Butterflies"; "The Bolstering Knights"; "Father Damien"; "Four Loves"; "Death in Life"; "Looking on the Sierras"; "Mother-Heart," are a few titles taken at random, showing the varied scope of the work.

12 mo, cloth; gilt title; 160 pages; $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tone. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses.

Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00
POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,
For the Supreme and Supersocial and The New Civilization,
2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, DECEMBER 20, E. M. 306 [C. E. 1906]. WHOLE NO. 1081

RECEPTION FOR MOSES HARMAN.

Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, will terminate his educational engagement for the United States government in the penitentiary on Christmas eve. During the few months that he has been in the Leavenworth prison, since his transfer from Joliet, Ill., he has become so well liked by the prison guards, as well as by the other prisoners with whom he has come in contact, that their feeling of gladness that he is to be released so soon from what most of them are convinced is an unjust imprisonment will be strongly affected by regret to lose his genial and refining presence.

Even within prison walls Moses Harman has been what he has continually tried to make his paper—a Light Bearer. Many testimonials which LUCIFER is not at liberty to publish have been received concerning the influence for good which Moses Harman has had on the other prisoners. His evident purity of mind, his undaunted optimism, his broad tolerance of even the views of his persecutors, have endeared him to the prison guards, most of whom have come to look on him as an honored guest instead of a criminal.

These men, who have had the care of criminals for years, can see clearly what Judge Landis and the jurors who convicted Moses Harman could not see—that he is not a criminal, but is a noble, high-minded humanitarian, who has been cast into prison by the ignorant because of his efforts in behalf of a better humanity.

A reception in honor of this grand old pioneer in the field of eugenics will be held at 2 o'clock on New Year's day in Drill Hall, seventeenth floor, Masonic Temple, Chicago.

Among those who have consented to be present and make addresses of welcome to the released prisoner are two clergymen who count it an honor to testify in public they are in accord with Moses Harman in his contention that every child has the right to be born well and in his further contention for the right to discuss on the platform and in his paper the vital importance of eugenics—the science of good birth.

One of these clergymen is the Rev. Walter Henry MacPherson, pastor of People's Church, South Chicago.

The other is the Rev. J. M. A. Spence, pastor of People's Church, Aurora, Ill., which has the largest congregation of any non-Catholic church in that city.

Other liberal-minded clergymen have been invited and some of them may accept later.

Woman's side of this all-important question—for, after all, it is preëminently a woman's question, inasmuch as it is a contention that woman alone should have the right to determine when and under what conditions she shall bear children—will be presented at the reception by Dr. Alice B. Stockham, the noted author of "Tokology" and other works on sexual hygiene which have won for her the love and gratitude of many thousands of women in all parts of the civilized world.

Mrs. Gertrude Breshu Hunt, one of the most noted of the women advocates of Socialism in America, will also speak.

Other speakers of prominence have been invited and the names of those who accept will be announced later.

All persons interested in the cause of free speech should attend this reception if they live in Chicago or can be here on New Year's day. They will then have an opportunity to hear from Moses Harman's own lips what Judge Landis in the United States District Court refused him the right to utter—his reasons why he should not have been declared guilty of sending "obscene" matter through the mails.

HERMAN KUEHN,
S. T. HAMMERSMARK,
J. M. CRANE,
Committee.

Friends desiring to assist in the distribution of announcement cards, or in any other way, may address S. T. Hammersmark, 2867 Southport avenue, Chicago.

CHRISTMAS FROM TWO ANGLES.

The inimitable Mr. Dooley, descanting on the subject of the Christmas spirit, pictures the whole world in a clinch for three hundred and sixty-four days of the year. "A gran' rasslin'match is goin' on in ivry corner iv th' sivylyzed globe," he says, "and we're all in a tangle, fightin', quarrelin', robbin', plundhrin', or murdhrin', accordin' to our tastes." It's "what Hogan calls th' struggle f'r existence," he explains, and "it'll always go on while there's a dollar in the wurruld, a woman, or a ribbon to wear in our coats." But on the three hundred and sixty-fifth day, says Mr. Dooley, "suddenly we hear a voice: 'Gintlemen, gintlemen, not befure th' childher.' An' we get up an' brush th' dust off our clothes an' shake hands, pretindin' it was all fun. Th' kids have come in." Thus, with brogue and optimism, is "the children's season" painted for us in the December American Magazine. Turning to the Cosmopolitan of the same month we are confronted with another aspect of the Christmas season in its relation to childhood. Mr. Edwin Markham tells us of a "grind behind the holidays" to which few of us, probably, have hitherto given a thought—a grind which exacts toll from tired little hands and unsatisfied young lives. We read:

"Greed and Gain, grim guardians of the great god Mammon, continually cry in the ears of the poor, 'Give us your little ones!' And forever do the poor push out their little ones at the imperious ukase, feeding the children to a blind hunger that is never filled. And the spell of material things is so heavy on the hearts of all of us that scarce a protest goes up against this betrayal of youth, this sacrifice of the children in factory, store and shop. . . .

"And at Christmas time—'the children's time,' as we call it in our soft rhetoric—the march of this army of little workers is heaviest; it is then that the feet falter most wearily. You cannot, in any city, at any season, go upon the streets too early nor too late to miss the tired recruits of this children's army. Between 7 and 8 in the morning, and between 6 and 7 in the evening, you see them spiralling the ways of traffic, flying to or from their work. But at Christmas time this army of little conscripts suddenly increases. On the streets; in halls and elevators; in offices, stores and cellars; in workshops and factories—in almost every industry we have built for luxury or utility, thousands of little feet and hands and brains are there to serve and suffer.

"It is, however, in the box, the confectionery, and a few other factories that the masses of the children throng. It is in these that the hours are longest, the drive hardest, and the pay scantiest. Nowhere else is there a harder fate for the little holiday workers, save only among the bundle-packers, the cash-girls, and the delivery-boys in the large retail stores.

"A thing so dainty and delicate as confectionery we are slow to associate with drudgery and weariness. The lucent, glistening piles of the Christmas shops, little delectable mountains flavored with every hiving from Attica to San Diego, and tinted and scented with the cheerful May time—all this ambrosial stuff might seem to have come, like flower and fruit and comb, out of the ever-springing joy of nature. Yet this trade, which employs more people than milling, canning, or meat-packing, is one of the industries in which little children are found to be most efficient and desirable. The candy factory of the cheaper grade is a place swarming with little ones, especially girls. It is a place where children are worked cruelly long hours to fill orders; where the work is murderously monotonous; where health and character are broken down.

"Three months before Christmas the smaller confectionery establishments call in troops of little children and begin full work and overtime work, making ready for this brave pomp of the holidays. There must be preparation for the bulging paper sack and the swollen tarlatan bag of the Christmas tree, for the bottle of striated sticks, and the pudgy 'sucker' with its noble lasting quality. Tons upon tons of candy must be prepared for the holiday markets. What irony of civilization is this—one band of children wasting their bodies and souls to make a little joy for the rest! What sardonic mind conceived this caricature of justice, this burlesque of life? . . .

"In the East Side box factories the children, in the Christmas season, begin their work at 7:30 and keep it up till 9 at night, Sundays included. From 7:30 to 9 at night! Reader, do you take into your heart how long these hours are for little fingers and little feet? But how are these tired workers kept at the wheels? You will not believe me when I tell you that the factory doors are locked to keep the little wage-slaves at their tasks till the factory pasha is satisfied with his day's profits. Louis Shrednick, who has worked for years in these American dungeons, says that, in 'rush' seasons, 'the children are locked in so they shall not go home till the master's work is done.' The secretary of the Hebrew Trades confirms this astounding statement. Here is impressment of American citizens! Here is the outrage that in 1812 we thought it worth while to go to war about! What is 1907 going to do about it?"

"FREE EXCLUSIVE MONOGAMY."

Dear Gladys: We both agree that "free love" should mean love free from commercial considerations and from coercion of any kind.

You prefer to call your ideal of love "free love," instead of "varietism." But since you are opposed to "exclusiveness," your ideal must be either loving more than one at a time, or loving one for a limited time, and this is varietism, as distinguished from monogamy for life. Giving your ideal a nice name does not alter the real facts, and it is these facts which we must discuss, not the names.

On the other hand, exclusiveness does not mean unconditional marriage for life for all who marry. It means only that normal beings in the majority of cases, and that the overwhelming majority, adopt this principle and live according to it. This does not prevent abnormally mated couples from separating, and is not meant to prevent them from separating and finding a suitable mate. But I do not speak of exceptions when discussing a general subject. I speak of the rule.

So long as your article is meant to be merely an expression of your individual opinion and feelings, it is your affair. But if it is supposed to be a general discussion of the subject, it lacks the main thing—namely, general facts gathered by mass observation.

You speak of exclusiveness in love as "a selfish love scheme." There you fail to recognize that it is not a scheme, but a growth. You will see presently what I mean by this.

You have, no doubt, studied some works on the history of the family. Did you not observe in them that sex relations have become more and more exclusive? Exclusive sex love as an ideal is a very modern product, and as a practical fact it has not yet found the conditions required for its general practice. It is indeed true, as you say, that exclusiveness in love is not practiced by the majority today. This is due simply to the social conditions in which men and women must live under the present system, and to hereditary qualities which struggle for survival.

You want to know what is practicable today. You do not care for things that may happen in two or three generations from now. Well, what is practicable?

Men's and women's economic position, their work and interests, are different in many respects and conflict at many points. So long as social conditions remain as they are, so long as men and women cannot become acquainted on terms of economic equality and enjoy plenty of time to get acquainted, just so long will the great majority fail to mate with fitting comrades. Then the flower of lasting love cannot grow, and exclusiveness in love will not be a happy and healthy thing for the ill-mated.

Will "varietism," or, as you prefer to call it, "free love," be any improvement on this state of things, always discussing for the moment what is practicable today?

Let us give a minute's thought to the "starving hearts" of whom you speak so feelingly.

Have you never realized how dangerous it is for working people with unstable and uncertain prospects of existence to practice your free love? Have you never noticed that it does not mean love, but misery and want for them? So long as women are not in a position to support themselves—and very few are—they must be supported by the men to whom they surrender. Does experience show that the great majority of men faithfully support the women who surrender to them outside of marriage? On the contrary, it shows that very few men remain faithful to their love and very few indeed support their sweethearts loyally to the end. This is surely little comfort for the starving hearts.

And what about the little ones? You know very well how hard it is for a woman under the present system to support herself. If she has to provide for one or more children, life becomes an unbearable burden. The little ones are not cared for properly, are not loved, and the little minds are starved and stunted, their feelings trampled upon, their hearts starved. There you will find some starving hearts, where you did not think of them.

Have you ever thought of the blighting effect of scorn and ostracism which such a mother and such children have to bear all their lives?

Furthermore, we live in a society in which some are adherents of true monogamy and others of varietism. If a male varietist takes a fancy to the wife of a true monogamist, or a female varietist takes a fancy to the husband of a woman who believes in true monogamy, somebody's heart will have to starve. If the varietist accomplishes his or her purpose, the true monogamist will suffer. Otherwise the varietist may be disappointed, but since a varietist quickly finds others to console him or her there will be little harm done to their hearts. But the true monogamist whose mate is led astray is a sufferer for life and cannot find any compensation. Did you think of these starving hearts?

Let me pause at this point and call your attention to a few other facts. In the first place, I am not arguing either for or against varietism or exclusiveness as though these things were matters of choice which every one might select at will. You argue as though one might just as soon be the one as the other. In the same way the utopian reformers offer their schemes to everybody and think that they have but to call upon all people to adopt their scheme and everything will be lovely. That is not the way in which things are changed in this world. I do not adopt this attitude. I do not advocate any scheme. I study the historical process, its past, its present, and its tendencies. And from this point of view alone am I of the opinion that exclusiveness will gradually prevail.

People are not varietists or exclusive monogamists from free choice. They have indeed some choice, but it is practically predetermined for them by heredity and environment. They think about these things and make their choice, but this internal and external activity is determined by historical necessities over which no one individual has control. Consequently some find varietism practicable, others exclusive monogamy. But what results from this play of forces?

If I were only thinking of what is practicable today I should warn young girls against varietism for the additional reason that under the present system over one-half of society is sexually diseased. The short acquaintance and easy familiarity and intimacy of varietists are among the greatest of disseminators of venereal diseases. Of course, venereal diseases also occur among true monogamists, but the percentage is vastly on the side of the varietists, and they are the active source of these diseases. And if I were asked why I hold that exclusive monogamy will gradually prevail as the rule I should mention among the principal reasons that the varietists propagate more diseased children, care less for them, and lose more by death. The few statistical figures gathered among small communistic colonies, which are often quoted as a proof to the contrary, prove no more against the general rule in capitalist society than these colonies themselves prove as economic experiments. The varietists breed a declining line of human beings, while the exclusive people have greater chances of breeding strong and uncontaminated children, care better for them and breed a rising line of beings.

You see from this one illustration alone that even the consideration of what is practicable today leads us on beyond today and into the future. And in considering what is practicable we as thinking beings must consider the future and those whom we compel by our actions to come into the world and live in the future.

For this reason women should be very careful what they say and do in this matter. It is not only a question of satisfying the hunger of their "starving hearts" but also of satisfying the hunger of the starving stomachs and hearts which they produce, of the minds which they should mold, of the race that will live when they are gone. And with this in view the question of what is practicable today assumes a very serious and momentous aspect.

What is practicable today? It is practicable to stop a moment and to consider whether it is not very impracticable to follow one's impulses regardless of the consequence to others, especially to those that will be after us through our actions. It is practicable to study history and try to find the general tendency in which sex relations have developed and what they have produced as consequences. It is practicable to take the object lessons of history to heart and try to mold our ideals in conformity with the experience so gained. Whether one succeeds in living up to this ideal—which, in my opinion, will be true monogamy—depends on historical necessities, which are likewise continually changing and which bring more and more power over nature and over our inherited qualities to us.

In reply to a few minor points of your letter, I want to say first that you have little cause for speaking of the "selfishness" of exclusiveness in love. For I have seen a lot of cruel selfishness among varietists. They would still their "love hunger" regardless of the pain they gave to others, regardless of the lives they were ruining, regardless of the lives they were creating. There was no sympathy, no thought of the feelings of others whom they were making miserable by their happiness. Only the desire to satisfy their own love predominated in them. And this is true of both women and men. But I do not cast any stones at them. Selfishness has been the principle by which human beings have survived. And by it they must continue to survive. Only it must become an enlightened selfishness, which identifies the individual happiness with the welfare of the race; and by this token exclusiveness is certainly the more enlightened selfishness.

You say that a part of the lesson which love teaches is to forego love as well as to covet it. True. But don't you see that this works both ways? And don't you realize that jealousy is as much a product of historical growth as its companion, exclusiveness?

There is a narrow, brutish jealousy which demands that the beloved should given up even the social intercourse with the other sex, which sees in every warm friendship for the other sex an unpardonable treason. This is the animal stage of jealousy which is a lower stage of animal life kills the hated rival or drives him from the herd. But to the extent that people learn to control their emotions by reason this stage will be outgrown and a more rational view developed in which jealousy will be no longer the green-eyed monster but the enlightened understanding that no scientific sexual selection and breeding can take place without mutual assurance of loyalty in sex life.

I agree with you that the sex function is neither higher nor lower than any other physical function—for instance, the reasoning function. I am convinced that a normal use of the sex function is a requirement of healthy development, the basis of "happiness." I believe with you that the mind as well as the erotic passion must be satisfied, and that all the beauty of sex life is destroyed when a woman is compelled to surrender against her will. Forced surrender breeds disease, backward offspring, slavish minds and beastly men. And had not economic conditions done much to prevent men from rising out of the surviving animal traits of their sex life, had not the same conditions forced women into an inferior position, the sex problem might be easier to solve than it is now.

Only when women will become economically independent of men, when they will have the means and the leisure to develop a free mind in a free body, when they will be able to choose their love-mates without any thought of sordid gain or a chance to live, only then shall we have free love. Only then shall mankind follow the call of Eros without fear of economic or physical misery. Whether this free love will be exclusiveness or varietism will depend on the outcome of natural selection. Unless the signs of history deceive me, the next historical stage of love will be free exclusive monogamy. Fraternally,

HELEN UNTERMAN.

Orlando, Florida.

LOVE IN LIBERTY.

[The following letter was written several years ago by a young woman—a dear friend of mine. It was one of a series of letters which were very interesting to me, written, as they were, by two schoolmates resuming the intimacy of their school days, differing radically at times in their views, but always earnestly searching for truth. I copied this, and told my friend that some day I should publish the entire correspondence. I give the letter place at this time, as the subject is up for discussion. Though not written for publication I consider it none the less interesting because of that fact.—L. H.]

My Dear Amy: . . . Now, about this love question. If two people really and truly love each the other, and no one else, that is all right. If in their nature it is impossible to have a feeling of real love for others, that is all right, too; but it is a more or less selfish love, and I'll admit that I can't help having a "hankering" for such a love. But when two people love and a third person comes into their love—into the man's or the woman's love—can they stifle that feeling of love? They may attempt to stifle it, thwart it, and reason themselves out of it (maybe), but it will cause pain to all concerned. Suppose, for instance, you love your husband very much indeed, and he loves you. After a while a man comes along who seems to appeal to you in every way. You recognize in him a nature of true worth. You begin to love him; you begin to think of him when he is away; you long to see him again; you enjoy being in his presence. While you are having these feelings, what position in your heart does your husband occupy? Or, let's take another example which will be better, since you have mentioned it. Suppose you were to see your husband and me "getting happy together." If he were happy with me, in talking with me, in being with me for a while, don't you think you could find some little pleasure in seeing him happy with me, if you knew he still loved you—if he still loved to be with you? Don't you think it could be possible for him to love both?

"True love is this differs from gold or clay,
That to divide is not to take away."

So says Shelley. Do I love you the less because I love Lillian? Do you love me the less because you love Maggie? Do you love your first child the less because you have the second? Must you divide your time between them in a way that causes a lessening of your love for either of them?

How do you know that you and your loved one are equal to the "task" of constancy? Can you see all the way down the pathway of the future, that you can be so sure that you will be constant? It is true that you may force yourself to be constant in action, but the point is, will you always be constant in heart and thought, will you always experience the joy and pleasure of love, or will the feeling be but that of cold duty?

Suppose Mary Ann had never known the joys of loving—had never met one whom she could really and truly love until she saw your husband—and she met and loved him deeply; needed his love. Suppose your husband loved her, and saw that by manifesting that love she and he would be happier. Suppose you knew him so well that you were sure he was exactly the kind of man whose love this woman needed—you really and truly realized there was no other man who could love this woman and be so considerate of and helpful to her as your husband. Could you, knowing the joys of loving and being loved, have the heart to deprive this woman of some of the tendernesses and love of your husband? Couldn't he still love you the same and be with you when you needed him most and wanted him most and when he wanted to be with you most? I know it is hard for you to understand these things, Amy—I could never have understood or believed them possible if I had not seen with my own eyes.

Have I ever said I believed in spiritualism—or annihilation, either? I have said that I think I should like to believe in spiritualism, but everything pointed to annihilation. I hope I shall continue to live, but I believe if there is future existence we will all live, no matter what we believe or whether we have any beliefs at all or not. You think the soul of man continues to live on and on. If you can tell me what the soul is—so I that I can understand it—I'll be so very, very glad; if you will enlighten me as to the difference between mind and soul. Lytton tries very hard in his "Strange Story" to explain the difference all through the book, and he finally causes the hero to be convinced that there is a difference and to admit at last there is a soul; but he failed to convince me. Some of his arguments are very weak. For instance, he was talking about man being the only animal which was gifted with a capacity ("a passive power," as he explained it, differing from a faculty, which was an "active power," etc.) of comprehending a Deity, a Hereafter, and planning for the future. Surely an ant thinks of the future when it stores away food for the winter, and so do squirrels and many other animals. How could Lytton make such assertions when he didn't understand the "lower animals" and their "thinks"? And an animal will fight as long for the preservation of its young and its own self-preservation as man will.

But to return to the love question. The more we can love the happier we are, for love gives us more interest in life, and it is certain that the more interest we have in life the happier we are.

How else do you receive happiness except through your body? Our happiness is felt through the senses, and if they are not faculties of the body, what are they? What do you mean by the term "physical benefit" in the phrase, "Educating your minds for physical benefit"? Are not all your friends helpful in giving you physical benefit? Did you not say, once upon a time, that all our associations with friends, everything we do, is for our pleasure? "Physical benefit" involves everything, all the pleasures we enjoy, for these come only through the body. Without the body, without the senses, there could be no sensation of either pleasure or pain, so far as our present plane of existence is concerned, at least. Just as there could be no music if there were no instruments, either natural or manufactured, through which it could find expression. . . .

We are still friends, aren't we? You see, as I now have two friends, you and Lillian, I must carefully and exactly divide my time. If Lillian had no place in my affections I could write you twenty-four pages instead of twelve. When I learn to love another friend, then I can write you only eight pages, and so on. See? . . .

With lots of love to you and your dear, sweet children. Wish I could see them. I hope you will some day have that sweet little girl, if you want it, and feel able to care for it, and think you have time to share your love with one more child, and if it will not take too much of your affection from the others; but the first one is truly to be pitied for having half of your maternal affection taken from it to give to the second. Do not let the time for your thoughts of the one encroach on the time for the other! . . .

VAUMA.

DISAPPOINTMENT.

Daughter—"Mamma, I advertised under an assumed name that I would like to make the acquaintance of a nice gentleman."

Mamma—"How shocking! And what was the result?"

Daughter—"I only got one answer, and that was from papa."—Pick-Me-Up.

Within one's self must be the source of strength, the basis of consolation.—Marcus Aurelius.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

This is a sort of "clearing-up" issue of LUCIFER. Some of the matter has been in type for several weeks, but has been crowded over. As the editor will probably be glad to have the opportunity to prepare the contents of the next number, I want him to have a clear field, with no "left-overs." This partially explains why so much space is given to the discussion of the relative merits of exclusiveness and variety in love.

One piece of "unfinished business" is the case of Miss Leppel, whose advertisement appears in another column. It may be remembered that LUCIFER No. 1056 was "held up" as unmailable because of certain paragraphs contained in an article written by Miss Leppel which appeared in that issue—an article attacking not merely ideas which Miss Leppel assumed were entertained by my father, but also comprising assertions and insinuations concerning his personal life, of which she of course knows nothing. I felt sure that the wording of the article would cause a "holdup," and so it did. Miss Leppel sent proof sheets of her reply to my father's comments, asking that her reply be published in LUCIFER. She did not publish his comments, for the reason, as she said, that her readers do not wish to have the sex question discussed in her paper. This rejoinder of hers was among the "copy" left by the editor for insertion in the next issue of LUCIFER when he was taken to prison. Miss Leppel had said in criticism of him: "No man of discretion would have printed the obscene paragraphs after having been punished twice for a similar offense." Father proved himself lacking in discretion by willingness to risk a second "holdup" for her paragraphs, which were adjudged "obscene" by the local postal official. I declined to incur that risk, and thus proved my discretion, according to Miss Leppel's definition. Miss Leppel said that at some future time she would issue a supplement, giving my father's article—which would be sent to some of her readers months after her reply to that article had appeared in her journal.

Miss Leppel considers herself misused because her advertisement has not appeared in LUCIFER, and makes that the basis for various charges in her paper. I do not know whether any further space is due her or not. I have not seen her paper once a year, and neither know nor care whether LUCIFER'S advertisements have appeared in its columns. I am quite willing, in any case, to give her the benefit of the doubt, and insert her advertisement as many times as she claims it is due. But I told her that, according to previous rulings, the wording of her advertisement might cause LUCIFER to be denied transmission through the mails, and asked her to substitute another. This she has not done.

Tired of waiting for another advertisement, and wishing to avoid the least possibility of cause for just complaint by Miss Leppel, I sent a copy of the advertisement to the superintendent of second-class mails, asking if, in his opinion, its publication would render LUCIFER inadmissible to the mails. I did this because I do not care to risk the suppression of an issue for matter which not only I myself do not think of sufficient importance, but for which Miss Leppel would not willingly incur any risk of prosecution. I will add that I have never, with this one exception, asked the opinion of the postal department concerning anything which I wished to publish in LUCIFER. But I have been careful to publish only matter which I believed worthy of making a fight for, if necessary.

In reply to my inquiry, the superintendent of second-class mails said that he is unable to decide the question and had referred it to the department at Washington. This would seem to imply that an issue of LUCIFER containing the doubtful matter would be detained in the postoffice pending the decision of the Washington officials. As I do not think the readers of LUCIFER would wish to wait two or three weeks for their paper, I am giving Miss Leppel the space which would be occupied by the doubtful paragraph, but leaving it blank. If the decision is in its favor, the advertisement will appear complete in a later issue. If it is adverse, Miss Leppel can have no cause for complaint, as she condemns others for failing to submit to the dictum of the powers that be.

Miss Leppel prints in her paper a crude picture of a tombstone for LUCIFER, as a prediction of its death, finding, I presume, a satisfaction in her artistic work similar to that experienced by the street gamin who draws chalk caricatures of those who have incurred his enmity. And then she lays the flattering unction to her soul that we "fear" to let the readers of LUCIFER know of the existence of her work!

Miss Leppel says: "You are just as stupid as vegetarian editors, who think, by ignoring my criticism and suppressing my teaching, their readers will not hear about me. I shall keep a standing paragraph about LUCIFER in H. W. D., so you cannot complain that I do not advertise you. LUCIFER is doomed." Her letter closes thus: "Hoping that LUCIFER will soon be DEAD, as predicted by me."

Persons who give way to feelings of hatred and revenge for real or fancied slights are to be pitied, probably, rather than blamed. Miss Leppel claims that her system of diet can cure all sorts of ills. Possibly she may some time discover and apply the remedy for her peculiar temper. Those of our readers who would like to see a literary curiosity in the way of appreciation of self and vituperation of opponents, will probably enjoy reading Health Without Drugs. But don't send silver in payment.

The letter by Helen Unterman was written in reply to one by Gladys V. Lamb, which appeared in No. 1073. I do not know whether Miss Lamb intends to say any more on the subject; if she does, her reply will appear in these columns. I am glad to have these letters, and while I feel that I must make a few comments on Mrs. Unterman's letter, I do not wish to give the impression that her letter is less welcome than is that of Miss Lamb.

"Evolution," like "Truth" and "God" and many other words which are used to express a finality, really means "all things to all men." That is, many different things are proved—to the satisfaction of the writer—by "evolution." To Mrs. Unterman, evolution will have but one fruit in the sexual relations—that is, "free exclusive monogamy." It seems to me that evolution necessarily brings forth variation. In freedom, I feel sure, there will be free monogamy and free variety and free celibacy also. At first glance, "free exclusive monogamy" seems a strange combination of words—for can real monogamy be anything but exclusive? However, the distinction is well made; for while "monogamy" is the rule in present "civilized" society, it is a hypocritical, sneaking, cowardly pretense of monogamy; a monogamy which demands exclusiveness of the "other fellow" while using monoganic marriage as a cloak for all uncleanness and excess. If Mrs. Unterman means to characterize as varietists all the thousands of female prostitutes and the tens of thousands of male prostitutes for whose convenience they exist, then I would not question her statement that such "varietists" are responsible for child-desertion, prevalent diseases, etc. But I do not think such characterization is accurate, nor is it fair to those who call themselves varietists. Of these there are but few, and they are certainly not responsible for the conditions named by Mrs. Unterman. With all due respect to the writer, I must say that I am in a position to know that the children of these people are starved neither in hearts nor stomachs; and her other accusations are equally unfounded. Those who really are responsible for these conditions would consider themselves insulted if called "varietists." To them monogamy is the ideal state; they give it lip service, at least, on all possible occasions. The man who seduces women under promise of marriage absolves himself from guilt because she has "fallen" and therefore is unworthy of consideration. He may associate with prostitutes and bring physical contamination to his wife; but that is nothing to him in comparison with the moral contamination the wife would suffer should she but speak to the prostitute. And this woman, too, would neither comprehend nor desire a condition of universal individual freedom. She wishes to be owned by one man—with the opportunity, perhaps, of deceiving him when she could conveniently do so—yet her ideal is at least the pretense of "exclusive monogamy." So long as monogamic marriage provides insurance against neither deception, nor disease, nor hungry hearts and stomachs, I must consider it a reed too slender and too weak for "young girls" or any one else to lean upon. LILLIAN HARMAN.

TWO STORIES FROM REAL LIFE.

The story of Zola's children, born outside marriage, which was given to the world soon after his death, is again brought to the notice of the public by Madame Zola, who, herself childless, wishes her husband's children to bear his name. Under date of Dec. 6 the following cablegram from Paris appeared in the Chicago Tribune:

"Mme. Emile Zola today formally applied to the courts for permission to confer her late husband's name on the three children born as a result of M. Zola's intimacy with Mme. Rosereau, which was revealed only at the death of the famous novelist. The children are being reared by Mme. Zola, who expresses special gratification at the fact that the boy has decided to adopt a technical profession instead of trying to emulate his father in the field of letters.

"The strange romance in the life of Zola, which only his death revealed, has had few counterparts in modern times. It was a romance in which all defied the law and the conventionalities of society. And yet it had the sanction of Zola's wife.

"When Zola died a mysterious veiled woman, accompanied by two children—a boy aged 13 and a girl aged 5—appeared at his home and wept beside his coffin.

"On the day of the funeral, when the procession wended its way through the streets, followed by a great concourse of mourners, the thousands who stood with uncovered heads along the route looked with wonder at a woman in black, heavily veiled, who walked by the hearse, leading two children by the hand, all the way to the cemetery. When the mourners had departed the veiled woman and the children went to the grave and prayed.

"When Zola's will was opened and read the mystery of the veiled woman and the two children was solved, for Zola had acknowledged the children as his own and made ample provision for them as well as for their mother.

"Zola was devotedly attached to his wife. They were inseparable companions. It was to her that he looked for all his inspiration. It was to her that he turned for solace when exiled from France by the powerful enemies of Dreyfus.

"At the same time Zola loved Mme. Rosereau. She became the mother of his two children. She had loved Zola for years before she knew his real name.

"Mme. Zola knew of the intimacy between her husband and Mme. Rosereau and sanctioned it. When the first child was born to Zola by Mme. Rosereau, Mme. Zola insisted that the mother and the child be invited to her home.

"Then began the strange friendship between the two women. Mme. Rosereau and her children, of whom Zola was the father, were frequent visitors to Zola's home."

True it is that this "strange romance has had few counterparts in modern times." Had Madame Zola killed the great novelist, or had she silently endured and ignored his "unfaithfulness," there would have been nothing remarkable in the situation. Real life as well as literature and the drama teems with such incidents. But to love and honor her husband, to reverence his memory, and at the same time love and care for his children and be on friendly terms with the mother of those children, is a condition so unusual that it is no wonder the world gasps in astonishment.

There is nothing "strange" in another story which appears in the Tribune of just one week later. Under the headline, "Two Reasons for Killing Brown," appear the pictures of two bright-faced little boys. The fact of their existence is sufficient "reason" for the murder of their father, and the further explanation is really superfluous:

"SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, Dec. 13.—Accompanying are photographs of two reasons why Mrs. Anne M. Bradley, of Salt Lake City, grabs of two reasons why Mrs. Anne M. Bradley, of Salt Lake City, shot down former United States Senator Arthur Brown in the Raleigh Hotel, Washington. The two children are sons of Brown and Mrs. Bradley. They are now with relatives in Salt Lake City, wondering why their mother does not come home. Just before Mrs. Bradley started for Washington, her heart filled with jealousy of Mrs. Annie Aseneth Adams, mother of Maude Adams, and beat on a mission of tragic vengeance, she took the two children to a photographer and had their pictures taken. The older child is Arthur, aged 7 years, who always gives his name as 'Arthur Brown.' The younger is Mark, aged 3 years."

Mr. Brown, like many other men of his class, found marriage—and the promise of marriage—a very convenient cloak for the irresponsible gratification of his desires. According to the newspaper reports, the women to whom he promised "undying affection" were many. His first wife attempted to kill him for "unfaithfulness" twenty years ago. He was to marry the mother of Maude Adams on New Year's day, and it was to prevent this that Mrs. Bradley killed him and made her children worse than fatherless and motherless. Of her proposed marriage Mrs. Adams said:

"I was doing this in the face of all I knew concerning his relations with Mrs. Bradley, but there was an understanding that by some agreement—some financial agreement to be reached—Mrs. Bradley should in some way be compensated. He had sworn undying affection for me and declared he never would marry Mrs. Bradley. It was a matter of contention between us for a long time. I always maintained he should marry her, but he told me it was impossible.

"And so, when I saw it was as he said, I agreed to marry him on condition a financial settlement be made with Mrs. Bradley. I thought that would suffice her.

"Had I seen her, had she come to me and asked me to withdraw, I think the tragedy would have been averted. But it is too late to talk of that now. As it was, I sent a special delivery letter to him, begging him on his deathbed to make Mrs. Bradley his wife in order that her children might bear his name. That letter, however, was too late."

And "what will become of these children?" Mrs. Adams, like Madame Zola, wished them to bear their father's name—as an act of deathbed repentance. Will she emulate the widow of the great author still further and give them love and sheltering care? What an absurd question! How much happier would be the lives of many children of irresponsible parentage both in and out of marriage if they could share the fate of the children of the "romance in which all defied the law and the conventionalities of society"! L. H.

LETTERS FROM THE EDITOR.

U. S. P. HOSPITAL, LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Nov. 29, 1906.

My Dear Daughter: Another agreeable surprise. It seems to be a rule that every holiday is an extra letter-writing day. Not expecting such privilege, and having only a few hours in which to write, my letter will be necessarily impromptu and ill-digested. Will do the best I can, however. One drawback is a full stomach. Eating no breakfast, I had a good appetite for dinner, consequently ate more than I would have done had I known that I could write a letter home today. Having written you a long letter Sunday last (which I hope you received in due time), it will be less important that I write a long letter now. Had a good visit from George on Tuesday, and, as usual, was the grateful recipient of a basket of excellent fruit.

Last eve I had a letter from Dr. J. E. Roberts, of Kansas City, "minister of the Church of This World," saying that himself and "the proprietor of Bonaventura Hotel, Kansas City, contemplate a visit to Leavenworth next week for the purpose of calling on you [me], and also of seeing the institution. I have written the warden, apprising him of our intention." Of course you will understand that a visit from the well-beloved and renowned Dr. Roberts will be greatly appreciated by me. Of his friend, Dr. J. E. Smith, proprietor of the Bonaventura Hotel, I am not sure that I have any knowledge, but if he is a friend of Dr. Roberts I shall be glad to enroll him as mine also.

Other letters and cards received since Sunday are these: Philip G. Peabody, 2; C. N. Greene, 1; Harper Harman, 1. R. R. Kerr sends me a roll of clippings from London (England) papers describing the imprisonment of the eleven "suffragettes," as they are called, for alleged disorderly conduct in the lobby of the House of Commons. These clippings, from the London Tribune and Daily News, published a month ago, ought, as I think, to make every Englishman blush for his native land. One of these clippings is headed thus: "Willful Women Martyrs. Suffragettes Refuse to Be First-Class Prisoners. Gaol 'Inferno.'" The first paragraph of this report reads:

"There are now nine suffragettes languishing in Holloway gaol. Two have been released. These latter are Mrs. Pethwick Lawrence and Mrs. Montefiore, and they are now bound over to be of good behavior for six months. The reason these ladies left the gaol was that their health gave way. Since their removal from the Westminster police court to the North London prison, the offending suffragettes have had many friends working in their behalf. The incarcerated ladies were subjected to the strictest prison rules, there was no amelioration in their treatment to that of the ordinary felon, and although efforts were made to have them regarded as first-class misdemeanants, these self-made 'martyrs' declined to abrogate a tittle of their right to be dealt with under the same conditions as male offenders in similar circumstances. It must not be forgotten that these women are voluntary prisoners. All they were asked to do by the Westminster magistrate was to bind themselves to keep the peace, and imprisonment followed only on their refusal to be bound over. When appeal was made to the Home Secretary early in the week to have the prisoners placed in the first division, Mr. Gladstone was adamant in his refusal, but subsequent pressure on the part of members interested not only in the suffragette movement, but of others, who looked askance at the degradation of educated and refined women being dealt with as common criminals, induced that minister to adopt a more conciliatory attitude."

One of the released women, Mrs. Montefiore, is reported to have described her prison experiences in one word, "inferno"—hell! Her experiences cannot be reproduced here. The cells of her prison house seem much worse kept than are American prisons, so far as my experience and observation go.

The suffragettes appear to be in no sense discouraged. One of their leaders, Mrs. Parkhurst, expressed herself thus as to the prospect ahead:

"This change is a gain to us, as it comes from the most powerful government of the time, who have climbed down in the face of the growing public opinion. We are at last recognized as a political party; we are now in the swim of politics, and are a political force. That is the important result which has been obtained. Everything which is done now will help us. We are going to fight the government to the bitter end. In by-elections we shall attack the government candidates until our rights are given us."

The imprisoned women refuse to receive any food that has to be paid for, and resolve to wear the prison clothes, though now permitted to wear their own.

The animus of the movement is thus expressed by Mrs. Cobden-Sanderson, daughter of the great "anti-corn law" agitator, Cobden, who gave cheaper bread to the English workingman. Said Mrs. Sanderson: "It is because of the unhappy lives of our sweated women that I am here [in prison]. Nothing will ever be done to ameliorate their present wretched condition until they possess a vote themselves."

This struggle of a part of the intelligent, cultured and refined British women for the political franchise seems, at the present time, to be attracting more attention from the libertarian minds than any other fight. Whether these women are adopting the best course to obtain their end is a question upon which there will be honest difference of opinion; also as to whether the elective franchise will liberate the "sweated women" from wage-slavery, there will be honest difference; but that good will grow out of this heroic battle of self-sacrificing women there can be no doubt.

Some weeks ago A. E. Ellis, a Scandinavian friend now living in Boston, wrote me a long letter telling me of the great victory of the suffrage movement in Finland within the present year—"the gaining of universal suffrage and absolute political equality of women with men. It is curious," continues friend Ellis, "how extremes often touch each other. In this case, under the scepter of the same despot, the Czar of Russia, the Russian people, in spite of the most heroic efforts, in spite of torrents of blood, have failed to gain even a semblance of liberty, while the Finnish nation has succeeded, without a shot being actually fired, in acquiring perhaps the most advanced constitution in the world, including the one-chamber system, and universal suffrage for both men and women. . . . It was almost a year ago," proceeds our Scandinavian correspondent, "when the Finnish revolution took place, when the whole nation 'went on strike.' On the first of November [this letter was written Oct. 15, 1906] last year every wheel of industry, every official activity, every vestige of regular authority ceased to function in a nation of 2,300,000 people; but an organized army of citizen soldiers, which had not enlisted the day before, came suddenly into evidence. All the Russian gendarmes and police were disarmed and made prisoners all over the country. In Helsingfors, the capital, the Russian flag on the Senate building came down and the red flag of the revolution waved over the homes of the brave and the land of the free. The Russian troops in Helsingfors barricaded themselves in their barracks and the governor-general fled to the battleship Slova in the harbor. A steamer was sent to St. Petersburg with the demands of the three Finnish parties. In four days the steamer returned with all the demands granted and all illegal acts of the Czar for many years back revoked.

"So the Finns won their revolution against the most cruel and aggressive despotism on earth without a life being lost. Since then these demands and promises have been enacted into law through regular channels, but the military organization of the Finnish working class has been all the time watching and seeing to it that the pledges have been held.

"It is the first time, perhaps, since the Paris commune, that the working class has been in absolute control of the military power of a country."

There is much more of the same sort in our friend's letter, but I have transcribed already much more than I intended. It was the suffrage question that started me to transcribing, thinking you would be interested in hearing how "equal suffrage" is gaining in Europe. Please thank friends Kerr and Ellis for the information they have given us on these matters.

I think I told you in Sunday's letter that I hoped to get to Chicago in time for the meetings you say are arranged for my home-coming.

M. H.

* * *

HOSPITAL, U. S. P., LEAVENWORTH, KAN., Dec. 9, 1906.

My Dear Lillian: Once more, and perhaps for the last time during my present incarceration, I address you from the prison hospital. Incarceration and incarnation sound much alike, and I am wondering if this is to be my last letter to you from behind prison bars during my present incarnation. While I sincerely hope that no more imprisonments will be needed in defense of freedom of speech and of the press, and in defense of woman's right to the ownership and control of her own person; also in defense of the right to be born well, if born at all; also in defense of the right of children as well as adults to a sane and rational education in regard to all that pertains to sex—to parenthood and prenatal life;—while sincerely hoping all this, I repeat what I have often said before, that if it is necessary for any one to go to prison in order that the sleeping masses, the ignorant and superstitious masses be wakened from their age-long slumber in regard to these most vitally important subjects, then I prefer to serve my sister women and fellow men once more in the way I have been doing the ten months soon to expire, rather than to see any one else made to wear the habiliments of a felon, eat prison fare and work under the eye of a prison boss, for the law-made crime of "obscenity."

Of course I do not need to explain to you, dear Lillian, that in thus saying I indulge no feeling of bitterness, no spirit of hate, revenge or unkindly criticism towards those who enacted and who administer the obscenity laws, nor towards the prison management. I hope I have got over all that. We all are victims of inexorable causation, both those who make and administer laws and those who suffer imprisonment because of alleged violation of laws. Under like circumstances, with their heredity and training, I can easily see that I would have done just as the federal courts and prison officials have done. If this be true, we at once see that praise and blame, revenge and hate, as commonly used, are irrational, unphilosophical.

Three bunches of pamphlets, etc., from you. Thanks. Physical Culture, Tomorrow, Arena, Public and some others, I think, from publishers, as usual. George Bedborough (London, England) sent another of the admirable series of English booklets. Other letters and cards not mentioned are those: Rev. W. H. MacPherson, 1; Adeline Champney, 1; J. P. Robinson, 1; Lois Waisbrooker, 1 (inclosing card from Mrs. Merrill); George E. Bowen, 1 (with poem, "In Gratitude"—original); Wegie H. L., 2; Albert Wichman, 2; C. S. Greene, 1; John A. Lant, 1; J. Allen Evans, 2; James W. Adams, 1; Osborn P. Loomis, 1; Thirza Rathbun, 1; Fannie D., 1; Josephine S. Tilton, 1; T. C. Deuel, 1; James Myers, 1; Ada M. Morley, 1; Mary E. Walker, M. D., 1; James B. Elliott, 1 (with bundle of clippings); "The Chaplain" (A. Johnson), 1; Hulda P. Loomis (with clippings), 1; George B. Wheeler, 1; Dr. Leverson, 1; Annie E. Parkhurst, 1; Philip G. Peabody, 7.

Dr. Hardcastle, of San Francisco, Cal., writes: "I would like to see how you look trimmed. I abominate superabundant hair, and consider it a disguise, and in case of beard, a good handle for hold-up men. There is no more sense or science in it than in the half-inch long fingernail of the oriental high muck-a-muck."

Please say to Dr. Hardcastle that I appreciate candid and honest criticism even more than I do the opinions of those who agree with me in everything. There is plausibility, at least, in what Dr. H. says about long hair and long beards, but I think there is another side. Adaptation to environment—in other words, use—is the fundamental principle upon which Nature works. We have arms, hands, fingers and fingernails because these are useful to us. If the human animal had not needed these appendages, these appendages—or organs—would not have been developed. When the human animal no longer needs arms, hands, fingers and fingernails these now useful appendages will probably become vestigiary and rudimentary, just as the muscles that once worked a tail to switch off the flies have become vestigiary in the human animal; also a dozen or more pairs of muscles which are no longer useful to the said evoluted animal. As to the "long nails of muck-a-mucks," they are absurdly long simply because they are not properly used. If used in productive labor they would wear off, just as the nails of a dog or cat or the hoofs of a horse keep at proper length by use.

The same principle holds as to hair, which is a part of the integuments, just as nails and teeth are parts of the integuments. Once, hair grew all over the human body, as over the body of a dog or monkey, but now that the human animal has for ages worn clothes (except a few tribes in torrid climes), hair on the body has become rudimentary. Hair on the head is useful to protect one of the most vital organs from sudden blows, also from excessive heat or cold. Stovepipe hats and superheated rooms (offices) have done much towards making hair on masculine man's head rudimentary. Woman does not wear stovepipe hats, and when she goes out to the park or nearest grocery store she commonly goes bareheaded; therefore few bald heads are seen among women.

Men do not cover up their lips and chins, therefore their beards continue to grow, notwithstanding the barberous habit of shaving. Women have rudimentary beards which they try to extirpate entirely by depilatory processes. (Did I strike the right word?) Men need beards more than women because exposed more to change of weather, hence evolution permits them still to wear beards. Perhaps the principle of use will, in time, deprive men of beards, and both men and women of hair for the head; but for one I must say I do not hanker to see that stage of evolutionary progress, and so I allow my hair and beard to grow. As to how long both hair and beard should be allowed to grow is, of course, a matter of taste, and should never be a matter of legislation or coercion.

The fact that a long beard may be a temptation to the footpad to hold me up and rob me doesn't trouble me much. I have not been so held up, and if seized by the beard for that purpose, I would say, as gently as possible: "Search me, brother! and if you find any gold watches, diamonds, double-eagle gold coins or $1,000 bank notes, and if you think you need them worse than I do, why, take them, of course. I shall never inform the police nor help to put you in prison; but here is my business card. Come and see me tomorrow and we'll talk this matter over. Perhaps I may put you in the way of getting a better job and one less dangerous than that of highway robbery, and not half so disagreeable in bad weather." . . .

Time up and space filled. Will try to write two weeks from today.

M. H.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

JAMES W. ADAMS, Home (via Lakeday), Wash.—Moses: Looking back to that afternoon when the United States marshal interrupted our tête-à-tête and notified you to be ready to start to the penitentiary at 5 o'clock, I am thankful to the unseen Source from penitentiary at 5 o'clock, I am thankful to the unseen Source from whence I received higher aspirations and deeper inspirations, whereby enabling me to outgrow the vengeful feelings I nursed towards Judge Foster and others connected with your trial and conviction. To be consistent, no one should blame another for that which they themselves would do under the same circumstances. When I was a Methodist and Democrat, I, too, would have suppressed LUCIFER if I could have done so.

The question naturally rises, Why such a great change? There can be but one answer, and that is couched in the axiom quoted by Paul, "When I was a child I thought as a child," etc. In proof of the axiom "As a man thinketh, so is he," I submit that when the war broke out I thought as a Southern Methodist. I was thoroughly imbued with the desire to kill as many Yankees as I could, and for years gloated over my war record. I truthfully believed John Brown to be a traitor and an unmitigated villain. I now regard him the peer of any in all that pertains to true manhood. I blindly voted with the Democratic party and as blindly looked to the minister to do my thinking until our eighteen-months-old babe was translated to the Land of Souls. Grief-stricken, and my prayers unavailing, I began to question my would-be teachers solely from the desire of benefiting my spiritual condition. At first they counseled, then remonstrated, and finally heaped rebuke for seeking knowledge, as they said, "wisely withheld by a loving Father." Their reproof drove me into open revolt, and I unwittingly became a social, religious and political outcast, and for years I drifted hither and yon like a ship at sea without chart, rudder or compass, until I embraced Spiritualism. Judicial wrongs drove me into acceptance of Anarchism, the only system or school of thought that proclaims self-government, passive resistance, non-invasion and voluntaryism in all things. Since then my attitude towards our misguided brothers who had me indicted, and the press that so vehemently denounced and misrepresented me, has been the antithesis of what it would have been had I remained a Democrat and a Methodist.

As you know, I came here with wife, children and grandchildren. I have never regretted the move. Notwithstanding the efforts to railroad myself and comrades to the penitentiary, we commanded the respect of United States marshals, reporters and others who came in personal contact with us. Our park is frequently used by excursionists from Tacoma. Last Sunday it required a steamer and three launches to accommodate the crowd. The forty-six homes here compare favorably with any village in Washington. Our schoolhouse and hall (built with voluntary contributions), 34x70, two stories high; our wharf, our store, the absence of the well-nigh omnipresent saloon and ubiquitous policeman's club, proves that people can and do live in peace without the intervention of man-made laws, demonstrates the superiority of our philosophy, the preeminence of well-directed effort over blind faith in established precedents. The friends join me in good wishes for your material welfare.

M. FLORENCE JOHNSON, Milford, MASS.—My Dear Mr. Harman: I want to write a word about your autobiography. We do not want it finished. Just tell us what you have lived and enjoyed and conquered, and when you are through others will say of you as they now say of Dr. Foote, "His life was a continuation of the work as told in the account of his life by S. P. Putnam," and then a chapter given of the recent work. From the paragraphs printed, I know the work would be an inspiration. What would we miss if autobiographies were all wiped out! Your own past you can tell as no one else can, and as you think the thoughts you have now are worth running a paper to print, you must see how we would like the whole story from your earliest remembrance to the present; then say this will be continued from issue to issue of the paper.

I suppose you have seen a "Prospectus of a Home Colony," by Upton Sinclair. I have just finished an article [see LUCIFER No. 1078] in criticism of his proposed plan for rearing children. As I do not believe in colony homes, where 100 families eat together, etc., and as I do not want children raised by narrow rules and have the rules called scientific, I will have much opposition, I expect. The fact that I succeed with my own children, and also with the children of others, gives me courage to give my opinion on that subject. The treatment Sinclair recommends would do perhaps for the vicious and insane.

My little grandson is with me again. There is much typhoid and scarlet fever in Wellesley, so we think him better off here. Within a month Olive, Ralph and I will go to New York and Newark to visit my other two girls, Pearl and Bertha. That will be a treat. I have been nursing recently in a family that makes me appreciate the harmony between my daughters and myself. I liked every member of the family, but they quarreled among themselves all the time. They were religious and moral and conventional in company, but not commonly decent in their treatment of each other. I wouldn't live in such a home a week.

I am so glad your health improves. How I wish I might be one of those to welcome you when you come home, but I do not see my way clear to do so now, and fear there will be no way. Many things might happen between now and then, however. I have new pictures of Virna and George, Jr. I think them very nice.

I am quite anxious to attend Emerson College of Oratory for a few weeks this winter for a little review, then start in teaching, but do not know that I can accomplish it. I wish our folks would or could see the necessity of preparing to represent their ideas in an attractive way in public utterance. Our opponents make themselves as artistic as possible and we would accomplish more if we should do so.

MRS. F. A. DE CRANE, Orange City, Iowa.—Dear Harman: The days are speeding by so fast, and it is with a sigh of relief that I read in LUCIFER that you are still with us and with health somewhat improved. With what delight all those that love you will hail December! How grand that in last LUCIFER we had a glimpse of the rest of your family. What a dandy little grandson! I would just love to hug him. I send you, under separate cover, The Social Rebel, with a marked article by my daughter May. It is eighteen years since I first saw LUCIFER'S light, and through its influence I taught my daughter the right to own herself. Daughter May is now 19, and I think her ideas show your work did not fall amongst "the stones and barren places." I also send you a photo of my other child, Evadna. I hope she, too, will prove to be worthy of efforts I have made to do justice to LUCIFER'S teachings. . . . May your health keep good, and may we be able to hail your return to LUCIFER'S force, is the earnest wish of yours sincerely.

G. W. BROWN, 907 Kilburn Avenue, Rockford, Ill.—My Good Brother Harman: It was fifty years ago September 10 that Governor Robinson, G. W. Deitzler, G. W. Smith, Gains Jenkins and myself were released from our four months' imprisonment, held at Lecompton for trial, indicted for high treason, by a rabid pro-slavery court and grand jury. We were discharged without trial, though it was the intention of the prosecution to hang us because we were in their way of making Kansas a slave state. These efforts to crush free principles terminated in the war of the rebellion, and the emancipation of chattel slavery not only in the United States but throughout the world.

Every contest for the advance of truth, during all the ages, has been met with violent opposition and those who have led in reforms have been the most cruelly persecuted. And so we must expect the world will continue for the long ages before it, for it is ignorance that holds mankind in thrall.

I rejoice, as I look back at the past, that the enemies of liberty thought me of sufficient importance to labor with such zeal to get rid of me. And I joy to look out upon Kansas, and see her materialistic, moral, social and political advancement, and know it was my Heart of Freedom, my labors and sacrifices, that contributed so largely to bring about the result. Indeed, I cannot do less than feel that but for the Heart of Freedom, and the independent action of its editor, Kansas would be a slave state today, as would many of the states west and south of it. And without American example the serfs of Russia, the slaves of Cuba, of Spain, of Turkey, of Egypt, would still be toiling for cruel masters, with no star of freedom in sight. You may make the application as you will in your own case, and with a forecast of fifty years you can see the hold you have then on those who have learned to think.

I am glad to learn that your health is improving. You will survive your imprisonment and be stronger than ever, and sustained by the more friends because you have suffered for opinion's sake. If I survive until then and am able I will gladly greet you when you return home. But, living or dead, be assured of my continued friendship for you.

BODH RAJ SHAH, Sanghoi, Jhelum, Punjab, India.—Dear Mr. Harman: To know a hero struggling with troubles that he brings upon himself by the advocacy of a great cause is in itself a liberal education. I regard it as a privilege that I know such a hero. Your arduous labors for the emancipation of woman, your selfless devotion to the cause of progress, compel admiration. To crown all, the tranquility of mind that you have displayed elevates you to the rank of those who act as beacon lights for the guidance of their less fortunate brothers. Assuring you that you have some admirers and sympathizers on this side of the Atlantic, I beg to remain yours.

J. H. STEVTER, National Soldiers' Home, Tennessee.—Am sending you, by this mail, copy of the "sustainers' edition" of "The Jungle," with the hope that you may be able to sell it and pay yourself for my subscription to LUCIFER the current year. You were good enough to "deadhead" me a year ahead; but I can't put this copy to a better use. It is probably pencil marked some, but the fact of its being the first edition ought to make it more valuable to a Socialist. It has been lying wrapped up in my "locker" for months, and these old wrecks don't care a stiver to read it. . . . I've just written a protest to E. C. W. against his crediting the Single Taxers with all the political persecution handed out to agitators in the past few years. Anybody at all familiar with our (Socialist) propaganda history knows that our people are being jailed and clubbed in many parts of the country and our meetings suppressed. This has been the case all along. . . . Am glad your father has had so many letters. Makes me feel less guilty in not having written to him.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

Adam's Diary.

BY MARK TWAIN.

The only fault to be found with Mark Twain's new book, "Extracts from Adam's Diary," is that there is not more of it, both pictures and print. It is Adam's daily record of his life from the time he found the "new creature with the long hair," which was a good deal in the way and which he wished would stay with the other animals, to the time he finally found that he could not be happy without it, and found that it was better to live outside of the garden with her than inside it without her. The story is very briefly told—too briefly—but every line sparkles with wit. The pictures, one to each page of text, are by F. Strothmann. Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Eve's Diary.

BY MARK TWAIN.

This is a companion volume to "Extracts from Adam's Diary," which thousands have laughed over. It purports to be a "translation from the original," and tells of Eve's experiences in the Garden of Eden and afterwards. It is a delightful whimsical satire, written in the veteran fun-maker's loveliest style. There is much to be amused at in Eve's naïve observations and in her many experiments in natural science and psychology. Altogether, "Eve's Diary" is one of the cleverest and most amusing of Mark Twain's many absurdities.

With 55 full page Illustrations by Lester Ralph. Crown 8vo. Cloth, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Fifteen different pamphlets on the Dietetic Way to Health, Strength, Beauty and Energy sent for a dollar bill or 4s.

Health Without Drugs. Price 5c. Marvelous results among all classes and ages. Address: Sophie Leppel, editor Health Without Drugs, 26 Clovelly Mansions, Gray's Inn Road, London, W. C., England.

1081

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Who Is the Enemy: Anthony Comstock or You?

BY E. C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.

THE "MORAL" CENSORSHIP—The Inspiration of the Censor; A "Protection" that Betrays; Utter Lack of Discrimination; Vain Deals of Facts; A Greater Wrong to the Child; Some Officers' Zeal; Imagined "Plots"; The Law as Administered; The Vicious Law of Obscene Libel; Obscene Libel and Expert Testimony; Judge and Jury and "the Facts"; Some Criticisms Answered; The Common Law Yesterday and Today; Wrong Principles of Action; The Censorship and the Bible; Moncure D. Conway on Censors; Where Lies Responsibility—on Censor or You? The Cause of Slow Advance; Sex a Mistake—"Somebody Blundered"; Suppression Not Seriously Crippled; The Worship of Death and Decay; Characteristic Eruptions of Sex Panic.

THE "FRAUD ORDER" FRAUD—Remarkable Deliverance by Judge Thomas; The Courts and the Constitution; The Persecution of "Freedom"; Grateful for Injuries Received.

THE CENSORSHIP OF SECOND-CLASS MATTER—The Department's Rules of Exclusion; Statistics of Official Financiering; Two Arguments About Government Socialism.

Price, 20 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day rivilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows to what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

POEMS OF VARIED FEELING.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

The author is well known to the readers of LUCIFER, many of the poems in this volume having made their first appearance in our columns. The title well expresses the character of the work; the verses breathe of life and liberty and love; the charms of the seasons and the beauties of nature. The spirit of revolution, too, is voiced in "Liberty and the Commune," "In the Hour of Execution," "Von Plehve Dead," and other poems. "To the Enemies of Free Speech"; "The Challenge of Liberty"; "A Ballade of Butterflies"; "The Roistering Knights"; "Father Damien"; "Four Loves"; "Death in Life"; "Looking on the Sierras"; "Mother-Heart," are a few titles taken at random, showing the varied scope of the work.

12 mo, cloth; gilt title; 160 pages; $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The Line Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emasculated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,

52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.

Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.: Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.

1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, JANUARY 3, E. M. 307 [C. E. 1907] WHOLE NO. 1082

THE INSCRUTABLE LAW.

[The following poem, by Eugene F. Ware, Esq., of Fort Scott, Kansas, is descriptive of the case of State vs. Lewis, 19 Kan., 260, to the official report of which it is appended as a reporter's foot-note.—Chicago Law Times.]

LAW—PAW—GUILT—WILT.
When upon thy frame the law
Places its majestic paw,
Though in innocence or guilt,
Thou art then required to wilt.

STATEMENT OF CASE BY REPORTER.

The defendant while at large,
Was arrested on a charge
Of burglarious intent,
And direct to jail he went.
But he somehow left unbossed,
And through prison walls he oozed,
And effected his escape.

Mark you now: Again the law
On defendant placed its paw,
Like a hand of iron mail,
And re-socked him into jail—
Which said jail, while so corralled,
He by sockage-tenure held.

Then the court met, and they tried
Lewis up and down each side,
On the good old-fashioned plan:
But the jury cleared the man.

Now, you think that this strange case
Ends at just about this place.
Nay, not so. Again the law
On defendant placed its paw—
This time takes him 'round the cape
For effecting an escape;
He, unable to give bail,
Goes reluctantly to jail.

Lewis, tried for this last act,
Makes a special plea of fact.
"Wrongly did they me arrest,
"As my trial did attest.
"And while rightfully at large
"Taken on a wrongful charge,
"I took back from them what they
"From me wrongly took away."

When this plea was heard,
Thereupon the State demurred.

The defendant then was pained
When the court was heard to say
In a cold impassive way,
"The demurrer is sustained."

Back to jail did Lewis go,
But as liberty was dear,
He appeals, and now is here
To reverse the judge below.

The opinion will contain
All the statements that remain.

ARGUMENT AND BRIEF OF APPELLANT.

As a matter, sir, of fact,
Who was injured by our act,
Any property or man?—
Point it out, sir, if you can.

Can you seize us when at large
On a baseless trumped-up charge,
And if we escape, then say
It is a crime to get away—
When we rightfully regained
What was wrongfully obtained?

Please-the-court sir, what is crime?
What is right and what is wrong?
Is our freedom but a song—
Or the subject of a rhyme?

ARGUMENT AND BRIEF OF ATTORNEY FOR THE STATE.

When the State, that is to say
We, take liberty away—
When the padlock and the bars
Leaves one helpless in our grasp,
It's unlawful then that he
Even dreams of liberty.

Wicked dreams, that may in time
Grow and ripen into crime.

Crime of dark and damning shape
Then, if he perchance escapes,
Evermore remorse will roll
O'er his shattered, sin-sick soul.

REPLY BY APPELLANT.

Please-the-court sir, if it's sin,
Where does turpitude begin?

OPINION OF THE COURT, PER CURIAM.

We don't make law. We are bound
To interpret it as found.
The defendant broke away;
When arrested, he should stay.

This appeal can't be maintained,
For the record does not show
Error in the court below;
And we nothing can infer;
Let the judgment be sustained:
All the justices concur.

REPORTER'S NOTE.

Of the sheriff, rise and sing
Glory to our earthly king.

MOSES HARMAN WELCOMED BACK TO LIBERTY.

Before this issue of LUCIFER reaches its subscribers the public reception to Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, welcoming him back to the liberty of which he was deprived by Comstockian pruriency, will have been held in Masonic Temple, Chicago. A large attendance is expected and a full report of the reception will be published in the next issue of this paper.

Among those who have consented to speak at the reception are the Rev. Walter Henry MacPherson, pastor of People's Church, South Chicago; the Rev. J. M. A. Spence, pastor of People's Church, Aurora, Ill.; the Rev. Paul Tyner, of Denver, Colo.; Dr. Alice B. Stockham, Mrs. Gertrude Breslau Hunt, Parker H. Sercombe, editor of Tomorrow, and Seymour Steedman, the attorney who defended Mr. Harman at his trial.

In order to show that some at least of the men in America who rank high in intelligence and who have known Mr. Harman and his teachings for years do not indorse the verdict of Comstock, McAfee, Judge Landis and the jurors who sent him to prison on the absurd charge of "circulating obscene matter through the mail," several letters written to be read at the reception are printed herewith:

From Ernest Howard Crosby.

Ernest Howard Crosby, former judge of the International Court at Cairo, Egypt, distinguished disciple of Tolstoy and son of the late Rev. Howard Crosby, writes:

"No one can know Mr. Harman personally or through his writings without becoming impressed by the purity and honesty of his purpose and by the fact that his main impulse is what seems to him a high ideal. That such men should be met by the arguments of iron bars and dungeon cells shows that the spirit of Torquemada is not entirely exorcised.

"I hope that his confinement will lead to an improvement of prison conditions at Joliet and elsewhere. The subjection of prisoners to the insults of jailers and to infection and ill treatment from fellow prisoners should form no part of our corrective system at this late day.

"I am glad to know that the brave old gentleman has come out with his health unimpaired."

From the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones.

Jenkin Lloyd Jones, pastor of All Souls' Church, editor of Unity, and founder of Abraham Lincoln Center, Chicago, writes:

"I have read LUCIFER for many years as one of my exchanges, and while I seriously dissent from many of its contentions, I thoroughly agree with those who deem Mr. Harman's conviction and imprisonment nothing less than a crime.

"I should be very glad to indicate such conviction by my presence at the reception, but it will be impossible for me to disengage myself from other duties at that time. So I must decline your kind invitation and use this method of greeting Mr. Harman back to the life of freedom, of which he ought never to have been deprived."

These letters are printed in precedence of the others because they are from men who recognize the right of free speech and a free press and condemn the imprisonment of Moses Harman, although they disagree with some of his views.

From Leonard D. Abbot.

Leonard D. Abbot, former editor of the Literary Digest, writes: "To MOSES HARMAN ON HIS RELEASE FROM JAIL.—Brother and Friend: I feel it a privilege to take part in this welcome, and only regret that I cannot be present.

"I have read your articles for several years past. I have read your letters from prison. I have felt deeply and bitterly the outrage inflicted on you. It is an outrage inflicted on many thousands of American radicals, for if it was right to put you in jail, then it would be right to put any of us or all of us there too.

"I greet you as an honored teacher, as a great pioneer of unpopular work."

From Hugh O. Pentecost.

Hugh O. Pentecost, attorney, New York city, former Baptist minister, now minister to Unity Liberal congregation, and former editor of the Twentieth Century, writes:

"Please say to the meeting of welcome home to Moses Harman, the martyr of free speech, that I am glad with all his friends that his time of trial, so far as personal imprisonment is concerned, is over, and I hope it will be the last time he will be called upon to undergo such suffering. May his last days be crowned with prosperity and peace."

From Alice Hubbard.

Alice Hubbard, wife of Elbert Hubbard, editor of The Philistine, writes:

"You say Moses Harman is with you again. Here is my heartfull of gratitude and love."

From Eugene V. Debs.

Eugene V. Debs, former president of the American Railway Union, leader of the great strike for justice for the employés of the Pullman company which was crushed out by the unlawful and invasive interference of the United States troops by the order of President Grover Cleveland at the instigation of the great railroad corporations and against the manly protest of Governor John P. Altgelt, of Illinois—Eugene V. Debs, who himself was imprisoned by a United States judge without trial on a charge of contempt of court, writes:

"My heart will be with you and especially with the honored guest who will come to you fresh from the Temple of Fame with fresh luster added to his fair name. Moses Harman is a man with a soul and the only way the hirelings of capitalism can honor him is by persecution, and this he has borne like a martyr, gloriously crowning his life work and winning the love of every honest man and woman. Put your arms around the old man for me."

Peculiar Letter from a Bright Editor.

William Marion Reedy, the brilliant editor of the St. Louis Mirror, in reply to a request from the Harman reception committee to write a letter in regard to the unjust imprisonment of Moses, sent a communication which evidently was not intended to be read at the reception. Like many other intelligent persons who are unacquainted with LUCIFER, Mr. Reedy has gained an impression that the paper is devoted to salacious literature, and he writes:

"Broadly speaking, I am in favor of a free press, but I cannot say that I am in favor of an indecently licentious press."

No person familiar with the intelligent discussions of sexual hygiene as conducted in LUCIFER could regard them as "indecently licentious." It would be as absurd as it would be to refer to the report of a marriage of a couple or the birth of a child as "indecently licentious" because of the natural sequence of marriage or the necessary cause of the child's birth. Mr. Reedy admits his unfamiliarity with LUCIFER by writing:

"Still, while I know nothing definite, I am under the impression that Harman has printed some stuff, the salacity and ——" [The word used by Mr. Reedy and here represented by a dash is necessarily omitted for two reasons: (1) LUCIFER has never used that word in its columns and never will; (2) the use of that word in LUCIFER would make the paper liable to be held up on the ground that the word is obscene.] "of which brought him justly under the ban of the law for the abrogation of nuisances. As I say, I do not know, but that is the impression I have gained in some manner."

And then he adds what should be proof that his impression is false:

"Those copies of LUCIFER which I have seen do not appear to have contained anything that would bring the blush of shame to the cheek of innocence—or of guilt, for that matter, and you know that guilt blushes easier than innocence."

This latter testimonial of the cautious Editor Reedy surely is good enough.

From Editor William T. Stead.

Probably no editorial writer in the world is more widely known than W. T. Stead, editor of the London Review of Reviews. The following letter was written by Mr. Stead on October 17, 1906, to Lillian Harman, daughter of the editor of LUCIFER:

"I shall be very glad if you will send me LUCIFER regularly to 5 Smith's Square, Westminster, London, together with any other publications issued by you which, in your opinion, I ought to have to keep me posted as to the controversy between yourself and Mr. Comstock. As I think you may be aware, I was a personal friend of Miss Craddock, whose death was directly due to the way in which the Comstock law was administered."

Protest by May Walden Kerr.

In a Socialist paper, The Worker, of March 10, 1906, appeared a protest written by May Walden Kerr against the conviction and imprisonment of Moses Harman, in which the editor of LUCIFER was spoken of as follows:

"He is a clean, kindly, cultured old man. He has fought valiantly for many years the battle for the emancipation of woman—for her political, economic and therefore social freedom. He has done this from the highest motives—for the improvement of the human race.

"Burbank improves vegetables and flowers; others devote themselves to the breeding of fine stock; and the world applauds. Harman wants to have the human race improved, and the world says 'Sh-h-h!'

"Are not human beings of as much importance as pigs and potatoes? Is parenthood an indecent subject? Is the question of woman's rights and wrongs, of her freedom or her slavery, of so importance?

"I appeal to every woman who has a spark of independence in her make-up to use her influence in this case of Moses Harman. Wives of workingmen, wake up and do something! Think, talk, act! It isn't Moses Harman alone, nor the cause of woman's freedom alone, but the rights of humanity that are at stake."

From the Editor of "The Philistine."

It was expected that Elbert Hubbard, editor of The Philistine, would preside at the reception, but a lecture engagement prevented him from accepting the invitation. However, he showed his sympathy by sending $10 to assist in paying the expenses of the meeting. Here is his brief but characteristic letter:

"I have a lecture engagement in the East on January 1, so can't be with you, but here is $10 for the good work of freedom. My love to Moses."

To another member of the reception committee Mr. Hubbard wrote:

"I am just in from a lecture tour and find your kind letter on my table. I surely would be delighted to be with you on January 1, as you suggest, but I have a lecture date in New England on that day. Please give my love to Moses. So here is a hand-grasp over the miles."

From Dr. John E. Roberts.

The widely known and warmly loved minister of the Church of This World, Kansas City, Mo., writes:

"I had intended to visit Mr. Harman in prison—a la Jesus—and wrote him and Major MacLaughry to that effect, but being called away, I could not carry out my plan.

"I cannot be in Chicago January 1 to help welcome Mr. Harman home. Please tell him for me that I love, honor and respect him; that I feel that he is doing the work which lies nearest to my heart—namely, the liberation of mankind from tradition, superstition and convention.

"It is sad to think of, but the progress of the race is marked by Gethsemanes and Calvaries. Moses Harman has known the one. Let us spare the old sufferer from the other.

"I enclose my check for $5."

From the Free Speech League's Attorney.

To Theodore Schroeder, 63 East Fifty-ninth street, New York city, attorney for the Free Speech League, is due the credit of opening the eyes of several hundred earnest and zealous supporters of Comstock to the crimes against humanity and the cause of purity committed by the indiscriminate enforcement of the Comstock law. In a paper read at the conference of the National Purity Federation in Chicago on October 10, 1906, Mr. Schroeder called attention to the fact that the prurient enforcers of the Comstock law, instead of directing their attention to the suppression of obscenity, were persecuting the friends of humanity who are endeavoring to enlighten the public in hygiene and were denying the freedom to teach physiology. As a result the conference adopted a resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee which shall seek to have the law declare just what obscenity is, in order that the suppression of scientific and educational literature in regard to race culture may be made impossible. This resolution was signed by Sylvanus Stall, D. D., Theodore Schroeder, Mrs. Sarah F. Bond, J. B. Caldwell, Mrs. Rose Wood-Allen Chapman, Dr. Hattie A. Schwendener and Dr. Delos F. Wilcox.

Following is Attorney Schroeder's letter:

"Dear Mr. Harman: I rejoice with your other friends that you have reached the end of your incarceration for exercising your right of free speech. It is good for humanity that there are such as you who are willing to suffer that others may be warned of the progressive encroachment upon their liberties. If all yielded in slavish and unquestioning submission to legalized superstition and invasive statutes, humanity might never discover that most of its members are still barbarous enough to punish unconventional opinions, or those expressed in unprudish literary style. I am glad you are not such a shirker as the rest of us.

"Your last imprisonment was the means of my giving much thought to the legal status of our 'freedom of the press.' I was surprised to find that it is abridged upon several subjects in every state in the union. Since then I have delivered several lectures and have had several magazine articles published which are calculated to clarify the public vision and enlarge our liberties. By these means I have secured influential coöperation. I have much more work of the same kind in contemplation.

"Whatever good may come to the cause of liberty through these efforts of mine, it must in justice be credited to you as one of the fruits of your martyrdom. My efforts may not avail much, but to you it may be a little consolation to know that yours have not been wholly in vain. Where all submit to the standardization of the intellect, all are slaves, and mostly without knowing it. I am glad that, unlike myself, you do not belong to the great submissive mob.

"It speaks eloquently for the breadth of your heroism that you have never suffered imprisonment for anything you yourself had written, but only because of your willingness to give others a hearing. Only those deserve liberty who are willing to defend the liberty of others.

"Our present 'obscene' superstitions, like all others before them, will be outgrown in due time. When the public sanity shall have been restored the historian of the future will see to it that your name is enshrined in the hearts of humanity with the names of others who were denounced by the stupid elite of their time. A century or two hence your name will be listed with those of such martyrs of intellectual liberty as Socrates, Galileo, Copernicus, Bruno, Paine, Carlyle, Garrison and others of that royal band of the despised among their contemporaries.

"I hail you as the chief apostle of intellectual liberty of our time, because while you are willing to suffer imprisonment for the cause, the rest of us look on while anathema is hurled at you by the multitude, and the few other adherents to freedom's cause sacrifice only a few spoken or written words, the cheap contributions of our devotion."

DARES ALL FOR FREE LOVE.

Bearing on his shoulders the burden of 76 years as lightly as though they were no more than 50, Moses Harman has returned to his home, 500 Fulton street, after serving a prison sentence of one year imposed by the federal court for sending through the mails what was asserted to be improper printed matter. The objectionable articles, which dealt with the relations of men and women in the married state, were published in LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER, a small magazine which Mr. Harman has published for years.

Now that he is out of prison Mr. Harman says he will take up his work in connection with the publication just where he left off when he was sentenced, even though it again leads him to the prison doors.

Limited marriage, or at least marriage that shall bind no longer than love endures, and freedom for woman from slavery to her husband are the principal tenets of the creed which Harman has long advocated in LUCIFER and which proved objectionable as subjects for journalistic discussion to the federal authorities. Harman contends that when a man and woman cease to love each other they should not be expected to live together for the sake of appearances. He holds that the marriage vow "to love, cherish and obey" for life is immoral, because both parties to the contract know they cannot love each other forever. His teachings, Harman asserts, tend to exalt woman, permitting her to regard herself as a human individual and not as a mere annex of some man.

Harman's hair and beard are snow white, but his eyes burn bright with enthusiasm as he talks of his beliefs. He is determined in spite of the ten months he has served in prison, four months of the time in Joliet and six months in the hospital ward of the Leavenworth (Kan.) federal prison, equivalent in all to a full year's sentence, to resume the propagation of his views through LUCIFER.

"I have been a teacher all my life," said Harman last night, "and I should be worse than a coward now if I laid down my work and should be worse than a coward now if I laid down my work of spreading the plan of life which I believe is the only true one. I shall continue my work along the line I began it if I live, even though it take me back to prison."

During Harman's incarceration his daughter, Lillian Harman, has been publishing LUCIFER. She has had no trouble with the postal authorities, although she says the publication has printed the same kind of matter it did while her father was conducting it.

A reception to Moses Harman has been arranged for New Year's afternoon at the Drill Hall of the Masonic Temple. Among the speakers will be Rev. J. M. A. Spence, Rev. Walter Henry MacPherson, Rev. Paul Tyner, Dr. Alice B. Stockham and Mrs. Gertrude Breslau Hunt.

Harman says he was treated well at Leavenworth, but that at Joliet he was required to break stone nine hours a day, which for one of his age he considered severe labor.—Chicago Chronicle, Dec. 29.

LOVERS, NOT OWNERS.

In the New York World of December 16 is found a report that is very significant of the progress now being made by the advocates of freedom in love, self-ownership in love, in opposition to the old doctrine of mutual sex ownership and lifelong promises, as the basis of conjugal union:

DIVORCED HIS WIFE TO LIVE WITH HER—UNDER NO CONDITIONS WOULD SHE DWELL WITH HIM UNLESS THEY WERE LOVERS ONLY.

LINCOLN, NEB., Dec. 15.—Getting a divorce from his own wife, in order that they might live together, was the curious step taken by Robert F. Eaton in compliance with a letter from Mrs. Eaton, in which she wrote: "If we could live and work together as friends and lovers I would gladly wish to be with you again. Unless you get a divorce we can never do so."

When obtaining his decree from Judge Frost, Eaton declared that his wife was a devotee of magnetism and free affection. He introduced a letter containing the above assertion. It was signed "Yours for freedom and love, ANNA."

Another letter, evidently written in response to an answer to the above, contains the woman's views on matrimony. She writes as follows:

"Dear Robert: I received yours. Have been too busy to write until tonight, and can only write a short letter to you even now. I am very glad to hear from you. Desire to correspond with you until we meet. I am going to reply to a few things you say and I may seem unkind or severe, but you are so blind and so foolish by sentiment that you need plain talk, especially, from me.

"You say you are glad I have found some one to love, and be happy with, and some way or other I can't help but think you are married again. Now, see here, once for all, I am not married and have no intention to marry soon. I have found a few sweet, lovable men who would gladly marry me, and some hope I will yet decide to gladden their lives, but not yet. I have a work to do and am doing it.

"I don't believe in marriage any more. There is a higher law than the laws of church or state. Now, see, you and I. I know that you love me and desire to be with me; you know as well as I that I love you and desire to be with you. But see what a mistake and loss in every way our marriage was. Where if we had stayed as friends and lovers we would have been reasonably happy together, and as it is now I will never again live with you as your wife.

"If you get a divorce we can and will come together as friends and lovers, and when matters are righted, might even marry again, but the law of attraction only will hold us together. I will not tell you if I got a divorce in Deadwood, as you have not good sense enough to keep anything to yourself, but peddle everything you know or would write with the air of a much injured husband, &c., but I will write you a letter on which you can get a divorce, &c."

OWNING A WIFE.

That Russian in a Pennsylvania town who killed his wife and justified it in this sentence, "I have a right to kill my wife; it's nobody's business but my own," carried to an extreme length a still surviving and by no means uncommon theory of the marriage relation.

The Ten Commandments place in the same category "thy neighbor's wife" and "his ox," "his ass," "anything that is thy neighbor's." A good many well-meaning people look upon their own wife as in the same category with their domestic animals in the respect that she, too, is their personal property. Has not title passed in the marriage contract? Is she not "my" wife?

This idea of one's wife as his chattel is not inconsistent with the reality of an indulgent and affectionate nature in the man in the case. But it is inconsistent with the rights of the woman in the case—an adult, responsible human being and a free moral agent. It is the basis of the so-called "unwritten law"—the assumption by a man that a woman is not the proper or competent guardian of her own honor, and that he has a right, on proof or upon suspicion, to slay her and somebody else, as he would slay an ailing sheep of his flock and a sheep-killing dog.

Not all men and women are yet able to realize that the so-called possessive pronoun "my" sometimes denotes relation instead of possession. The phrase "my country," for instance, means a different thing when uttered by an American citizen than when uttered by the Bourbon who held that he was the state. "My wife" is a phrase like "my friend." The pronoun implies obligation and privilege, not the "right" to kill—or even to nag.—New York Evening Mail.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.
THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.
MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.
PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

HOME AGAIN.

After an absence of ten months and three days I find myself once more at my Chicago home, shaking hands and exchanging greetings with a few score friends and acquaintances who seem to be very glad to welcome me to liberty again—to such modicum of liberty as is allowed to those who do not belong to the elect and favored few who administer "law and government" in the United States of America, or the few who are the special proteges of the elect few who make and administer law and government.

While not claiming the character or the role of soldier in any sense, and while utterly opposed to war as commonly defined and practised, I feel much as I suppose a soldier feels on returning home after a brief but perilous campaign in an enemy's country, thankful that he still lives, that he brings back all his limbs, and that his health has not suffered irreparable injury.

On the morning of Dec. 26 I was met at the prison gate by near a dozen friends, most of whom live in Kansas City, Mo. From the prison I was conducted to the home of my old time friend and helper, S. R. Shepard and there entertained with a most excellent dinner and with company for two or three hours, as described somewhat in detail in one of the newspaper selections.

Then, conducted by Kansas City friends, I went to that city and was very kindly and hospitably entertained by mine host Dr. J. E. Smith, proprietor of the Bonaventura Hotel. After supper I had the great pleasure of meeting quite a number of friends whom I had not seen for some years—altogether the evening was one long to be remembered.

Among those who met me at the prison gate and who took part in the reception at Kansas City was John A. Laut, late of New York, who is known to many of our readers as an old soldier and fighter in the army of progressive reform, having been imprisoned several times at the instigation of Anthony Comstock.

Next day, Dec. 27, I was honored by another reception and dinner at the home of Dr. L. M. Hammond, at Rosedale, Kan., a suburb of Kansas City, Mo.

At 7:30 I bade adieu to my Kansas City friends and took the Santa Fe train for Chicago. Arrived there on time Friday morning and found waiting for me at the station at least twenty tried and true friends who greeted me as a long lost brother.

From the station most of this company came with me to 500 Fulton street where the remainder of the day and evening were spent in a most agreeable manner, comparing notes of events and experiences of the year now ending.

Sunday evening, Dec. 30, as per announcement, I had the pleasure of addressing the Chicago Social Science League, at its hall in the Masonic Temple, of which meeting the following, clipped from the Chicago Daily "Chronicle," is a fairly good report. The article is headed, Assails Prison Brutality—Free Love Editor Says Federal Convicts are Mistreated:

Emerging undismayed from the completion of his fourth term in a federal prison, Moses Harman, the veteran editor of LUCIFER, Chicago's free love organ, addressed over 200 of his followers yesterday evening in the Masonic Temple and bitterly arraigned the federal authorities for the brutality which he asserted exists in the penitentiaries.

"The people think they own the prisons," said Mr. Harman, "and that they are run for the benefit of society and for the betterment of the prisoners incarcerated in them. They are mistaken. The penitentiaries are owned by a gang of politicians to have a certain number of fat places as rewards to ward heelers and others for political scoundrelism."

The ex-prisoner gave a graphic description of the "dark hole" in which refractory prisoners are placed and with which he had been threatened because he had refused to be vaccinated. His refusal had finally been overcome by brutal force, he asserted, the operating surgeon striking him.

In the "dark hole," Mr. Harman stated, prisoners who infringe the prison rules are thrown for a period, sometimes as long as three weeks. They are chained to a post and only permitted to lie down for from two to three hours every day. The only food given them while they are in this place is a small piece of bread and some water.

"I have not the time to tell you," went on Mr. Harman, "of one-fourth of the brutality which is practiced in these prisons and which I have seen during the four terms which I have spent in jail during the last sixteen years."

At the same time the released editor said that during six months of his recent term of one year while he had been in the Leavenworth jail he had been treated more as an honored guest than as a prisoner and that the brutality which he had witnessed had been generally in other cases than in his own. One man, he said, had struck another prisoner over the head with a cane, had been sent to the "dark hole" for a week and emerged looking like a corpse.

However unpleasant may have been the prison experiences of the aged editor, who is at present 76 years old, they have not apparently altered his determination to continue the advocacy of those views for the exposition of which he became a prisoner. In a firm voice he asserted that he would never yield or be silent in his demand for the liberty of speech on all subjects.

"May all the powers protect me," he concluded, "from yielding to the American inquisition one iota. I will not veil or equivocate my words, but will still proclaim what I think on all subjects and insist on the right to do so unmolested."

The quotations in the above, purporting to be my own language, are by no means exact reproductions, and in some instances are misleading. I am anxious to do injustice to no one, hence would say here that the blow from the surgeon in the Joliet prison was not violent, and may have been intended as a shove rather than a blow, but under the circumstances it seemed to me very decidedly rude. My subsequent experiences with the surgeon caused me to have a better opinion of him than did the vaccination incident. I wish here to add that the incident related of the man sent to the dark hole did not occur at a federal prison but at the Lansing, Kan., state prison more than a dozen years ago.

The Chicago Daily Inter-Ocean made a somewhat similar report of the Sunday evening meeting, but less accurate in some respects.

On Tuesday afternoon of this week, at Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, a public reception was tendered the returning prisoner, which reception was a decided success in every particular. A half dozen addresses of twenty to thirty minutes each were made, the opening address being by Rev. McPherson, of the Chicago "People's Church." I think that is the name. Another speaker was Rev. Paul Tyner, former editor of the Arena, a man of national reputation in reform work. Another was Gertrude Breslau Hunt, of this city, well and favorably known as a lecturer on Socialistic subjects. Another was my old friend and attorney in the federal court, Seymour Stedman; also Parker H. Sercombe, editor of Tomorrow magazine, and several more. Many letters were read expressing regret at not being able to attend the meeting, but all sending congratulations to the ex-prisoner on his release.

Among these letters was one by B. O. Flower, editor of the Arena, Boston; one by Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, of "All Souls Church" and editor of "Unity," this city; one by Ernest Howard Crosby (New York); one by Bolton Hall, same; one by Dr. Alice B. Stockham, of this city, and many more. In fact, the reading of the letters by Jonathan Mayo Crane, of this city, was one of the chief features of the reception.

But now I shall have to stop this recital of what was one of the most memorable of all the experiences of my mortal life. We go to press tonight, and in order to get the forms ready no more time or space can be given to this issue of LUCIFER. It is hoped that a much fuller report will appear in our next.

For this time I can only say that I send glad, cordial and hopeful greetings to all friends who feel an interest in LUCIFER, its work and its old editor, and sincerely hope that the year now opening will be a happy and prosperous one to every reader and well-wisher of the old and yet ever young "Son of the Morning"—commonly called LUCIFER THE LIGHT BEARER. MOSES HARMAN.

MOSES HARMAN TALKS OF HIS REFORM WORK.

Moses Harman, 77 years old, publisher of LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER, of Chicago, was released from the United States penitentiary yesterday morning and there met by a committee of three men, and was escorted to Mr. Shepherd's home on Osage street, between Fourth and Fifth, where he was tendered a reception in the afternoon, which was attended by between forty and fifty Leavenworthians, most of whom he had never met.

After handshaking and receiving congratulations and expressions of sympathy and encouragement from each he gave them collectively a talk, mostly in answer to a question by a Times reporter as to what in particular he was seeking to accomplish.

Mr. Harman left at 3:15 o'clock for Chicago, where he will resume the publication of his paper, which his daughter, Lillian, has been editing during his absence. He expects to continue his agitation for woman's full recognition and equal participation in government so long as he lives.

Regarding his reform work he said to a Times reporter: "In carrying on my reform work I am actuated by the desire to educate and uplift humanity, to inspire it with high and noble ideals together with the aspiration and determination to attain the highest possible state of perfection; that is, to realize the kingdom of heaven on earth, so to speak, or what might better be termed the millennium. My hope to accomplish that object lies in woman.

"What first caused me to think of woman's possibilities for good if given the opportunity was that in all the petty persecutions for heresy endured by me while trying to hold or get employment, first as a preacher and next as a teacher, in order to support my family, men were the inquisitors and persecutors, while women were broad-minded and tolerant. With them it was more a question of heart than of head. They wanted a religion of the heart and soul—the men wanted a creedal religion of the head.

"The more I studied and observed and philosophized and pondered over this question the more I became convinced that the low moral and spiritual condition of the world was the legitimate fruit or consequence under infinite law of denying woman equal voice and power with man. The world can never grow better so long as the better half of the race is not allowed to exercise any choice or hand in directing its affairs.

"The men who first wrote the literature and creeds of the church charged woman with being an ally of the devil in bringing sin into the world and treated her as a slave, a chattel, unfit to have any voice in church or state and even unfit to sit at the table and eat with the lords and masters. But the stone thus rejected by the builders of church and state shall yet surely become the chief stone of the corner. This is my prophecy, and I am laboring with all my heart and soul, as a sort of John the Baptist, to prepare the way. Our race is advancing intellectually and mechanically, but degenerating spiritually, morally and physically. In woman lies all the hope for our future as a race. Woman can solve the problem, and it can be solved in no other way."—Leavenworth (Kansas) Times, Dec. 27.

The above report, while fair and complimentary, is not by any means a verbatim report of what I said to my Leavenworth friends. In reference to experiences as a preacher, it should be said that I did not seek employment as a minister of the gospel for the purpose of gaining subsistence for myself or family. Educated in a Southern Methodist college, I was urged to devote my life to the interests of that ecclesiastic organization. As indicated by the reporter, I soon dissolved connection with ecclesiasticism in all its forms and devoted my energies mainly to teaching in the public schools, where I met much opposition because of my religious, political and social heresies.

In passing, would say that the phrase "infinite law" is one that I never use. I have absolutely no conception of infinite law, in any proper sense of the word law. Man makes and tries to enforce law; Nature, or the cosmic forces, make and enforce none, so far as I know.

I do not claim to be a "John the Baptist," a "Socrates"—as some call me—nor a leader of any sort. I claim simply to be an earnest, honest investigator and worker in Nature's great school, hoping to get all the good that life has in store for me and to help others all I can to the same. M. H.

THE TWO THEORIES OF LOVE.

The sex question is essentially a question between two theories of love, the exclusivist and the varietist. Exclusivists are themselves of two kinds. Some hold that love is indivisible, and that you must either love a person with your whole heart or not at all. They consider it shocking and immoral even to try to love more than one, and their maxim is, "Put off the old love before you put on the new." The other kind of exclusivists believe that each person has a certain definite quantity of love to give away, which can neither be increased nor diminished. They think that if you love only one person, that person will get the whole of your love; that if you love two, each will get half; if you love four, each will get a quarter; and so on.

The varietist theory of love is just the opposite of this. It has been expressed with matchless force and clearness by the poet Shelley in a beautiful passage in "Epipsychidion." He says:

> "True love in this differs from gold and clay,
> That to divide is not to take away."

A little later he puts the idea still more forcibly:

> "If you divide suffering and dross, you may
> Diminish till it is consumed away;
> If you divide pleasure and love and thought,
> Each part exceeds the whole; and we know not
> How much, while any yet remains unshared,
> Of pleasure may be gained, of sorrow spared."

In a word, the varietist entirely denies that love is either indivisible or limited in quantity. He says that you can love many persons at once, and that by loving many you increase the share of each instead of diminishing it.

Which of these theories is the true one? There is so much prejudice on this question that the best way to get light on it is to begin by analyzing some other kind of love. That is a perfectly fair thing to do, for all our loves and desires are based on the nervous system, which is governed by certain uniform laws, and it makes no difference what kind of outward objects the nerves are stimulated by. Let us, therefore, analyze the love of music.

I hear a piece of music which greatly delights me. I want to hear it again, and then again, and so on. Probably I can enjoy it a dozen times in succession, especially if it is a complex and varied piece. Whatever kind of piece it is, however, if it continues to be played over and over again I shall at last begin to lose my enjoyment, then I shall feel satiated and annoyed, and at length it will become simply unbearable.

Now suppose that instead of hearing the piece played over and over without stopping, I hear it only at reasonable intervals, say once a day, but that I hear no other piece of music. In this case I may like the piece a good deal oftener, perhaps twenty days in succession, but yet the time will come when I no longer enjoy it. However long I make the intervals, the same result will always follow in the end.

How long my disgust continues will, of course, depend on how severe the dose has been. If I have had only a little too much, I shall soon be able to enjoy the piece again, but if I have had a very bad surfeit I may be unable to hear that tune again so long as I live.

But now suppose that instead of hearing the same piece over and over again I indulge in variety in music. Suppose I hear marches, symphonies, sonatas, waltzes and all kinds of music by all the different composers. If I do that, I shall never tire of any piece. Each will be a new delight to me, but it will still always be a pleasure to return to the old pieces. The first song I ever heard was "Auld Lang Syne," and I have heard it sung a thousand times since, often very badly, and often at the end of beautiful concerts, but I love it still.

Now will anyone deny that in analyzing the love of music I have analyzed sex love? Is it not true that a couple who love each other like turtle doves will, three months after the wedding, yawn with ennui in one another's presence, and breakfast together without speaking a word? If another man comes in, will not the woman's eyes sparkle and her cheeks mantle with pleasure, and will not her tongue go like a bell? Will not the sight of a pretty chambermaid at once restore the gaiety of the husband? I need not ask, for the whole literature of the age is the record of these things. They fill every comic paper, and make up the plot of every play. And would it make any difference, think you, if the lovers lived in a "free union" instead of marrying? We in the sex movement know better. We have seen a few exclusive free unions, and the persons so united have said that a jail is better than an exclusive free union.

Thus far nearly all will agree with me. They will admit that the parallel is complete between the love of music and sex love, so far as I have gone. But only a few persons in the world have yet been able to take the remaining step in the argument. All can see that the way to continue to love a tune is to hear other tunes, but scarcely any can see that the way to continue to love a woman is to love other women, and the way to continue to love a man is to love other men. Yet this has been proved not only by reasoning but by experience. There are many couples in America and other countries who believe in varietism and practice it. These couples are almost invariably happy to a degree which can hardly be equaled among any other class of people. Varietists, and none but varietists, have guessed the enigma of life.

If further evidence is needed, consider how the same rule holds in all other matters. You have a beautiful home in a delightful climate, but if you never leave it you will soon get weary of both home and climate. Take a change of air and scene, and then you will come back to your home and love it more than ever. You have a favorite study, but constant application has jaded you and destroyed your interest in your work. Read a few novels, or go to the theater a few times, and then you will enjoy your work as much as ever. It is the same in everything. "Variety is the spice of life." He who saveth his life shall lose it, and he who tries to keep any person's love to himself will soon find that there is nothing left to keep; but he who encourages his lover to love as many others as possible will always find that there is plenty of love left for himself.

E. B. Kerr.

WHEN GIRLS GO WRONG.

In dealing with the girl problem in the children's court, we are dealing largely with the moral and social question. The great majority of girls brought to children's courts are brought there for offenses involving their virtue; and however much tact and discretion may be required in discussing such questions, it would be a great mistake to entirely refrain from such discussion because of the delicacy of the subject, for its very delicacy emphasizes its extreme importance. Yet, speaking generally as a public officer, it is only natural that my talk on girls must concern the evil of their lives; and I am frank to confess this has always been an unpleasant thing to do. We prefer to associate our thoughts of a little girl with all that is pure and good, and I thank God we can do this in most cases.

I have sometimes been so misunderstood in things I have said that I hesitate to make statements which might be seized upon by the alarmist or the pessimist and exaggerated far beyond their real truth. The immoral girl is exceptional; and while I might sit down in the company of fathers and mothers, and speak frankly of my experience with some cases of girls, it would be necessary to almost constantly remind them that I was speaking of the exceptional case, and there was no occasion for becoming morbid, or believing, because there are such cases, it was any indication of an immoral condition in childhood. And yet, if we discuss the troubles of girls, we are compelled to discuss matters of sex, and the ignorance, thoughtlessness and viciousness of children with reference thereto. Ignorance of parents and children is the chief cause of vice in such matters. I will therefore have to preface what I have to say with this general statement: That every father and mother may take it as an absolute fact that nine-tenths of the school boys and girls in city and country are extremely curious regarding questions of sex; and I have no hesitation in stating that boys frequently discuss it in a most improper and unfortunate way. I have been amazed to find that this same condition exists among girls, to a much greater extent than I ever dreamed. I have learned this in the children's court, after repeated experiences in talking with little girls and their mothers in the privacy of my chambers, regarding their troubles brought to my attention by parents, officers and principals of schools. Of course, it is much better that such troubles should be corrected in the home and the school, if possible, without the intervention of the court. In the Denver Juvenile Court, however, as a rule, no complaint is ever filed of record in such cases; no child's name is spread upon any book, no legal formalities are had; but in the privacy of the judge's chamber, always in the presence of the mother, and preferably both parents, the girl is talked to in the kindliest and most friendly and confiding way. The purpose of this is first to get the entire truth from the child. The truth may be suppressed through too much false shame and through fear of detection and punishment or other severity of court or parents, and the natural mortification that must come from the exposure.

Nothing but love, the utmost kindness, sane teaching, sympathy and encouragement should ever be used in correcting a little girl who has fallen into moral delinquency. Such delinquency begins generally through association with a corrupt and older girl, confidences exchanged on forbidden subjects without knowledge of parent or teacher.

When we remember that children read the daily papers, that they frequently hear discussions among their elders which are more or less veiled, with the idea that they do not understand, that they are constantly in the streets, back and forth from school, directly or indirectly in contact with those much older than themselves, it is no wonder that at a very early age their curiosity may take a dangerous turn; therefore the necessity for companionship between mothers and their girls, and fathers and their boys; and if there be no father, a discreet and tactful mother may, without danger, take his place. I have had hundreds of children here in my experience who were more or less involved in such troubles, and I have made it an invariable rule to ask a girl in the presence of her mother, and to always ask the boy, if the parent has ever counseled and advised them in regard to such matters, and the invariable answer has been that their only information came from the street and from boy companions. And I can say, without hesitation, that not more than one child in twenty has ever been able to tell me that father or mother had given them any counsel or advice on one of the most important matters of life—pure and holy when properly understood, and one of the greatest sources of corruption in childhood, and therefore in manhood and womanhood, when unexplained or learned from the filthy, poisonous sources of the street.

Therefore we must appeal to the parents to do their duty, to know and understand their boys and girls, if we are to make them pure and clean, if we are to preserve the home and the manhood and womanhood of tomorrow.

The four thousand people whom I have divorced since I have sat upon the bench have been to me a much more interesting study than the three thousand children who have been brought before me for offenses, largely against property. But most of the trouble began in childhood, and here is where prevention had its chance and neglect stored up trouble for the future. Then nine-tenths of the girls go wrong because of the ignorance, carelessness and inattention of their parents. They do not all land in the red-light districts; in fact, a very small per cent reach this depth of shame. They are in society a part of its pollution and filth. They are responsible for many of the divorce cases, for the broken homes, desertions, sorrow, misery, blighted faith, despair and the great mass of social ills which infect society and of which we hear and know but little except through the suicide, divorce, desertion and the sensational exceptions which compel attention. But we feel it all, and we must all suffer in the end, as Jacob Riis so often says, unless our danger and our duty be pointed out by those who know, and that duty learned and lived in every home.

I say unhesitatingly that the great majority of girls who enter into a life of sin and are generally forced to the attention of the courts at 16 to 20, after the real mischief is done, begin their wayward courses as early as 11 or 12. It may be a small thing, it may not attract attention, but that it was there I have no doubt; and every wayward girl I ever talked to in my court has assured me of this truth. And this is the time we are trying in Denver to do as much of it as we can by knowing facts, and informing and educating home and parents. After the girl has passed adolescence, no more hopeless task presents itself than complete redemption. Handicapped in a thousand ways, outlawed, ignored by her sisters in the world, there is little charity and little hope. The boy, the man, is either forgiven, his sin forgotten, or even by some—the shame of it all—looked upon with a certain amount of sanction. Industrial homes and schools do much good, but they are a poor, feeble effort after all to correct mistakes that could have easily been prevented if learned in time.

An enlightened public sentiment should exact from men the same purity of life that is exacted from women. Boys and girls are more or less the creatures of example and influence, and until men and women set this example we may expect to encounter these awful difficulties in stored childhood.

The greater good that must come to our girls by constant pounding away at the parents as to their duty in the home, in time, before evil comes, is to my mind so tremendously important that I have here made no attempt to deal with the possibilities of industrial homes that deal with the soiled, broken and almost hopeless image.

We can do more to bring about happy marriages, to decrease divorce, desertion, infidelity and crime in a single generation by exacting and receiving from parents greater care and interest in their children than all the courts can do in a thousand years.

I am therefore convinced that this moral question among children is by far the most important problem that concerns the preservation of the American home; and beside it, the mere matter of the boy or girl who steals, or runs away, is of small moment. If, then, the nation decays—as it must if the American home is undermined—it is because mothers and fathers have proven false; it is because mothers and fathers have become traitors to childhood's sacred cause. Schools, churches, children's courts can do much, but they cannot supply the deficiency of hopeless homes, for there, in the bosom of the American home, is the little child; and there also is the State—for the child is the State, and the State is the child.

Preserve the child and you preserve the State; take care of the child, and the State will take care of itself.—Hon. Ben B. Lindsey.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

PHILIP G. PEABODY, Boston, Mass.—Hope all goes well with you, dear friend, and that you have much happiness in looking forward to the reunion with your friends—that is, with some of them; all those who love and honor you could not get very near to you at one time.

W. G. MARKLAND, 607 Cherry street, Chattanooga, Tenn.—Would like to be with you Jan. 1, but——. The historical formula, it seems, is gibbets today, monuments tomorrow. With you, they seem to alternate, and no doubt it is becoming monotonous, yet so but few are fitted for the formula, they are a marked class.

MARY E. WALKER, M. D., Bunkerhill, Oswego, N. Y.—Dear Mr. Harman: I am glad that a "happy New Year" is so soon to be yours. You know what the big book says about the "blessed for righteousness' sake," and if the restraining of what causes the degenerates is not in that line, what is? I advocate and talk these things, and have for many years.

DORA FORSTER.—Warm greetings to you on your release. All lovers of freedom rejoice, and the completed lesson of your sacrifice gives a hopeful New Year for the cause of free knowledge. Women, especially, honor the champions of light, for all women are more and more realizing the evils of darkness and ignorance in the vital things in which women are so deeply concerned. The women of the future will never forget all you have done to further enlightenment in the important subject of worthy parenthood, and to promote due honor of maternity. The mothers of the race have been serfs, and many do not yet fully know what freedom means; but when knowledge is no longer subject to persecution, but is spread abroad for all, the truth shall make us free.

D. L. BRAUCHER, Lincoln, Ill.—I desire to congratulate you on your release, even if it is somewhat delayed. You have my heartfelt sympathy, and I hope to see the laws so construed as to catch the guilty instead of the innocent. It is the same in regard to the use of the mails to defraud the public. It catches such good women as Helen Wilmans, and lets such criminals as Morgan go free. He has increased the stock of the steel trust $100,000,000, sold it out to the innocent public at 90 cents, then shortstopped from under the market till it dropped to 14 cents, when of course he could take it all in again and have a large surplus to his personal credit. That could not be called stealing, but in my opinion it is much worse in the perfidy and cold-hearted deception it displays.

What is all of this ruction I see stirred up over the suggestion of a prominent New York lady to adopt "trial marriages"? I see nothing in it to excite comment. I am nearly 74 years young and from my observation I cannot see that we have any other kind now or have had within my recollection. The record of the divorce courts will amply sustain that statement.

J. B. WILSON, M. D., Cincinnati, O.—I congratulate the cause of freedom, progress and human liberty that at all times in the history of the world it has had such men as you. I congratulate you upon your release from imprisonment and restoration to the liberty of which you were so unjustly deprived. You come again among men more honored than ever before. The government, not you, has been disgraced. Welcome back, my aged brother, into the ranks you so long have honored. I wish I could be in Chicago, to greet you in the public welcome that will be extended to you, and which you so royally merit and deserve. Let the esteem of your coworkers in the cause of liberty help to rejoy you for the weary toil, the lonely hours, the insult and humiliation of your imprisonment. I rejoice that you had vitality to endure it, and that you have come forth to receive, on all hands, words of affection and appreciation from those whose opinions are more to you than all the judgments of all the courts in the world.

I send you by this mail a copy of my book, "A Trip to Rome," which I have saved for you. I intended to send it to you while in prison, but feared you would not get it. In this book you will read of the imprisonment of Galileo and others who, like yourself, were the victims of ignorance and bigotry. I wish for you still many years of life to continue the grand work which you have so nobly begun and for which you have suffered so much.

LETTERS AND CARDS RECEIVED IN PRISON.

Sara Crist Campbell, 1; Flora W. Fox, 1; W. N. Miller, 1; Florence P. Buswell, 1; Mary E. Walker, M. D., 1; Philip G. Peabody, 4; Maude P. Hazelton, 1; John A. Lant (with poem—original), 2; Wegie Lacefield (with poem—original), 1; (Mrs.) H. J. Matheney, 1; Hulda P. Loomis, 1; W. W. Miller, 2; Geo. B. Wheeler, 1; Lillian Harman, 2; Annie E. Cummings, 1; N. C. Greene, 1; Emma B. Greene, 1; Florence M. Johnson, 1; W. O. Markland, 1; Albina L. Washburn, 1; F. W. Cotton, 1; Annie E. Parkhurst, 1; Thirza Rathbun, 1; C. L. Swartz, 1.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

HUGH O. PENTECOST lectures every Sunday morning at 11 o'clock at Lyric Hall, Sixth avenue, near Forty-second street, New York. Lucifer for sale at meetings.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,
THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.
Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. J. H. Greer, M. D.,
52 DEARBORN ST., CHICAGO.
Office Hours—9 a. m. to 6 p. m.; Wednesdays and Saturdays, 9 a. m. to 8 p. m.; Sundays, 9 a. m. to 12 m. Telephone Randolph 42.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,
DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

Adam's Diary.

BY MARK TWAIN.

The only fault to be found with Mark Twain's new book, "Extracts from Adam's Diary," is that there is not more of it, both pictures and print. It is Adam's daily record of his life from the time he found the "new creature with the long hair," which was a good deal in the way and which he wished would stay with the other animals, to the time he finally found that he could not be happy without it, and found that it was better to live outside of the garden with her than inside it without her. The story is very briefly told—too briefly—but every line sparkles with wit. The pictures, one to each page of text, are by F. Strothmann. Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Eve's Diary.

BY MARK TWAIN.

This is a companion volume to "Extracts from Adam's Diary," which thousands have laughed over. It purports to be a "translation from the original," and tells of Eve's experiences in the Garden of Eden and afterwards. It is a delightful whimsical satire, written in the vein the fun-maker's heaviest style. There is much to be amused at in Eve's naive observations and in her many experiments in natural science and psychology. Altogether, "Eve's Diary" is one of the cleverest and most amusing of Mark Twain's many absurdities.

With 55 full-page illustrations by Lester Ralph. Crown 8vo. Cloth, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasseburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The Ogo Tuna. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Presaid, 12c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Coming of Age.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation. American edition, cloth, prepaid, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

What the Young Need to Know.

A PRIMER OF SEX RATIONALISM.

BY E. C. WALKER.

SUGGESTIONS OF CONTENTS: Is There Necessity for This Knowledge? Analagous Dangers and Safeguards. Unwisdom of Custom-Sanctioned Ignorance. Teachers Better if of Opposite Sex. Divisions of the Subject. Definitions of Sex. Evolution of Sex: Differentiation. Reproduction Less and Less Perilous. Inestimable Value of Use. Joy Is Positive, Upbuilding. The Deciding Majority of Two. The Tendency to Multi-Narcotics. Reproduction and Social Happiness. Not so Many Children, but Better Ones. Legal Intrusion Has a Limit. Voluntary Complexity, and Health. Comparative Exemption of the Jews. The Upward March. Cure and Irremediable Punishments. Origin of the Shame of Sex. Derived from Other-World Mania. "The Son of God" and Sex. Faithful Followers of Jesus. Relation of Past Asceticism to Existing Type. Mental Slaves Are Not Investigators. Rotation in Human Endeavor. What is Immodesty? Primitive and Present Day Savage Customs in Dress. Civilised Customs and Costumes. What We Affirm on This Subject. Bathing and Dress. Asceticism and Honesty in Art. Arguments of the Puritan, Judge Phillips and Mr. Moody. To Take the Purity of Nudity in Art for Granted. Asceticism and Literature. Foolishness of Hiding Social Wrongs. Take off the Taboo.

Price, 15 cents.

MOSES HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

The Stellar Ray.

SUCCESSOR TO SUGGESTION.

The Stellar Ray is a magazine for thinkers. Discusses thought force, will power, astral science, occultism, all forms of drugless healing, brain building, the cultivation of mental forces, and the psychological and psychological principles that bring health, happiness and success.

The Stellar Ray advocates no creed, no dogma, no fad or ism. It stands for progress and freedom in all lines of modern thought. It is a practical magazine for those who think. It teaches how to live without disease or worry. It teaches how to have health without drugs or doctors. It teaches how to use the powers within one's self for success, for poise and self-mastery.

THREE MONTHS' TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION.

Write us a postal card as follows:

Editor The Stellar Ray, Hodges Building, Detroit, Mich.

Please enter my name as a subscriber to your magazine, on the following conditions: After receiving three numbers I will either—

(1) Promptly notify you to discontinue my subscription, in which case there is no charge for the three issues received; or,

(2) I will remit the subscription price, $1 (foreign, six shillings). I also reserve the privilege of canceling my subscription at any time, paying only for the numbers received.

Name .....

Address .....

1082

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Who Is the Enemy: Anthony Comstock or You?

BY E. C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.

THE "MORAL" CENSORSHIP—The Inspiration of the Censor; A "Protection" that Betrays; Utter Lack of Discrimination; Vain Decis of Facts; A Greater Wrong to the Child; Some Officers' Zeal; Imagined "Plots"; The Law as Administered; The Vicious Law of Obscene Libel; Obscene Libel and Expert Testimony; Judge and Jury and "the Facts"; Some Criticisms Answered; The Common Law Yesterday and Today; Wrong Principles of Action; The Censorship and the Bible; Moncure D. Conway on Censors; Where Lies Responsibility—on Censor or You? The Cause of Slow Advance; Sex a Mistake—"Somebody Blundered"; Superstition Not Seriously Crippled; The Worship of Death and Decay; Cancerlatic Eruptions of her Paste.

THE "FRAUD ORDER" FRAUD—Remarkable Deliverance by Judge Thomas; The Courts and the Constitution; The Persecution of "Freedom"; Grateful for Injuries Received.

THE CENSORSHIP OF SECOND-CLASS MATTER—The Department's Rules of Exclusion; Statistics of Official Financiering; Two Arguments About Government Socialism.

Price, 20 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

POEMS OF VARIED FEELING.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

The author is well known to the readers of LUCIFER, many of the poems in this volume having made their first appearance in our columns. The title well expresses the character of the work; the verses breathe of life and liberty and love; the charms of the seasons and the beauties of nature. The spirit of revolution, too, is voiced in "Liberty and the Commune," "In the Hour of Execution," "You Plebes Dead," and other poems. "To the Enemies of Free Speech"; "The Challenge of Liberty"; "A Ballade of Butterflies"; "The Reistering Knights"; "Father Damien"; "Four Loves"; "Death in Life"; "Looking on the Sierras"; "Mother-Heart," are a few titles taken at random, showing the varied scope of the work.

12 mo, cloth; gilt title; 160 pages; $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man." Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,

For the Superman and Superwoman, and The New Civilization,

2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, JANUARY 17, E. M. 307 [C. E. 1907] WHOLE NO. 1083

RECEPTION FOR MOSES HARMAN.

More than seven hundred persons assembled in Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, Chicago, on the afternoon of New Year's day to welcome Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, back to the liberty of which he had been deprived for more than ten months by Comstockian misuse of the anti-obscenity law.

The hall was filled to overflowing with intelligent men and women, and many persons who came late were unable to gain admission. It was a fervent and heartfelt greeting to the brave old worker for the betterment of humanity, and a strong and emphatic protest against his persecution and imprisonment on the false and absurd charge of circulating improper literature through the mail.

Herman Kuehn, chairman of the Harman reception committee, presided. Virna Winifred Walker, granddaughter of Moses Harman, played a selection on the piano, after which the Rev. Walter Henry MacPherson, pastor of People's Church, South Chicago, was introduced. Mr. MacPherson made an eloquent protest against the imprisonment of Mr. Harman and a strong plea for liberty of speech and press. He spoke of the importance of the spread of the knowledge which Mr. Harman was persecuted for publishing. He declared the cause of liberty is too valuable to be surrendered so easily, and added: "If Mr. Harman is sent to jail again they must send me, too."

Later Chairman Kuehn remarked that if all believers in freedom felt as Mr. MacPherson did it soon would become impossible to send any one to jail for expressing his opinion. He asked all in the room who were willing to go to jail themselves if Mr. Harman should be sent there again to rise. Nearly every person in the room rose.

Lucinda B. Chandler, one of the "Old Guard" of free thought and free speech, spoke of the great progress made in the last half century in free discussion of the rights of women in the sexual relations. She told of attending a meeting many years ago at which an address was delivered to women on their marital relations. Most of the women, she said, held their hands before their faces in shame at hearing such matters discussed openly. But at the recent National Purity Conference, held at Abraham Lincoln Center, Chicago, she noticed that there was a strong demand for more education and freer discussion of the sex question, and that the address by Theodore Schroeder, attorney for the Free Speech League, delivered at that conference, in which he denounced the persecution of sex reformers by Comstock and his prurient allies, was enthusiastically applauded and was pronounced by many persons the best speech delivered there. Comstock, by the way, is a member of the National Purity League, but the great majority of its members are out of sympathy with him in his methods of persecution, which tend to the promotion of ignorance and the increase of impurity.

Letters of sympathy to Mr. Harman were read by J. M. Crane. They came from the Rev. J. M. A. Spence, pastor of People's Church, Aurora, Ill., who had expected to speak at the meeting but was kept away by illness; Elbert Hubbard, editor of the Philistine; Alice Hubbard, his wife; Horace Traubel, editor of the Conservator; B. O. Flower, editor of the Arena; Leonard D. Abbot, former editor of the Literary Digest; Bolton Hall, the Single Tax philosopher; Ernest H. Crosby, disciple of Tolstoy, peace advocate, philosopher and former judge of the International Court in Cairo, Egypt; Eugene V. Debs, former candidate for president on the Socialist ticket; Dr. Alice B. Stockham, author of "Tokology" and other medical books for women; the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, pastor of All Souls' Church, editor of Unity and founder of Abraham Lincoln Center, Chicago, and many other persons of prominence in efforts to uplift humanity.

Parker H. Sercombe, the original, plain-speaking and aggressive editor of Tomorrow Magazine, was the next speaker. He declared we have no freedom of speech. "We can speak freely," he said, "only so long as we say what others want us to say. If I were to go down to Atlanta and speak and write freely on the negro problem I probably would be killed in less than twenty-four hours. The cry is made that we are trying to break up the home and destroy families. Anything which will not cohere by its own nature can not be made to cohere by compulsion. The family will cohere because of mother love and father love, by natural cohesion. Court and church power are not necessary to hold it together."

The Rev. Paul Tyner, former editor of the Arena, openly declared that it might not be a bad thing if all prisoners were released from the jails, because a very small proportion of the criminals are there.

Gertrude Breslau Hunt, recently a candidate on the Socialist ticket for State University trustee, began her speech by remarking that perhaps she ought to apologize for never having been a prisoner in jail.

An intermission of fifteen minutes followed, during which nearly every person in the hall came forward and shook hands with Mr. Harman, congratulating him on his restoration to liberty and wishing him many more years of life to carry on his work for the welfare of humanity.

After the intermission, Seymour Stedman, the attorney who defended Mr. Harman in the federal district court, gave a brief history of the case and told how he was prevented by the court from introducing any evidence for the defense.

Hulda Potter Loomis followed with a few remarks on the unjust conviction of Mr. Harman, and then introduced him to the audience.

Mr. Harman had prepared a written address which he expected to read, but he was so deeply moved by the cordial demonstration of sympathy that he merely spoke briefly in defense of his work.

* * *

The following are a few of the many letters read at the reception. Others will appear in a pamphlet containing speeches, letters, etc., which we shall issue in the near future.

From Bolton Hall.

Bolton Hall, philosopher and author of "Even as You and I," "The Game of Life," etc., writes:

"Only imperative necessity prevents my being with you to honor Moses Harman and to greet the glorious army of the martyrs and the goodly fellowship of the apostles of liberty.

"I think Mr. Harman's courage of his convictions carries his expression sometimes farther than is needed for clearness, but I suppose some one must go out to defy the Philistines as well as to fight, and we who are safe at home must thank those who champion our cause."

From Dr. Alice B. Stockham, M. D.

The veteran author, publisher and speaker sent this message of good will and cheer:

"Greeting to all friends and especially to Moses Harman, of whom we may say that 'His heart is as great as the world, but there is no room in it to hold the memory of a wrong.'

"Race development progresses primarily through an educated parenthood. Men should be educated as husbands, women as wives, and both as parents. This education requires special branches in the curricula of school, besides the circulation of scientific literature that gives essential knowledge.

"The demand of the hour is more light—more knowledge upon hitherto forbidden topics, and the freedom guaranteed by the constitution of the United States to disseminate this knowledge. May this occasion, this greeting to Moses Harman, be significant in its purpose—demanding that the light of all truth and all knowledge shall be free to those who seek it."

From Alice Stone Blackwell.

Alice Stone Blackwell, associate editor of the Woman's Journal, Boston, Mass., and daughter of Henry B. Blackwell and Lucy Stone, the veteran abolitionists and pioneers of woman suffrage, wrote as follows:

"I heartily congratulate Moses Harman upon his release from prison. His sentence to a year in the penitentiary was a gross miscarriage of justice.

"My attention was forcibly drawn to the arbitrary way in which the postal officials were dealing with him when an issue of his paper was refused transmission through the mails because it had copied an editorial from the Woman's Journal. That editorial was afterwards submitted to Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Jane Addams and a number of clergymen, all of whom declared that they could not see the slightest impropriety in it. It did not discuss social questions at all, but was merely a criticism of the methods of the post-office. It had been allowed to circulate freely through the mails in the Woman's Journal. But as soon as it was copied into LUCIFER the Chicago postal officials pronounced it indecent and unmailable, and the higher postal authorities at Washington upheld their decision.

"Mr. Harman is entitled to the respect of all who esteem unselfishness, sincerity and courage, whether they agree with his opinions or not. In my judgment, some of the doctrines preached in his paper are highly objectionable, but it is a thousand times more objectionable that the right of free discussion should be denied to any doctrines, however erroneous. Yours for a free press."

From the Rev. J. M. A. Spence.

Mr. Spence, though unable to be present as announced, expressed his readiness to "stand up and be counted" as a friend of the Man and of the Cause.

"AURORA, ILL., Dec. 31, 1906.—My Dear Mr. Harman: It is a cause of keen regret to me that I am unable to be present and take part in the welcome to be extended to you tomorrow. For the past two days I have been suffering from a severe attack of asthma, which prevented my speaking in my own pulpit yesterday and which necessitates my remaining within doors for some days to come.

"Disappointed as I feel in not being able to be with you and those who assemble at Masonic Temple to welcome you home, I rejoice with you all in the growing power of free thought and of the cause of a better born humanity, whose ultimate triumph is as certain as the stars in their courses.

> "'These things shall be! a loftier race
> Than e'er the world hath known shall rise,
> With flower of freedom in their souls,
> And light of knowledge in their eyes.'

"The gathering tomorrow marks an epoch in our progress toward this goal. Your imprisonment, apart from the physical discomfort and injustice from which you suffered, is a cause for congratulation. It has called attention to you and your work. It has enlisted the support of many who would otherwise have remained indifferent to the encroachments being made upon the liberty of the press. It has aroused all who are aware of the iniquity perpetrated under guise of 'morality' and who have a passion for truth and reality to more resolute efforts in overthrowing the forces of oppression and ignorance from which humanity suffers.

"Oppression and ignorance, these are the evils from which flow all misery and all wrong. Freedom and knowledge, these are the possessions without which all others are meaningless and life itself is vain. Long may you be spared to contend for the principles so dear to your heart and to the hearts of an increasing number of your friends, among whom I am happy to inscribe myself."

From B. O. Flower.

The editor of the Arena, Boston, Mass., expressed his opinion of the attempted suppression of LUCIFER in the following letter to the reception committee:

"In my judgment, Mr. Moses Harman has been the victim of a despotism as odious as that practiced by the government of the Czar or by the Sultan of Turkey. It is difficult to conceive how any healthy or normal mind could imagine that the cause of sound morality could be advanced by attempting to suppress the rights of those who are striving to abolish conditions that render possible prostitution within the marriage bonds.

"The action of the postal authorities in their autocratic rulings seems to me to indicate on the part of the censors prurient and evil minds, and a distrust of the free discussion of vital questions —which is absolutely essential to healthy growth and true morality— that might be in harmony with medieval concepts, but is in direct opposition to fundamental ideals of democracy. The attempt to destroy or to prevent freedom of speech and that healthy discussion of grave and fundamental questions that is absolutely essential to a sane, healthy and normal morality, is one of the most ominous signs of the present period of unethical tendency, unreasoning prejudice and bigotry. Believing with Thomas Jefferson that error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it, I am most unreservedly opposed to the present attempt to abolish one of the greatest and most fundamental victories won by democracy.

"In the case of Mr. Harman, the persecution inaugurated by the Chicago postal officials seems to me to have been peculiarly odious, for not only was it an attack upon the principle of free discussion of great and vital questions, but it was an attack upon a man who was consistently fighting against what he held to be sex debauchery. I cannot imagine how any man could be sexually aroused or inflamed at anything that has been published in LUCIFER. This cannot be said of the Bible, or of the great classics, or of a vast amount of the present-day literature and periodicals being published.

"One may not believe as does Mr. Harman, one may indeed differ radically with him in regard to many of his sexual ideas, but no one can, I think, charge him with publishing erotic literature, or of giving place to anything that indicates a corrupt, vicious or sensual imagination on his part. Indeed, his writings everywhere evince the bold, insistent and conscience-overmastered brain of the radical who is completely dominated by an idea that he believes to hold redemptive potency for the race; and when the government imprisons such a man—a man whose sole desire is to better the condition of the people, to ennoble and not to degrade—it follows in the footsteps of the criminal governments and ruling powers of despotic ages and lands that since the dawn of history have stoned the prophets and persecuted those who have striven to lift humanity to purer heights.

"The action of the narrow-visioned, bigoted officials who acted as postal censors should arouse all friends of free institutions and lead them to consecrate life's best gifts to the cause of that wholesome freedom of speech which is the handmaid of true morality."

A QUESTION OF LIBERTY.

Address on occasion of reception to Moses Harman on his release from prison, New Year's Day, 1907, Masonic Temple, Chicago.

BY THE REV. WALTER HENRY MACPHERSON.

It seems altogether fitting and proper that this meeting should be opened with prayer, and I am happy in being able to express my thoughts in the words of a poem written by our brother, George E. Bowen, a poet-prophet of the new time.

> O Giver of all gifts! I plead
> Nor power, nor pelf, nor place.
> How less and less their pride I need
> To grow in daily grace.
>
> Be this enough—the strength to bear
> A comrade's weary cross!
> A cheerful heart, devout to share
> A weaker fellow's loss.
>
> Send not unto my idle want
> The pleasure kings may crave;
> Let manhood rise, with righteous taunt,
> My strength and soul to save.
>
> Rather unto my longing lend
> The fiber and the force
> To be with poverty the friend
> Through all its cheerless course.
>
> Keep not for me a crown of gold,
> A conscienceless reward,
> Nor count my wasted service sold
> For counterfeit, O Lord!
>
> But give me grace to master here
> The vanity of kings;
> To hold my fellow men more dear
> Than worlds of jeweled things.
>
> Yet more than all the little lack
> Of comfort now I share,
> Give me the strength to turn not back,
> Bright wreaths of ease to wear.
>
> For men are less than men who bend
> To laws by hate ordained.
> Oh, give me power such bonds to rend,
> That love may live unchained.

It seems to me that the final stanza of this prayer-poem expresses the secret of the strength of the grand old man whose imprisonment and final release has furnished us an opportunity to honor ourselves by meeting in this place to do honor to him. Not that he needs any words of ours to sustain him in the faith of the justice of the cause for which he has gladly suffered. I believe that Moses Harman is above and beyond either the praise or blame of men. But we would be worse than the tools of injustice that sought to destroy this lover of little children, and through them of all humanity, did we not show by some means our appreciation of his sacrifice made for us and for our children and our children's children.

I do not suppose that every one in this audience fully agrees with Moses Harman in his methods of teaching, or in the means employed to bring the results we all yearn for. I do not know that I myself do. I confess that I had barely more than heard of him before his sentence to imprisonment for one year at hard labor. But when I did read of that gross miscarriage of justice, my soul knit to his, and I sent him a message across the miles that was designed to make him feel that his death would not leave the cause for which he had lived and labored voiceless. I did more than that; I began at once to champion his cause in public, and laid the case of this grand old martyr before the people of my congregation. I told them then what I tell you now, that I was ashamed of the fact that I, too, was not in prison; for what I had only thought, this man had dared to say and live. I reminded them of the occasion when Henry D. Thoreau went to prison rather than pay what he considered to be an unjust tax. Ralph Waldo Emerson went to see him while he was in jail, and as Emerson peeked through the bars he said: "Why, Henry, what are you doing in here?" And Henry said: "Why, Ralph! what are you doing out there?" And I said that this old man might well ask every preacher and teacher and doctor in the land what they were doing on the outside, and he on the inside, because they had failed in their work of enlightening the people. But I went further and I told them then what I tell you now—if they send this old man to jail again they will have to send me, too! And I wish that I might pause long enough here to give every one in this audience a chance to stand with me while I say again: If they send this old man to jail again they will have to send me, too! For this is not a question of the means employed by Moses Harman; this is not a question of whether you agree with him or not; it is a question of liberty, of free speech and a free press. If any man or any set of men have power to stifle a voice or muzzle a press it is only a step to the place and time where they will not hesitate to break up such meetings as this. I demand a free press and free speech that shall be free indeed. I demand the right to express myself on any subject in the way I believe best expresses me, and not in the way that some other man says I shall express myself. And I demand nothing for myself that I do not demand every other person shall have the right to on the same terms.

There are years that lift themselves out of the centuries. It was in such a year that Moses Harman went to prison. Nothing that has happened in the year that has past did as much to endear it to memory of humanity as the sight of this bravest soul in America taking his cause and our cause—the child's cause, the cause of the free woman that is to be, the cause of all humanity—through a prison. And as there are years that lift themselves out of the centuries, so there are days that lift themselves out of the years. So this day lifts itself out of the years of my life, and I doubt if I or any of us will ever attend any meeting more full of promise for the future, more pregnant with possibilities for the race.

DELIVERANCE TO THE CAPTIVES.

Address on occasion of reception to Moses Harman on his release from prison, New Year's Day, 1907, Masonic Temple, Chicago.

BY PAUL TYNER.

I am happy in the privilege of being joined with the friends of Moses Harman here today. I am happy, first, that I have part in this simple human gladness over a brother's release from imprisonment and restoration to liberty. We were bound in his bondage; we are free in his freedom. In a way, I wish that this gathering might become prophetic of that great day when, the ancient scripture being fulfilled by the coming of Christ in the heart of man, "deliverance to the captives" shall be proclaimed with the preaching of the gospel to the poor, the recovering of sight to the blind, the healing of the broken-hearted, the setting at liberty of them that are bruised,—that "acceptable year of the Lord."

If I read aright the great humanity of the man, the new humanism that (under and over all personal feeling and under and over all emphatic approval of Moses Harman's particular course of action) stirs all our hearts to this gathering in his honor, we will honor him best and honor ourselves by working toward the day when we shall mark with welcome and encouragement, sympathy and cheer, the emergence of every man (and especially every woman) from durance to freedom. Those that languish in our jails may be guilty of crimes, "malefactors" in the old Calvinistic phrase; but it is worth asking ourselves if there is a blacker crime in code or calendar than our cold-blooded and cowardly subjection and subjugation of our erring brothers to the spiritual degradation and the moral mutilation of enforced imprisonment, enforced servitude, brutal debasement of our present penitentiary system! "I was in prison and ye visited me not!" says Jesus, picturing the inevitable answer, when the Soul of Man shall sit in judgment on the Ways of Men. Are we not all guilty of the indictment so long as we calmly acquiesce in the continuance of the torture-cure for criminals—criminals that are the logical product of systematized and intrenched social injustice? Are not the prisons and jails that blot our twentieth century civilization but lingering vestiges of the baronial castles and royal bastiles of feudalism? Is not the social system that cages men in torture chambers here twin to the dogma that so savagely condemns them to an endless hell hereafter?

I have not known Moses Harman very long, but friends of mine who have known him long and intimately tell me he is as pure-minded, as clean-lived, as kind-hearted and as brave a man as ever lived. He shows it in his face; he has proved it in his actions. With the loyalty and perseverance of the old saints and martyrs, he has stood by his convictions; taught what he believed to be true; battled for what to him seems right; willingly endured chains, stripes, calumny, objurgation, for conscience's sake, and above all suffered and kept kind. And these be the tests and tokens by which, in the long run, goodness and greatness are recognized among men.

Mr. Harman was locked up for a twelvemonth in Joliet and Leavenworth prisons for "immorality," as I understand. Morality, morality, what crimes are committed in thy name! And in what does his "immorality" consist? Is it not that in the pages of his paper, LUCIFER, he, in clear, calm and candid fashion, honestly and consistently pleads for purification and perfection in the relations of the sexes? that he champions the great first right of every child born on the planet to be well born? Incidentally to the intelligent discussion of the psychology of sex—to the fuller knowledge and understanding of the facts on which his plea is based—he seems to have questioned the final and ultimate perfection of the present stage of our customs and arrangements in this particular. To a large degree we have abolished pains and penalties for the questioning or rejection of religious or political dogmas. Persecution and prison still threaten the reformer bold enough to suggest a possible further evolution of the institution of marriage. No wonder Jesus wept! No wonder Voltaire smiled!

It's very likely that I do not agree with Mr. Harman in all his ideas nor in all his methods. But I am very frank to say that I agree with Mr. Harman, as I agree with the Apostle Paul, in conviction of the importance of this subject. Whence come all wars and fightings everywhere? all oppression of the poor? all wantonness of the rich? all cankering care and corroding vice? Whence, but of the lusts that war in our members? Like Mr. Harman, I am unable to see that relations rooted in lust, and so impure and degraded in their whole nature, become pure and moral, sacred and sanctified, by the performance of either ecclesiastical ceremony or civil contract. Equally, I am unable to see that any relation illicit and impure in itself, as between the parties immediately concerned, becomes pure or moral by the absence of ceremony or contract.

But the learned judge and the sapient jury that sent our friend to jail deemed him immoral—vile and deserving of durance vile. They were cleverer than the good lady in London who complimented the great Dr. Johnson on his dictionary, then newly published:

"Let me congratulate you, Doctor," she said, "that in your great work there is not a single naughty word!"

"Have you been looking for naughty words, Madam?" queried Ursa Major.

In a newspaper reference to this prosecution—rather persecution—I see it stated that the Law "imprisoned Harman and suppressed LUCIFER." But, no! The presence of our friend here today proves that the Law no more suppressed LUCIFER than it suppressed Arcturus and Orion. It might as well undertake to suppress Plato and imprison the Pleiades as to suppress Harman and his paper.

Why, even the turnkeys and wardens at Leavenworth, I am told, showed shame in the attempt to disgrace this good gray prophet, and treated him rather as guest than prisoner. Socrates told his friends who wanted to know what they should do with him when he died, that they could do what they pleased with him, if they could catch him. So Harman may say to Institutionalized Ignorance, "Lock me up where you like if you can catch me, but you'll have to confine Liberty and lock up Love, you'll have to manacle Truth and chain Progress, before you really lock up Harman."

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1227.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:

E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

The addresses delivered and letters read at the New Year's day reception will be published in a pamphlet which we hope to have ready for delivery soon. Included in this pamphlet will be letters which were omitted for lack of time, and the speech which Moses Harman had intended to make, but which he did not have time or strength to give. The reception was from 2 until 6 o'clock in the afternoon, and his speech was set for the last on the program, but the physical and mental strain was so great that he made only a short, extemporaneous talk.

Portraits of some of the speakers and writers have been promised, and we hope to be able to present many of them. The frontispiece will be a new portrait of Moses Harman and his little grandson. The photograph of them taken a year ago, when the child was only four months of age, has appeared in several publications, including Physical Culture, Tomorrow Magazine and LUCIFER. This picture is credited by my father with having had much influence for good at both Joliet and Leavenworth.

We hope and believe that this pamphlet will be not only an interesting souvenir for our friends, but that it will do effective work for free speech and free press.

We do not know just how large or how costly the work will be, but presume the price will be 25 cents for a single copy, with material reduction when ordered in quantities. We hope those who are interested will let us hear from them as soon as possible, and trust the demand will justify our issuing a large edition. L. H.

OFF FOR CALIFORNIA.

Giving heed to the advice of friends far and near, I have concluded to pass the rest of the winter on the Pacific Coast, provided proper arrangements can be made. My present intention is to go direct to Los Angeles or San Diego, then work northward—as far, perhaps, as Seattle—before returning to Chicago. Wishing to make my expenses, as nearly as possible, while on this trip, I now ask the friends of LUCIFER living at the various towns and cities on the coast to write me as soon as convenient, in regard to the prospect of doing business in our line at their respective places if I should stop with them for a week or two. Especially do I make this request of friends living at San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, San José, Portland, Ore., and Seattle, Wash.

Until further notice please address me at Los Angeles, care C. James, 128 South Olive street, or at this office, from which places letters will be forwarded. M. HARMAN.

A GOOD AND BRAVE MAN GONE.

Ernest Howard Crosby, one of the leaders of the American phalanx of the world's grand army of progressive reform, has passed from mortal sight and hearing, forever more.

This news comes to his many personal friends here in Chicago like a thunderclap from a clear sky. That the tall, strong, manly form of Ernest Howard Crosby, with the fire of youth still in his eye and the elasticity of young manhood still in his athletic limbs, should, without warning to his thousands of friends and admirers in many lands, be laid low in death, seems almost if not quite incredible.

Less than two weeks ago a letter from this man was read at the meeting in Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, expressing regret that he could not be with us on that occasion, but not a word of intimation that he was not then in the enjoyment of his usual vigorous and buoyant health.

In last week's The Public, in which journal he had long been a prominent contributor, appears the announcement that "Ernest Howard Crosby died suddenly of pneumonia in Baltimore on the morning of Jan. 3." With this announcement appears a somewhat extended account of his life and work, including numerous selections from his many published books. Lack of space and press of other matter alone prevent our following the example of The Public in making this issue of LUCIFER an Ernest Crosby number.

Peace and honor to the memory of the manly man whom LUCIFER's editor and patrons are glad and proud to number as one of its distinguished friends and generous helpers. M. H.

WHO AND WHAT ARE NOW ON TRIAL?

In June, 1905, the editor of LUCIFER was put on trial in one of the federal courts of this city, charged with sending obscene literature through the public mails. Acting under instructions of the presiding officer, Kenesaw Mountain Landis, the trial jury found the defendant "guilty as charged in the indictment."

Thereupon "the court" sentenced the "prisoner at the bar" to one year at hard labor in the Illinois state prison at Joliet.

At considerable expense for court fees, "transcripts of record," attorney fees, etc., an appeal was taken to the "United States Circuit Court of Appeals," presided over by three men, whose names are not now recalled.

Some time in January last the case came up for hearing before said Court of Appeals and was argued by Seymour Stedman for the appellant and by District Attorney Marston for the lower court. Without giving any reasons for their action the Appellate Court affirmed the finding of the trial jury and the sentence as pronounced by the lower court, denying the motion for a word of defense by the prisoner himself, as the district court had already done.

These preliminary facts are already known to most of the readers of LUCIFER, as is also the subsequent history of the case, namely, that the said editor was taken to the Joliet state prison on the 26th of February, 1906, and there confined at hard labor until the 28th of June following, when by order of the Attorney-General at Washington, D. C., he was transferred to the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas, and there put into the prison hospital, from which hospital and prison he was discharged on the 26th of December, 1906.

This brief historical statement covers the main features of a case that attracted considerable attention in its earlier stages, and now that the official record thereof has been closed, now that the penalty has been paid and the prisoner restored to liberty once more, it is reasonable to suppose that the original movers in the case, the censors of press and mails, the prosecutors, the judge and jury, and the general public who seemed by their silence to approve the sentence and its execution—it is presumable that all those actors and factors in the prosecution think there is nothing more to be said thereon; that the last word has been uttered; the last act performed and the curtain rung down on this little drama of human life, of human transgression and of legal and just punishment therefor (as the postal inquisitors, the federal court and their friends no doubt would term it), and that no appeal, no rehearing of the case, is now possible.

* * *

And such, without reasonable question, would be the true status of the case if the Postal Inquisition, the courts that do its bidding and the popular sentiment that upholds the said inquisition could have their way. That this is the aim and purpose of what is sometimes called the American bureaucracy—including in that term not only the punitive arm of the executive branch of the Washington government, but the entire executive branch itself; also the entire judiciary branch of the general government; also including that part of the legislative branch known as the Senate, or upper house of Congress—since the judiciary branch of the federal government is simply the creature of this upper house of Congress and of the chief executive—the aim that none of the acts of the American bureaucracy should be amenable to review, to examination or to criticism by its victims or by the general public, seems too evident to need additional proof.

Fortunately—as some of us think—we are living in the twentieth instead of the fifteenth century of the Christian era.

Thanks to the spirit of revolt against dogmatic authority and paternalistic despotism that followed the "revival of learning" in the sixteenth century—after the long night of priestly rule in church and state—it is now impossible to completely tie the tongues and stop the pens of the political, the religious and the social heretics, as was done by the other inquisitions of which our postal censorship of press and mails is the logical and legitimate successor.

One of the evidences that we are not living in the fifteenth or fourteenth century of the Christian chronology is or was the mass meeting at Drill Hall, one of the larger halls of the monster Masonic Temple of this city, on New Year's day. The fact that the acts of the aforesaid censorship, and of the federal courts that do the bidding of that censorship, could be publicly criticised and condemned in speeches and in letters, spoken and read at that meeting by the leaders of opinion—including Christian ministers and editors of national reputation—this fact may be mentioned as one of the indications that the unholy alliance of church and state no longer wields the power over the souls and bodies of the people as it did four or five hundred years ago.

Another sign of the times, pointing in the same direction, is found in such articles as the following, clipped from the Sunday Record-Herald, Jan. 6, 1907, headed, "Turn Light on Judges—Congress Likely to Resent Annulment of Laws as Unconstitutional":

"Before the winter is over considerable is likely to be heard about federal judges who overturn laws on constitutional grounds, after the ablest lawyers among the nation's statesmen have spent weeks and months in perfecting the same. Recent decisions with respect to the employers' liability act have already started the discussion.

"In his last annual message to Congress the President referred to the almost nonchalant ease with which federal judges declare unconstitutional measures which have been 'solemnly' considered by Congress.

"Almost everybody has forgotten that Judges Evans and McCall were once members of the lower house of Congress. Neither of them made a mark as a constitutional lawyer. The fact is being pointed out that many occupants of the federal bench in the lower courts today are men who, if their terms were to expire this spring, would be known as 'lame ducks.' Most of them have been appointed simply to take care of them when they get out of a job. Judge Quarles of Wisconsin, McComas of Maryland and Pritchard of North Carolina were all senators who had lost out when elevated to life positions on the bench.

"Aside from Judges Evans and McCall, there is Judge Dayton of West Virginia, who was a member of the House.

"Few, if any, of these judges when in Congress ever cut any figure in constitutional debates.

"Inasmuch as President Roosevelt has freely criticised judicial decisions in the recent past, it is probable that the policy of rewarding so-called 'lame ducks' may also come in for criticism from other sources of public life."

For many years the federal judges have ruled this country much as the absolute monarchs in feudal times ruled their subjects in Europe. By overruling laws passed by Congress in the interest of the people—because of their alleged unconstitutionality; by means of "injunctions," and by what some one has called the "American crime," namely, "contempt of court"—the federal judges have imitated the French king who, when reminded that there was such a thing as the state, replied:

"The State! Why, that is me!"

The clipping from the Record-Herald would seem to show that the federal judiciary is now on trial before the court of public opinion; also that the manner in which these federal judges are appointed to their life-positions by the President and Senators is now on trial in the court of last resort—the American people in their capacity as citizens of the Republic.

That the federal judges are appointed to their high positions as supreme rulers of the nation not because of real fitness simply but because of political or dynastic reasons, has long been known to many, but it would seem that few have had the courage to speak their minds in regard to this crime against the doctrine of Jefferson and other real Democrats, namely, that the judges, as well as all other officers of the government, are the agents, the servants, and not the rulers, of the people. M. HARMAN.

CHICAGO DAILIES ON TRIAL.

The chief business of the daily paper is that of a news-gatherer and news-publisher. That the daily papers of Chicago do not always gather and faithfully report the news of all the unusual happenings in their own city was apparent at the beginning of the current year, when nearly all of them failed to make mention of a mass meeting of some seven or eight hundred people in Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, a meeting called to protest against imprisonment of the editor of LUCIFER and to welcome him back to Chicago. The only daily that made any mention of that gathering of earnest women and men was the Chicago Chronicle and the manner and matter of that notice was certainly not above criticism.

Buried under a picture of "Captain Bill McDonald, the Texas Ranger," appeared a half column report with a heading that had no reference whatever to the object or purpose of the meeting. In many respects the report was sadly deficient and in others decidedly incorrect. That our readers may compare this report with that of one of the committee of arrangements, herewith published, the entire statement of the Chronicle is reproduced, under the head, "Spirit of the Opposition;" also the comment of the editor of the same journal in its issue of Jan. 3.

Next day after the appearance of the editorial referred to, I addressed to the editor a letter of which the following is an exact copy:

Editor Chicago Chronicle.

Dear Sir: In the interest of truth and of fairness, I ask a little space in your widely circulated and influential journal to correct what I maintain is a very erroneous impression conveyed by your report of a reception given on the occasion of my home-coming from Leavenworth federal prison, at Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, on New Year's day, in your issue of Jan. 2, and by an editorial thereon in your issue of Jan. 3.

First, let me say to your readers that I am not publishing a paper devoted to the spread of obscene, salacious, indecent, or erotic literature, but am engaged in much the same line of work as that of the official organ of the National Purity Federation, published at La Crosse, Wis. If you will kindly read the January, 1907, issue of The Light, and also the copies of LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER I now send you, you cannot fail to be struck with the similarity of objects to which those journals are devoted, as also the similarity of name. Lucifer, as you well know, is the Latin for "light-bringing"—derived from Lux, Lucis, "light," and ferre, "to bring." Especially would I ask you to read the entire article of Rev. Dr. Sylvanus Stall, second vice-president of the National Purity Federation.

In this article, entitled "Growth of the Purity Movement," he takes substantially the same ground in reference to the federal "obscenity" law that I have taken for the last twenty-five years—namely, that, whatever may have been the object of the man who formulated that law, and of the men who caused it to be entered on the federal statute book, the practical working of that law has been to retard and defeat the work of the Purity Federation. On page 29 of The Light Dr. Stall says:

"The law as it now stands, if logically enforced, would brand the Bible as an obscene book; scarcely a single person in this convention could escape the penitentiary, and Jesus himself, if he came to Chicago or New York, could be arrested and successfully imprisoned. * * * No wonder that the statue of Justice holding the scales in one hand is represented as totally blinded by a bandage which covers both eyes."

On page 31 the doctor says:

"Today a man may deliberately murder his wife by a series of exactions and wrongs; he may bring to his own home disease as the result of his own impure life, and deliberately infect his own wife with a disease which is now annually sending many thousands of women to the dissecting table for surgical treatment of the most serious nature, and which is causing the death of thousands of pure, innocent and unsuspicious wives; and yet the law makes it a crime for the physician who treats the husband as acting within his by a single suggestion, and judges the husband as acting within his marital rights, and even here in Chicago sends a man to the penitentiary for a series of years who dares to call public attention in printed form to such a fact."

Very evidently the closing lines of the above paragraph have reference to the manner in which I have been treated by the federal courts in Chicago and in Kansas.

My attitude towards this federal statute is that of ignoring, rather than of "defiance." I distinctly stated in my little speech at Drill Hall that I had not enough respect for the obscenity law to defy it. If I had lived in the days of religious persecution I should not have defied the heresy laws, but would simply have ignored them, believing it better to "obey God (my religious conscience) rather than to obey man." So now I think it better to obey the voice of conscience in the matter of giving instruction on the vitally important questions of sex and reproduction than to obey a man-made law that forbids such instruction.

In conclusion let me say: Judging you by what I know of myself, I am not willing to believe that you would willfully and knowingly wrong any man by misrepresenting his motives or his work. I have not been "disseminating filth," but the contrary. I have tried to live a pure, a clean life, and to help others, young and old, to live clean, pure and noble lives. Neither do I think you would willfully slander the six or seven hundred women and men who met at Drill Hall to welcome me back to Chicago, by speaking of them as people who want "everybody to join them in a roll on the muck heap."

You would not call such men as Rev. MacPherson, pastor of the People's Church, Chicago, or Rev. J. M. A. Spence, of the People's Church, Aurora, or Rev. Dr. J. E. Roberts, of the Church of This World, Kansas City, Mo., or Rev. Paul Tyner, of Denver, Colo., all of whom either spoke at the meeting or sent letters of regret that they could not be present—you would not knowingly call such men as these "propagators of moral pestilence."

Among those who sent letters of sympathy and appreciation are B. O. Flower, editor of the Arena, Boston; Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Chicago; Leonard D. Abbot, former editor of the Literary Digest (New York); Judge Warner Mills, Denver, Colo.; Horace Traubel, editor of the Conservator, Philadelphia, and others whose lives are devoted to the uplifting and not the degradation of humanity.

Very sincerely yours for truth, liberty, justice and purity,
MOSES HARMAN.

Four days later I sent to the publisher, who as I had understood is also editor in chief of the Chronicle, another letter, as follows:

Horatio Seymour, Editor Chicago Chronicle.

Dear Sir: This morning I called you up over the 'phone and asked if you had received a letter from me in reply to an editorial in the Chronicle of Thursday last. You answered that the letter was received; that it had not been published, and that you did not intend to publish it.

I asked if you would kindly tell me why.

You answered, but in words I could not understand, on account of poor hearing. I then asked you to hold the wire till my daughter could come to the 'phone. You repeated part of your answer to me, but gave her no reason for not publishing the letter.

Now, as an honest man to an honest man, I respectfully repeat the question—

Why do you refuse to publish my letter?

Hoping for a prompt and clearly worded answer—though brief—I beg to remain very sincerely yours,
MOSES HARMAN.

Under date of Jan. 10 came the following answer:

Mr. Moses Harman, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir: In reply to your letter of Jan. 9, I would say that the communication recently forwarded by you to the Chronicle was not published and will not be published for the reason that I do not care to discuss in the columns of the Chronicle the subjects treated of therein. Yours truly,
H. W. SEYMOUR, Publisher.

A distinguished editor at a banquet given to the members of the press gave utterance to the following:

"There is no such thing in America as the independent press, unless it is in the country towns. We are all slaves! There is not one of you who dares to express an honest opinion. I am paid one hundred and fifty dollars per week for keeping honest opinions out of the paper I am connected with. The man who would be foolish enough to write an honest opinion would be on the streets looking for a job. The business of a New York journalist is to distort the truth, to pervert and vilify, to fawn at the feet of Mammon, and to sell his country and his race for his daily bread. We are the tools and vassals of the rich men behind the scenes; they pull the string and we dance. We are intellectual prostitutes."

How well this caustic description fits this man Horatio Seymour and the other editors and publishers of the Chicago dailies, I leave others to say. From appearances, however, the postal inquisition, the Chicago federal courts and their friends were not pleased that a mass meeting of protest against their action in sending a man more than 75 years old to the stone pile at Joliet for a year, for no other offense than admitting to his paper a serious discussion of the questions of sex and reproduction; that to counteract the impression of this protest upon the public mind the inquisition and its friends influenced the Chicago press so that no mention should be made of this mass meeting by that press except by the Chronicle, and that its report and its editorial notice should give the impression to the public that the meeting of protest was a very small affair—only a "few scores" of people, and that these few were men and women of no character or standing in the community—mere "propagators of moral filth," men and women whose chief desire is to "roll themselves on a muck heap."

I do not know who it was that started the phrase, "the Satanic press," but if the reader will look up the word Satan in Webster he will find that it means "an adversary;" that it is derived from a Hebrew verb which means "to be adverse, to persecute." "Detest the slander which, with Satanic smile, exults over the character it has ruined," is an illustrative quotation.

Again I say, let others judge whether this phrase, "the Satanic press," correctly applies to the Chicago dailies.

* * *

To show that the Chronicle's editorial and report of the meeting are but echoes of the utterances of the prosecution against myself and Dr. Stockham, I appeal to those who heard the talk of R. M. McAfee in the prosecuting attorney's office, when he compared LUCIFER to a "peck of manure;" also to the arguments of District Attorney Marston before the lower court and before the Court of Appeals. Also to the talk of Judge Bethea to Dr. Stockham when he sentenced her and her business manager to pay a fine of seven hundred and fifty dollars for publishing and circulating "The Wedding Night."

For additional proof I quote the words of Judge Landis in his instructions to the jury in my case:

"There are authorities that seem to indicate—very reputable authorities that seem to indicate—that the court should tell you whether or not these publications are lewd, lascivious, or obscene, and the court is inclined to the opinion that if the court should say to the jury that these publications are lewd, lascivious or obscene as a matter of law, the court would be within the court's right and duty."

These are very guarded utterances, but the suggestion, or intent, is evident enough.

Much more might be quoted to show that the Chicago press is "in the deal"—is in the conspiracy to crush out discussions of sexology, discussions that would lead to a better understanding of the most momentous of all questions that can engage the attention of human beings, namely, the right of the unborn to better conditions of maternity and of paternity than those under which the present very imperfect generation of women and men were brought into the world.

Once more only for this time. The impression is constantly sought to be made by the opposition press that I am the leader of a cult, an organization of "cranks" that are seeking to overthrow the marriage institution. I am in no sense a leader. I did not address a meeting of 200 followers at the Social Science Club, on the evening of Dec. 30, as reported by the Chronicle and Inter Ocean. I am only a pupil in life's great school; only an investigator and observer of social and biologic phenomena. There is no organized cult or propaganda for the abolition of established forms of marriage, so far as I know. Myself and those who agree with me are seeking reform, natural and peaceful evolution of marriage, rather than its violent destruction. I do not speak "bitterly," by pen or tongue, as reported by the press, when speaking of the opposition, but try to put myself in the place of the "other fellow," and to practicalize the saying—

"With charity for all and malice toward none."

M. HARMAN.

SPIRIT OF THE OPPOSITION.

That LUCIFER may not come under the censure of partiality, or otherwise misrepresenting our opponents, the editorial in the Chronicle—referred to in the article entitled "The Chicago Press on Trial"—is herewith reprinted entire. It was headed "Obscene Advanced Thought," and reads thus:

"There is no possible objection to a man's rolling himself in a muck heap. That is his privilege. But there is every objection when the man insists that other people shall join him in the proceeding. He then trenches upon other people's rights and becomes a nuisance.

"Some scores of people gathered in a hall the other day and welcomed back to Chicago a man who has been spending some time in the penitentiary for sending obscene matter through the mails. These people loudly applauded the returned prisoner when he declared that he meant to repeat his offense. They talked loudly about the right of free speech and a free press. What they really meant was that everybody must join them in a roll on the muck heap.

"That is the effect of promulgating printed filth. It besmears and contaminates people who detest it and it forces foulness upon the young. The right of free speech and a free press does not mean and never did mean that the people are free to scatter a contagion more deadly than smallpox. That is not freedom, but criminal license.

"Why should these children of freedom insist upon spreading their nastiness broadcast? Why should they seek to roll everybody in their muck heap, to force everybody to partake of carrion with them? Have other people no rights as against the propagators of moral pestilence? Is all the freedom to be on one side of the matter?

"If these people really enjoy wallowing why should not they do their wallowing in private or at least why should not they keep themselves to themselves in their convocations? Why not let the general public alone—quit assailing the noses of people? There is no tyranny involved in such a policy. It is simply a matter of personal liberty and independence which ought to be enjoyed by those who have no sympathy with people who get into the penitentiary for circulating obscene literature.

"The amount of it is that the community has a right to be protected against the nastiness of a clique of people who teach obscenity in the guise of 'advanced thought.' If these people desire to befoul themselves let them do so, but when they insist upon befouling others they will and they should find themselves in jail.

"Any person who sends obscenity through the mails ought to be imprisoned."

Though LUCIFER'S space is very small when compared to that of the Daily Chronicle, we here reproduce entire the report of the reception meeting which appeared in the Chronicle of Jan. 2, upon which report the above editorial was based. It was headed "Women at the Charity Ball Compared to Exhibits at Live Stock Show." Not having the paper at hand, am not sure that the head is quite correctly stated, but this was the purport. No reference whatever was made by the heading to the object of the meeting:

"The women who attended the charity ball were compared to the exhibits at the live stock show, and defiance was hurled at the laws that prohibit the sending of obscene literature through the mails when friends of Moses Harman gathered in the Masonic Temple yesterday afternoon to greet him upon his return from prison.

"Seymour Stedman, attorney and socialistic orator, asserted there was no difference between the social event and the live stock show. Then, to show their defiance of the law, more than 700 men and women arose and declared they would accompany Mr. Harman to prison should the authorities again indict and convict him upon the charge of printing obscene matter in LUCIFER, his publication.

"That they may be called upon to make good their threat was proved when Mr. Harman arose to speak, for he declared his imprisonment had not changed his views and he would continue to write and print as in the past.

"Drill Hall in the Masonic Temple was crowded at the reception accorded him. Not all the hundreds of men and women could find seats, and if the building ordinances regulating the crowding of buildings applies to halls it was violated, for scores of men and women stood about the entrances and exits and crowded the aisles.

"'There could be nothing more degrading than the charity ball,' declared Mr. Stedman, and he was cheered. 'The women were on parade and the men stood about in groups and discussed them. "Isn't she looking fine tonight?" one man would query. "See the diamonds she is wearing. I bought those for her. She cost me $100,000 as she stands," he would continue. Then another would point to a woman. "I bought $60 worth of silk for her," he would say. "And see the lace! She cost me a fortune." The women were there for show alone. I can see no difference between that event and the live stock show.'

"Then came Mr. Harman. He was greeted with cheers and he began by excoriating Judge Landis, the jurist who found him guilty.

"'I would sit in judgment of no man,' said the speaker, 'but Judge Landis sat in judgment of me and attempted to make it a death sentence. He would not fine me, for he was afraid I would pay or show I did not have the money. His instructions convicted me and the members of the jury were mere jumping jacks, there to serve him.

"'I will never obey the obscenity law!' he shouted, and his words were cheered.

"Among the other speakers were Parker H. Sercombe, who struck at the laws that made it possible to imprison a man or woman. He said free speech and a free press were just as remote as in the days of George III. He justified his statement by claiming it was impossible for a man to discuss a question that did not meet with the approval of the majority of his fellow men. He also said he would organize twelve classes and would teach the freedom of the sexes. He said he would charge 50 cents a lesson and would contribute the proceeds to LUCIFER.

"Paul Tyner declared the greatest of all crimes was that permitting the incarceration of a man or woman, and Gertrude B. Hunt declared she would 'rather be damned with Harman than sent to heaven with Anthony Comstock.'"

This report is a caricature rather than a correct recital of what occurred at the reception meeting. It is impossible to point out all the inaccuracies, but I wish to say here that I did not "shout" defiance to the obscenity law. I raised my voice because of distance from the hearers in the rear of the large hall, but there was no shouting in any part of my brief remarks. I compared the obscenity law with the "fugitive slave" law, and said the latter was the less hurtful of the two, and that if called on to help arrest a fugitive slave I would absolutely refuse, and would freely accept imprisonment rather than obey.

Although my words are very incorrectly reported, it is quite true that I charged Judge Landis with instructing the jury to convict me. In proof of this statement I clip the following paragraph from his charge to the jury:

"You have a right to consider the fact that this man has heretofore been convicted of the same offense, that is to say, of violating the same statute, in determining the question of intent; that is to say, in determining the question of whether or not this defendant has or has not a contempt for this law, and that is material in this inquiry because a man who has contempt for a law may not feel a high concern for its enforcement." The defendant has testified in this case and with frankness he has said to you—although claiming that in his judgment and opinion these articles are not lewd, lascivious or obscene, and insisting that his construction of these questions and his interest in this subject is due entirely to his interest scientifically—with frankness he has stated to you that, believing the law should be repealed, in his judgment the best way to bring about such repeal is to ignore the law."

While it may be said that the judge suggested conviction rather than directly ordering it, our readers will agree that to the average juryman a suggestion from the judge is quite as effective as a direct command.

Other paragraphs of like character can easily be found in the instructions to the jury that convicted me of the law-made crime called obscenity, but our space forbids further quotations at this time.

M. H.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO "HOME-COMING" FUND.

W. W. M., $1; W. L. Lighthown, $1; F. W., $5; E. P. Ludwig, 50c; Mrs. S. C. Campbell, $1; J. D. Wilhite, $2; Peter Jackson, $1; Mary E. Everett, $1; E. B. P., $5; S. O. Bishop, $2; John F. Paulson, $5; J. B. P., $4; Alfred Pagett, $1; E. Bordwell, $2; Oscar Rotter, $1; Paul Robin, $1; H. N. Fowler, $7; W. C. James, $10; Henry C. Roberts, $1.50; A Chicago Friend, $25; Henry Bool, $5; Chicago Society of Anthropology, $8; Dr. Mark Rose, $5; J. M. Crane, $5; J. B. Billard, $2; Anna B. Mahars, $2; A. C. Pleydell, $1; Cornelia Boecklin, $1; "A Socialist," $1; Daniel Kiefer, $1; Fanny Bellie, $1.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

HUGH O. PENTECOST lectures every Sunday morning at 11 o'clock at Lyric Hall, Sixth Avenue, near Forty-second street, New York. Lucifer for sale at meetings.

A Striking Sex Series.

is appearing in SOCIOTHEW, of which James F. Morton, Jr., the well known author and lecturer, says: "Puget Sound at last has a magazine adequately representative of Progressive Thought. It is frank and fearless, refined and vigorous, witty and eloquent."

Every reader of LUCIFER should secure this remarkable symposium, whose contributors are among the brightest minds of the age. Theodore Schroeder, of the New York Bar, begins a strong article in the January issue, on "What Is Purity? A Study of Sex Overvaluation," which is alone worth the price of a yearly subscription.

This series began in 1905. Only a few complete sets remain. Order as soon as you read this.

$2.00	SPECIAL	$2.00
	Back numbers with sex articles	$2.00
	"Soundview" for 1907	1.00
	"Wildwood Philosophy," former price	1.00
	Total	$4.00
	To LUCIFER readers for only $2.
$2.00	SPECIAL	$2.00

To the "Suspicious": Two copies of Soundview, Soundview, Jr., and a copy of "The Choice," a sex-poem, 10 cents.

This "Special" is by order of the "Iowa Evergreen."
Address THE EVERGREEN (That's who!)
Olalla, Wash., U. S. A. (That's where!)

Correspondence Club.

Open to those who desire to improve, and to discuss subjects of interest with kindred minds. Editor of this paper says the secretary is worthy of confidence. For particulars, enclose stamp to C. A. KIRK, Sec., Box 753, Mitchell, S. D.

WANTED—A new subscriber to LUCIFER, a gentleman of wide research, desires correspondence with a writer who is an old student of sociology; object, information and exchange of views; lady preferred. Address STUDENT, care of LUCIFER, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,
THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.
Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Thelem in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
18 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,
DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

Adam's Diary.

BY MARK TWAIN.

The only fault to be found with Mark Twain's new book, "Extracts from Adam's Diary," is that there is not more of it, both pictures and print. It is Adam's daily record of his life from the time he found the "new creature with the long hair," which was a good deal in the way and which he wished would stay with the other animals, to the time he finally found that he could not be happy without it, and found that it was better to live outside of the garden with her than inside it without her. The story is very briefly told—too briefly—but every line sparkles with wit. The pictures, one to each page of text, are by F. Strothmann. Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Eve's Diary.

BY MARK TWAIN.

This is a companion volume to "Extracts from Adam's Diary," which thousands have laughed over. It purports to be a "translation from the original," and tells of Eve's experiences in the Garden of Eden and afterwards. It is a delightful whimsical satire, written in the veteran fun-maker's breeziest style. There is much to be amused at in Eve's naive observations and in her many experiments in natural science and psychology. Altogether, "Eve's Diary" is one of the cleverest and most amusing of Mark Twain's many absurdities.

With 55 full-page illustrations by Lester Ralph. Crown 8vo. Cloth, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. R. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Coming of Age.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation. American edition, cloth, prepaid, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn: in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

What the Young Need to Know.

A PRIMER OF SEX RATIONALISM.

BY E. C. WALKER.

SUGGESTIONS OF CONTENTS: Is There Necessity for This Knowledge? Analagous Dangers and Safeguards. Unwisdom of Custom-Sanctioned Ignorance. Teachers Better if of Opposite Sex. Divisions of the Subject. Definitions of Sex. Evolution of Sex; Differentiation. Reproduction Less and Less Perilous. Inestimable Value of Use. Joy Is Positive, Upbuilding. The Deciding Majority of Two. The Tendency to Multi-Selection. A Serious Error in Exchange. Effects of Meat, Stimulants and Narcotics. Reproduction and Social Happiness. Not so Many Children, but Better Ones. Legal Intrusion Has a Limit. Voluntary Complexity, and Health. Comparative Exemption of the Jews. The Upward March. Cure and Irremediable Punishments. Origin of the Shame of Sex. Derived from Other-World Manias. "The Son of God" and Sex. Faithful Followers of Jesus. Relation of Past Asceticism to Existing Type. Mental Slaves Are Not Investigators. Romanic and Charmonde. Sex Manifestation Below Our Race. Sex Inspiration in Human Endeavor. What is Immodesty? Primitive and Present Day Savage Customs in Dress. Civilized Customs and Costumes. What We Affirm on This Subject. Bathing and Dress. Asceticism and Honesty in Art. Arguments of the Puritan. Judge Phillips and Mr. Moody. To Take the Purity of Nudity in Art for Granted. Asceticism and Literature. Foolishness of Hiding Social Wrongs. Take off the Taboo.

Price, 15 cents.

MOSES HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

The Stellar Ray.

SUCCESSOR TO SUGGESTION.

The Stellar Ray is a magazine for thinkers. Discusses thought force, will power, astral science, occultism, all forms of drugless healing, brain building, the cultivation of mental forces, and the psychological and physiological principles that bring health, happiness and success.

The Stellar Ray advocates no creed, no dogma, no fad or ism. It stands for progress and freedom in all lines of modern thought. It is a practical magazine for those who think. It teaches how to live without disease or worry. It teaches how to have health without drugs or doctors. It teaches how to use the powers within one's self for success, for poise and self-mastery.

THREE MONTHS' TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION.

Write us a postal card as follows:

Editor The Stellar Ray, Hodges Building, Detroit, Mich.

Please enter my name as a subscriber to your magazine, on the following conditions: After receiving three numbers I will either—

(1) Promptly notify you to discontinue my subscription, in which case there is no charge for the three issues received; or

(2) I will remit the subscription price, $1 (foreign, six shillings). I also reserve the privilege of cancelling my subscription at any time, paying only for the numbers received.

Name .....

Address .....

1083

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of you, LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Who Is the Enemy: Anthony Comstock or You?

BY E. C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.

THE "MORAL" CENSORSHIP—The Inspiration of the Censor; A "Protection" that Betrays; Utter Lack of Discrimination; Vain Deals of Facts; A Greater Wrong to the Child; Some Officers' Zeal; Imagined "Pests"; The Law as Administered; The Vicious Law of Obscene Libel; Obscene Libel and Expert Testimony; Judge and Jury and "the Facts"; Some Criticisms Answered; The Common Law Yesterday and Today; Wrong Principles of Action; The Censorship and the Bible; Moncure D. Conway on Censors; Where Lies Responsibility—on Censor or You? The Cause of Slow Advance; Sex a Mistake—"Somebody Blundered"; Superstition Not Seriously Crippled; The Worship of Death and Decay; Characteristic Eruptions of Sex Panic.

THE "FRAUD ORDER" FRAUD—Remarkable Deliverance by Judge Thomas; The Courts and the Constitution; The Persecution of "Free Love"; Grateful for Injuries Received.

THE CENSORSHIP OF SECOND-CLASS MATTER—The Department's Rules of Exclusion; Statistics of Official Financiering; Two Arguments About Government Socialism.

Price, 20 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought-conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think. Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (250 pages, 7½ inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

POEMS OF VARIED FEELING.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

The author is well known to the readers of LUCIFER, many of the poems in this volume having made their first appearance in our columns. The title well expresses the character of the work: the verses breathe of life and liberty and love; the charms of the seasons and the beauties of nature. The spirit of revolution, too, is voiced in "Liberty and the Commune," "In the Hour of Execution," "Von Plehve Dead," and other poems. "To the Enemies of Free Speech"; "The Challenge of Liberty"; "A Ballade of Butterflies"; "The Holstering Knights"; "Father Damien"; "Four Loves"; "Death in Life"; "Looking on the Sierras"; "Mother Heart," are a few titles taken at random, showing the varied scope of the work.

12 mo. cloth; gilt title; 160 pages; $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low number; rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,

For the Betterment of Humankind and The New Civilization.

2236 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, JANUARY 31, E. M. 207 [C. E. 1907]. WHOLE NO. 1084

A NEW CRIME.

I was arrested.

This is the story of my arrest, and I begin it with an apology for thrusting my personality into the account. If it were possible I would avoid doing so, but the police have rendered that impossible. It is on record at police headquarters and has been sent by telegraph to the four corners of the earth that a person of my name, 55 years old, of American birth and American parentage, was arrested and locked up over night in a cell, and in the morning taken before a police magistrate.

I was arrested Jan. 6; on the 7th I was taken before the magistrate, signed a formal plea of not guilty and was bailed out of custody; on the 11th I appeared before the magistrate again; on the 15th I appeared again, and was discharged.

I put the matter in this way in order to bring out the fact that, excepting to take my affirmation, the magistrate did not at any time address a word to me, nor did the assistant district attorney, nor did the lawyer representing me. I was arrested without being told why and I went before the magistrate, to stand there dumb for three several days, to be discharged finally because there was no evidence that I had committed any crime.

The detective who arrested me told the sergeant at headquarters that my offense had been being chairman of a meeting in Clinton Hall, where Miss Emma Goldman had delivered an address on "Misconceptions of Anarchism."

The object of the meeting was to raise money to apply to the publication of a magazine called Mother Earth, of which Miss Goldman was, and is, publisher and editor. Music preceded the address; and it was subsequently put in evidence that I had sandwiched between the two the highest inflammatory statements that there would be other meetings if this proved financially successful, and that I had pleasure in introducing Miss Goldman. So much stress was laid on the fact that I had expressed pleasure in the introduction of Miss Goldman that it seems quite fair for me to say here that my happiness lay in the fact that I was thereupon relieved of the necessity for further speech.

Miss Goldman's address may fairly be called an academic discussion of her subject, illuminated by copious quotations from Thoreau and Tolstoy. Excepting a few statements in regard to the venality of the police, much milder in character than may be seen in the daily papers of the city almost any day, the address was such as might with perfect propriety have been given in any university to students of sociology. Moreover, it was a very able and an exceedingly clear exposition.

I make this characterization of the address without hesitation, because I listened to it critically after having primed myself with a reading of the law of criminal anarchy, because I am opposed to violence myself, because the lecture had already passed the critical examination of the rapient "anarchy squad" of Brooklyn, and examination of the same more eminent experts in sociology of police finally because the still more eminent experts in sociology of police headquarters have been unable, even by means of elisions, emendations and distortion, to make out a case of criminal anarchy against the address.

The names of the expert sociologists detailed by the authorities to pass on the character of the address and to arrest as criminals those persons concerned in uttering it are noteworthy as evidencing the nicety of discrimination used by the head of the police force in selecting his instruments—Messrs. Braun, Bock, Wenzinsky, Rafsky, Schwartz. All fine, large, physically robust men; so large and robust, in fact, as to engender the suspicion in an ordinary mind that in sending to Europe for these specialists in English, sociology, and law, brawn had been more considered than brain.

Another noteworthy fact was the extraordinary unanimity with which these experts all heard Miss Goldman say things which she did not say at all. As for example, when they all testified that she had said that Anarchy did not "necessarily mean violence." My memory is clear that she did not use the word necessarily in that connection; and, since Anarchism stands for the very negation of violence, my reason tells me that my memory is to be trusted; for Miss Goldman certainly knows what Anarchism stands for. For another thing, these witnesses said that Miss Goldman declared herself as against the government, whereas, her address being in its nature academic, she was concerned only in explaining that Anarchism was opposed to government—all government. She did not use the definite article in that connection.

All the evidence offered by these detectives was equally slipshod, similarly incorrect, and marked by the identical errors. Their hearts may not have beat as one, but it was plainly apparent that their minds had but a single thought. Perhaps the impulse of this singular harmony among the detectives finds its explanation in a statement made to me by Miss Goldman immediately after an interview between her and Inspector McLaughlin at police headquarters. She told me that he had said to her that she might as well give up making speeches on Anarchy, since he would have her arrested every time she went on a platform for that purpose, no matter what she said.

It would be easy, but neither entertaining nor sufficiently instructive, to go over the evidence and compare it in detail with the words actually uttered by Miss Goldman in order to show that there was a manifest deliberation and unanimity in the distortion and emendation of her address. It may be said, however, that if Miss Goldman were to publicly betray such a confusion of ideas, couched in such atrocious English, as were shown in the sworn evidence as to what she said, then the panic into which she throws the police department could be explained only on the assumption that they look upon her as dangerously insane. And if she really did express herself as the police experts swore, she would never be able to obtain listeners to such wearisome nonsense.

It seems perfectly proper to dismiss the matter of the evidence given by the police by calling attention to the fact that, gathered, as it was, by violently plucking phrases from the modifying context, and even then altering them to fit the purpose of their ravishment, yet there was nothing offered which brought the speaker, in the opinion of the magistrate, within the operation of the infamous dragnet law under which the arrests were made. I characterize the law as infamous, not because as an Anarchist it especially affects me, but because I look upon it as a blow struck at the right of free speech which is guaranteed by the constitution.

Perhaps I have spoken with a certain seeming of levity up to this point. I know I was said to have lost my sense of humor at the time of my arrest. I lose it now when I remember the circumstances of that arrest. The element of farce may, indeed, have entered into those circumstances, for throughout it was a travesty of justice to which we were treated; but in that travesty lay a terrible tragedy, not for the American people alone, but for humanity. It was persecution for nonconformity, for opinion, for belief.

I beg any who read this to bear always in mind that the magistrate, assisted by the district attorney's office, was unable to find sufficient grounds for holding the prisoners for the grand jury, and that the arrests were made without warrant, without cause being specified, and solely on the judgment of police officers presumably sent for the purpose which they finally accomplished.

As chairman of the meeting I introduced Miss Goldman and the musician, and read a few notices. These things being done, I remained in my seat. Miss Goldman delivered her address, and a discussion began, when two detectives came down one of the side aisles and beckoned to me. When I met them at the door of the ante-room adjoining the stage they told me Miss Goldman and I were under arrest, and asked that we would avoid trouble by dismissing the audience quietly. I explained the matter to Miss Goldman, and she spoke to the audience, begging everybody to go out without disturbance.

There were amazement and indignation expressed on the faces of many there, but there was no confusion, no delay in passing out, no resistance of any kind. Mr. Berkman, who was in the audience, was arrested at this time while in the act of quietly urging those near him to hasten out. A boy of 15 was also arrested; for what reason I was unable to learn. He was discharged the next day.

We asked for a cab in order to avoid unnecessary publicity, but were told in a rather truculent tone that we were no better than anybody else, and that the only cab we could have was the police cab. The cars, they said, were good enough for them and good enough for us.

Excepting for the trifling insolence of that speech, we were treated with reasonable consideration; and I, in especial, was treated from first to last with a politeness that at times bordered on servility and for the most part was apologetic. In fact, I was treated with such distinguished consideration as set me apart from my companions, and elicited from Miss Goldman the remark to Mr. Berkman: "Do you notice how differently they treat him? He is an American."

I speak of this in order to express my detestation of such a differentiation, and to give myself the opportunity to say that the politeness of the police to me only served to emphasize the shocking brutality which they exercised to others.

I explain the consideration accorded to me by the facts that I am the product of many generations of Americans, that the usage of many years of the good things of life has established on me an air of content, that my clothes are in the fashion, that, in fact, I have what my radical acquaintances call an appearance of respectability. Perhaps I suggested the possibility to the police of "influence."

My reason for dwelling on this is not to let it be known what are the length and breadth and thickness of me, but to concentrate attention to that which follows. I am not grateful for any consideration shown me; on the contrary I rage over the police discrimination between me, the well-dressed prisoner, and those forlorn, decrepit, shabby, innocent street passengers upon whom was exercised a wanton brutality.

For this is what happened: We were hurried out of the hall, through Clinton street to Grand street, and along that crowded thoroughfare. It was still daylight and the sidewalk was occupied by men, women and children. I was flanked by a huge detective on either side, and I was unaware of any other obstruction to our passage through the street than was incident to its crowded condition. My conductors, however, went through that unconscious and peaceable multitude, clearing the way with oaths and blows. We were three abreast on that narrow sidewalk and the holiday crowd was moving on slowly in the enjoyment or transaction of its own proper affairs. The men beside me would kick a baby-carriage with its occupant to one side, would take a venerable old Jew by the nape of the neck and toss him into the gutter, or a decrepit old matron by the shoulder and send her into the mud of the street with a ruthlessness and wanton brutality that reminded me of the stories I had read and heard of the fiendish outrages of Kishineff and other places in darkest Russia. The spirit was there; opportunity alone was lacking. And there men would turn from the commission of an unprovoked, a needless, a cruel assault on an unaccused citizen to smirk in suave politeness on a well-dressed prisoner accused of a felony.

I do not know what thoughts were conjured up in the minds of those injured Jews, but there was a train of thought fired in my brain which I hope will not go out until it has illumined the consciousness of some part of the American people.

Which was the law-breaker? Was it I, the Anarchist, striving with all my might under the influence of a noble philosophy to conduct myself fairly, justly, honestly, peacefully toward my fellow men, striving to bring about an era of peace and good will? Was it the poor, shabby Jew assaulted in the proper and peaceful enjoyment of the public thoroughfare? Was it the police, the sworn defenders of the laws?

Consider the police! They are chosen for their very fitness to do that which I witnessed on Grand street. There is no judge in New York, howsoever high-placed, who could or would dare by any process of law to inflict bodily pain on the worst criminal—saving only the death penalty—and yet the police, in my sight, inflicted pain and injury on absolutely innocent citizens.

I, too, was innocent, as was subsequently decided in court; but I was dragged through the streets in ignominy because, in the opinion of men whose fitness for judgment lay in their brawny limbs, I had sat on a platform from which had been spoken words descriptive of a belief they did not share.

My companions and I were taken before a police sergeant, our names, addresses and descriptions taken down, and our bodies searched. The information thus obtained was given to newspaper reporters, and we, who were subsequently adjudged innocent of any crime, were heralded throughout the civilized world as criminals, a wealth of untrue detail being added in the interest of the tale.

Miss Goldman was taken to the Mercer street station, where there was a matron; Berkman and I were put into a cell, and the barred door was clanged on us. That shut us away from the world, against which we had offended by differing in opinion from the police. I protest that this is in no sense a perversion of the truth. The magistrate said we were not guilty. The police, after listening to Miss Goldman, after looking at me, declared that she actively and I constructively held certain unlawful opinions. The state had sent those brawny assaulters of decrepit Jews to decide on belief and opinion. The magistrate, without hearing one word in opposition to the testimony of those men, discharged all who had been arrested.

Later Miss Goldman and Mr. Berkman were released on bail, while I, through an inadvertence for which they were far more chagrined than I, and which caused them far more concern than it did me, was left to pass the night in the cell.

Of course, it is a matter of little consequence what sort of cell it was; and yet it seems to me of sufficient interest to describe it, since it is a place where innocent as well as guilty citizens are placed for safe-keeping.

I judge it to have been between three and four feet wide and about seven feet long. At one end was an open, dirty water-closet into which dripped a constant stream of water from a leaking faucet. A bench of wood, polished by the use of prisoners, ran along one side. The only other furniture was a small cup. I have been asked if the sheets were clean, and other questions based on the assumption that a man in America really is considered innocent until proven guilty. How little the good, respectable people of this country know of its conditions. Of course sheets or a mattress would only have added to the horror of the place. As it was, there were fewer bed bugs and other unpleasant insects than might be supposed.

If you have money wherewith to pay for food and will ask at the right time you may procure it by paying double rates for it. When you are adjudged guilty of no matter what crime you are fed; at headquarters you are kept without food, because, as I assume, you are innocent. It is a little confusing, not to say anomalous; the police have full power to lock up an innocent man at headquarters, but they may not feed him excepting at his own expense. Suppose he has no money? Oh, he isn't supposed to remain long at headquarters. If he is poor no doubt he is used to being hungry.

I forgot, in the novelty of the situation, that I needed food, though I had eaten nothing since 8 o'clock that morning. When I asked, it was too late, so I went until the next morning. There were three other prisoners in the set of three cells of which mine was one, and so far as I could determine only one of them had food brought to him. Two of those men naively and without confusion proclaimed themselves pickpockets; the other was very sick with a racking cough, whatever his business might have been. I have no idea what they thought me. They described me in their conversation as a "swell guy," and talked before me of their unlawful occupations with quite as much serenity as I could imagine Messrs. Rockefeller and Harriman talking of theirs. May I say that I do not use these latter names invidiously. I know as well as another that there is a worldly distinction between a chevalier d'industrie and a captain of the same.

Pardon me if I have made too many words of this story. At least, I am leaving the reader to draw most of his deductions; and I am leaving him to discover most of the implications of this recital.—John Russell Coryell, in the Truth Seeker.

"THE MORAL BREAKDOWN IN THE CHURCHES."

ROCHESTER, Jan. 13.—The subject of Dr. A. S. Crapsey's lecture this evening was "The Moral Breakdown in the Churches." It was not the intention of the speaker to dwell upon the fact that very great numbers of people who profess the religion of Christ did not practice that religion, but rather to call attention to the more important fact that many of the moral conceptions found in the dogma of the churches were in conflict with the enlightened conscience of the present age.

He began his lecture with a reference to a certain scene in Athens in the days of Alcibiades. When that brilliant politician and equally brilliant debauchée of a certain banquet was discussing the religious conditions of his time certain young men who were present were deploring the decay of religion in Greece, but Alcibiades said not so. Having just returned from Corinth, he said never before have there been so many women consecrated to the services of the Goddess of Love and never before have the young men of the country resorted more eagerly to the sacred groves. The writer who records this event was, if the speaker was not mistaken, the immortal Plato himself, and he saw nothing shocking in the words of Alcibiades. This is evidence that what we call religion and what we call morality are not always in accord.

It is true that at the time of Alcibiades these religious observances, which are to us so shameful, expressed the current morality of his day. But morality was then outgrowing that phase of religious observance, the men were beginning to be ashamed of prostituting their women to the services of their gods, and from that time on there was a growth of the moral sense that was in increasing antagonism to the religion of the people. The antagonism began to grow until at last we hear the prophetic saying, "God hath not called us to uncleanliness, but to holiness."

Dr. Crapsey said that it was a very common error which held that religion was a guardian of morality. Just the opposite is true. Morality is a guardian of religion. There are no emotions of men, not even the sexual emotions, which need to be kept more sternly under the power of the conscience and guarded more exactly by the power of the reason than the religious emotions. Man's religious nature is in its essence unmoral, if not immoral. In the name of his gods he has committed the greatest atrocities, has been guilty, as we have already seen, of sanctified uncleanliness, has sacrificed his sons and his daughters to devils, has murdered the righteous, thinking to do God service, and has robbed the poor to build temples to the deities.

We readily acknowledge the immorality of the ancient forms of religion which were supplanted by Christianity, but we fail to see that even in our own religion there are conceptions which the enlightened conscience of today condemns. The underlying thought of God in the Christian dogma is immoral in its nature. It represents God as being in a perpetual state of anger. We are told that ever since the year 4000 God has been angry with man because of the sin of Adam. Now, anger is a debasing passion. He who indulges anger degrades himself, and if this be true of man it must be equally true of God, in whose likeness man is made. Four thousand years of anger would change any god into a fiend, and the God of the Westminster confession who is in this perpetual state of wrath is, as Dr. Carter says, "not a god, but a fiend." Such a god cannot command the worship of a soul that has itself discarded the passion of anger.

Cruelty is also an attribute of God as he is represented to man in the dogma of the church. St. Augustine devotes two books of the "City of God" to prove that God can keep by his immortal power a body of flesh in eternal existence in order to torment that body in the everlasting flames. Now a god who would do this would certainly outdevil the devil. This whole notion of a god of vengeance has been outgrown and our conscience condemns it. God is also represented in the dogma as having his favorites among children of men, giving to some and withholding from others, without rhyme or reason except his own will and pleasure. Such partiality upon the part of a human father is always censured, and that which we condemn in man we cannot allow in God.

Dr. Crapsey then went on to say that not only were there immoral conceptions in regard to the deity contained in the dogma of the Christian churches, but those churches in their teachings held a false, degrading and in a measure an immoral conception of man. The doctrine of original sin as it is usually expounded from the pulpit is insulting to human nature and tends to nourish impure conceptions of the nature of man. Without his own fault man is brought into the world by a process which his religious teachers tell him is essentially unclean, that because of this uncleanliness he is damned before he is born. Now, one does not object seriously to being damned after he is born, for then he may have done something to deserve it, but to be damned before he is born breeds in him a sense of injustice, for he knows that he has done nothing to warrant such condemnation.

Now, that there is in man a tendency to evil is evident to us all. It is the drag backward, the tendency to return to a lower estate of moral life than that which man has in his present life attained. This is indeed the consequence of his birth as a man. It is the price he pays for being a man, but to assert that this natural fact produces wrath in a supernatural god and the curse of God rests upon man because of it has no warrant in the nature of things. The conception of the bird is a pure conception, and why not that of the man? The child of a pure wedded love is a pure child from the instant of its beginning in the secret places of nature, and the church should dwell upon that fact rather than upon the other. It should insist upon the privilege of every one to be born right the first time, and not claim to overcome the deficiencies of a first birth, which is natural, by the magical effects of the second birth, which it claims to be supernatural.

This doctrine lies at the base of our failure to achieve any great good from men through the forms of our churches. We claim that baptism is the antidote for original sin, but today we see no difference between the baptized and the unbaptized, and we can say that neither baptism avails anything nor want of baptism, but man's salvation lies in his power to love and to love purely. The greatest symbol of joy given to us in the Holy Scripture is the joy of the bridegroom with the bride, and where such pure joy is there is no sin.

Another immoral conception which is imbedded in our dogma is the doctrine of exclusive salvation. The saying that out of the church there is "no salvation" is arrogant and false. At no period in its history has the church included in its pale all the moral worth of mankind. There have been as many good people outside as inside, and it is not church membership but essential goodness that saves.

Dr. Crapsey then went on to speak at length of the immorality which is exhibited in the methods of salvation as they are taught in the churches, both Catholic and Protestant. He said that while on the continent of Europe he had seen alms boxes over which was the sign, "For Your Friends in Purgatory," and in these boxes he saw poor women putting their alms to purchase the release of their beloved ones from the pains of purgatory. Such a scheme of salvation is so immoral that we should not for a single moment tolerate it on earth. If a man deserves his fate he should remain in purgatory until he has accomplished his punishment. If he does not deserve his fate, to keep him in purgatory for a moment is the grossest injustice.

This whole scheme of "salvation for so much" has always been the scheme by which the practical Roman mind has sought to gain the favor of God. So many prayers, so many masses, so many journeys to this and that shrine will gain for man the pardon of his sin. Walter Pater said of the old Roman religion that "it was something to be done in such a place, at such a time, in such a way." A salvation so purchased would be worthless, because it would be the gift of a worthless deity.

On the other hand, the evangelical doctrine of the merits of Christ as this doctrine is so often presented by the evangelists is utterly destructive of any moral conception of the universe. According to that teaching God leaves all the guilt of the sinner upon Jesus, and the sufferings of Jesus atone for the guilt of the sinner, and then God imputes the righteousness of Jesus to the sinner. In other words, God punishes the innocent and lets the guilty go free, and he tells a lie in order to cloak the guilt of the one who is thus favored. To lay the guilt of the sinner upon the sinless is an act of injustice and therefore immoral. To say that an unrighteous man is righteous is not true and cannot be moral. We admit that behind this doctrine there are great living truths which give it credence. The innocent do indeed suffer for the guilty, but they do not bear their guilt nor suffer their punishment.

This doctrine as it is usually talked has bred in the mind of the average Protestant that he can get something for nothing, and that notion runs throughout his whole life. The besetting sin of this age is the desire to get something for nothing, and for this the preaching of the evangelical ministers is not a little to blame. If we can lay our sins on Jesus, why not lay our share of labor upon the poor? That is what we do every day of our lives, or at least try to. If we can get heaven for a song, why not get a fortune by a swindle? The organized church has done much to confuse moral values and to bring about the present state of moral chaos. It has overlooked altogether those great sayings, that "Man shall get his bread by the sweat of his brow," that "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," and it is through much tribulation that he enters into the kingdom of heaven.—New York Sun.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

WHEN this issue of LUCIFER reaches our friends its editor will be in California. He started to Los Angeles on Friday evening, Jan. 24, on a train scheduled to make the trip in three days. He has not yet regained his usual strength, and did not feel able to start at the date announced in LUCIFER No. 1083.

When he passed through Joliet on the best train of the Santa Fe, in all the comfort that loving care could provide, he doubtless remembered that other ride, eleven months ago, over the same road, with Joliet as the destination. We feared we would never see him return alive from that journey, but he was as calm, cheerful and hopeful on that occasion as when setting out on this trip to California. Near Joliet is the hill where, he was told by the deputy warden, "We plant such fellows as you, and the sooner you are planted there the better."

His personal address for the present will be 128 South Olive street, Los Angeles, Cal. Business letters should be sent, as usual, to this office.

NO NEED OF COURTS.

LUCIFER and many other journals of opinion have long maintained that under equal rights for all and special privileges for none—that is, under voluntary coöperation, the coöperative commonwealth—there would be no need of our present judiciary system, our despotic and largely irresponsible judiciary system. We could settle all disputes by voluntary arbitration, as is now proposed in the matter of international disputes.

But now it would appear, from the power lodged by Congress in the hands of the postoffice arm of the executive branch of the United States general government, we do not have to wait for the coöperative commonwealth in order to dispense with our present judiciary. Read what a leading editorial in the Cincinnati Daily Commercial Tribune has to say, while speaking of the necessity of such a law as that demanded by the "Crumpacker bill" now before the United States Senate—having lately passed "the House." Under the head "Why Maintain Courts?" the Commercial Tribune says:

"Why maintain courts of any description—federal or state—if the views of the postoffice department are to prevail with the Congress in opposition to the Crumpacker bill? If the views and the opinions of the postoffice department are correct, why does the department of justice go into the courts and seek compulsory processes and judgments against rebaters and givers of rebates—the railway corporations and the favored industrial or commercial corporations? Why does the Congress enact legislation providing for inspection of meats and breadstuffs and canned goods and liquors, and why, pursuant to that legislation, does the department of justice prosecute offenders, or alleged offenders, against the law in the courts?

"There is a much simpler process. The postoffice department, without notice and without a trial, arbitrarily denies to the citizen or the corporation failing under its displeasure the use of the mails. It denies to the individual even the right to receive letters absolutely unconnected with his business, but dealing only with private or family affairs, and it puts him out of business. It is a method charming in its simplicity if it were not a method absolutely illegal and unconstitutional—the method of a czar or a dictator, but not the method of an official of a free government, nor the methods a free and representative government ought to allow its officials to follow.

"The department of justice, with equal right and with equal justice, might arbitrarily seize upon the business of a corporation or an individual engaged in the canning or the packing of meats, or the distillation or the sale of liquor, lock up the establishment and deny the parties interested a hearing. It would be no higher crime against the individual liberty of the citizen to seize upon his property than it is for the postoffice department to seize upon his mail—and if seizure of mail can be had in the one instance without a hearing, it can be had in all instances."

Of course the same arguments hold good in regard to the publishing business, and it is with the publishing business that the postoffice department has made itself most conspicuously meddlesome. The Commercial Tribune says:

"In 1900, without a hearing given, without an appeal allowed, and without any avenue of redress, the postoffice department, by what it calls its 'fraud orders'—and frauds they are on American rights and privileges—forced out of business and into insolvency and ruin no less than 600 business enterprises, or at the rate of two for each and every business day of the entire year."

Proceeding, the Commercial Tribune adds this very significant paragraph:

"It is altogether possible that some of the concerns were fraudulent. But it is an undoubted fact that the majority of the concerns forced to the wall were legitimate business enterprises. But they were accused in secret, tried in secret and without notice to them, and condemned in secret—notwithstanding the sixth amendment to the federal constitution is an inhibition against condemnation by the federal government of any citizen, and against deprivation of life, liberty or property without due process of law, as the fourteenth amendment is a like inhibition against arbitrary proceedings by any state. Yet by the mere exercise of its will the postoffice department assumes the right and the power to condemn citizens without hearing, deprives them of their rights and privileges, and denies to them any appeal from its decision."

It was the boast of the ancient Romans that no man could be condemned and punished by their law without a hearing in his own defense. And we are in the habit of boasting that ours is the freest and best government the world has ever seen. M. HARMAN.

THE MOYER-HAYWOOD-PETTIBONE CASE.

In an article entitled "Our Vanishing Liberty of the Press," Theodore Schroeder, associate editor of the Boston Arena, says, in the January number of that magazine:

"In Idaho, at the time of the official kidnaping of Moyer and others in Colorado, the attorney of these men tried to show the court the unconstitutionality of the procedure, when the baffled rage of the judge prompted him to exclaim: 'I am tired of these appeals to the constitution. The federal constitution is a defective, out-of-date instrument, anyhow, and it is useless to fetch that document into court. But constitution or no constitution, we have got the men we went after; they are here; they are going to stay here until we have had our final say, and I would like to know what is going to be done about it.'"

Lack of space and time will prevent an elaborate statement of the kidnaping, nearly a year ago, of these labor leaders, whose trial is now set for the 5th of March next, charged with conspiracy to murder Governor Steunenberg of Idaho. This case is probably causing more excitement and more apprehension among the men who belong to labor unions, and also among the organized Socialists of the country, than any other case of like character that ever was brought before a court of so-called justice in the United States since the trial of the eight labor leaders twenty years ago in Chicago, that resulted in the hanging of four, the death in prison of one, the life sentence at hard labor of two and a fifteen-year sentence of one.

That the danger of serious trouble to follow the hanging of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone—if they should be hanged by the courts and governor of Idaho—is much greater now than it was twenty years ago will readily be admitted by those who have read the papers on both sides. The number of men enrolled in the labor unions now is incomparably greater than it was twenty years ago, and the determination of these labor-unionists not to tamely submit to see their brethren murdered according to law, as was done in 1887, is incomparably greater than it was twenty years ago.

Again, the opportunities afforded by the mountain states of Colorado and Idaho for successful revolt against the oppressors of labor are vastly greater, as any one can see, than they could possibly be in the cities and in the older settled portions of the country.

The clipping from the Arena, at the beginning of this article, shows the spirit with which the oppressors of labor in the two states named have carried on the war for five or six years past. The conclusion that seems to have been arrived at by labor men, including the organized Socialists of the country, is that no longer is there ground for hope of justice from the organized governments of the two states named, nor even from the government of the United States, since by its attitude in the last election the Washington government aligned itself unmistakably with the oppressors of labor.

In conclusion, I would simply say that, advocate of peace and educational methods as I am, there are times in which it would seem that discretion is not the better part of valor. In other words, there are times when peaceful methods seem to lose their virtue and when nothing is left for the manly man but to assert his native right to use whatever strength there be in his good right arm to defend his right to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness.

The preamble of the Declaration of Independence certainly gives ample sanction for raising the banner of revolution when all other means fail to secure redress of outrageous wrongs inflicted by our rulers. M. H.

OUR MURDEROUS MEDICAL TRUST.

At Joliet I protested against enforced vaccination, and my earnest protest against this invasion of my person was doubtless one of the chief causes of my exceptionally harsh treatment by the prison officials at that place. That this rule, requiring every prisoner to be vaccinated on entering the prison, is made at the instigation, if not the command, of the medical trust, there can be little doubt.

The following lines, clipped from the Homeopathic Envoy for January, should help to rouse the sleeping public to resist the encroachments upon civil liberty by the murderous medical monopolists of the United States. The article is headed "Cancer Due to Virus in the Blood":

"'A new theory has been put forth by a writer in a recent issue of the Lancet, G. C. Adams, of Australia, regarding the etiology of the disease in that country. The views put forth by this writer are that cancer is not due to a bacterial or parasitic origin, but that it is a constitutional disease due to a specific or malignant virus originating in the blood, and chiefly manifesting itself after thirty-five years of age, and at its greatest virulence between fifty and seventy years of age.'

"The foregoing is from an editorial from the Medical Age, Detroit, for November, 1906. If it originates in the blood, what more potent or widespread cause could be found than the small-pox vaccine that is by compulsion injected into civilized man's blood? It is pretty safe to assert that cancer 'due to a specific or malignant virus' will be found to be mainly the result of this poisoning of the human system."

That the prevalence of cancer has increased many-fold since vaccination became compulsory and well-nigh universal in English-speaking countries will probably be admitted by all who have studied the question from other sources than the statistics of the medical trust itself. Whether there is a real connection between the two will be hard to prove, but that the presumption is tremendously in favor of the theory advanced by G. C. Adams and by the editor of the Homeopathic Envoy, I verily believe.

Under the head "Smallpox in Toronto" the Homeopathic Envoy says:

"Commenting on the fact that compulsory vaccination of school children had been abolished in Toronto, the Medical Age says that there was practically no opposition to its abolishment, and adds: 'Smallpox in Toronto has recently been so mild that inconvenience resulting from the quarantine has been the worst part of the matter.'"

In this regard, if in no other, the Canadians are setting a good example to the people of the United States.

The article closes in these words:

"Antitoxin is very much questioned by the best practitioners in Europe. The Pasteur treatment for rabies, it is said, has ceased the trouble it purports to cure. The antidiphtheric serum has, probably, never cured a case, and vaccination today is more doubted than ever before. In fact, except in desperate cases, the puncturing of the skin to administer remedies or prophylactics is falling into disrepute with rational people."

So long as the masses of people passively submit to be poisoned for the benefit of a guild of men whose power and wealth (like those of the "craftsmen" who withstood Paul at Ephesus) depend upon the ignorant and superstitious (medical) beliefs of the said masses, and upon their submission to the dicta of the medical "board of health," just so long will the trade of the medical poisoner and that of the licensed undertaker flourish.

"My people perish for lack of knowledge," said the old-time prophet.

In thus saying, I would by no means wish it to be understood that I condemn all physicians who use poisonous drugs in their practice. I am glad and thankful to be able to count among my very best friends several learned and successful medical practitioners who conscientiously believe there is healing virtue in drugs if judiciously administered. I mean only those physicians who want special privileges—special legislation, by which they may drive out competitors in the healing art, those competitors who will not take their own prescribed medical course of education and join their own guild or trust.

Especially do I mean that part of the medical profession who want legislation to compel people to submit to invasion of their persons (even their young and helpless infants) by the administration, the injection into their life-blood of what I honestly believe to be one of the most baneful of all medical poisons, that known as vaccine virus! MOSES HARMAN.

FROM CLARA BEWICK COLBY.

Twenty years ago, coming April, I heard Mrs. Colby, editor of the Woman's Tribune, then published at Beatrice, Neb., deliver one of the very best lectures on woman's emancipation from all slaveries to which I ever listened. It was at an Equal Suffrage convention held at Topeka, Kan, which convention was addressed by many well-known leaders of the "woman's movement," as it is called, notably by the world-renowned woman orator, Carrie Chapman Catt, but Mrs. Colby's lecture far surpassed that of any other speaker in the logical clearness and in the comprehensive scope of her utterances.

To Mrs. Colby political suffrage is an incident—a means to an end, so to speak, in her battle for complete self-ownership of woman as against woman's domination by man, especially in her work as race builder, which domination is clearly recognized and enforced in canon and statute marriage laws.

At least such was my understanding of Clara Bewick Colby's position in the two lectures I heard from her about twenty years ago, and as defended in her old yet ever young Woman's Tribune, now published by her in Portland, Ore.

In her issue of Dec. 22, 1906, she makes this reference to the home-coming of LUCIFER'S editor:

"The Tribune is glad to learn that Moses Harman, who was sentenced to imprisonment for one year for publishing articles in LUCIFER relative to sex questions, is to be released Dec. 26. Why could it not have been a few days earlier, that he might have spent Christmas with his family? However, there is to be a great reception for him in the Masonic Temple, Chicago, on the afternoon of Jan. 1. William Lloyd Garrison and some thousands of persons interested themselves in Mr. Harman's case and sought to obtain his earlier release. As far as learned all students of sociology and all writers interested in having humanity better born have taken Mr. Harman's part. His many friends are glad that he has somewhat regained his health after his rigorous treatment at Joliet."

If all goes well with my western trip, Portland and the office of Woman's Tribune will be among the places visited by me before many months. M. H.

MORALITY VS. PRURIENCY.

Among journals of opinion in the United States, none can take higher rank than the Arena, of Boston, edited by B. O. Flower. In the December number of that leader of modern thought, under the head "Sound Morality vs. Morbid Prurience," Editor Flower strikes the keynote of reform; in fact, he strikes several keynotes. See the article in this issue of LUCIFER, printed under the above title.

The fact that Theodore Schroeder, of New York, attorney for the Free Speech League, is now associate editor of the Arena will be good news to our readers.

Under the subhead "The National Purity Federation Holds a Remarkable Meeting," Mr. Flower quotes several paragraphs showing the attitude that he himself holds towards the work of the Free Speech League, and shows in his introductory remarks that a great improvement has taken place in the spirit and methods of work of this heretofore conservative and reactionary national organization. M. H.

The great seem great to us because we are on our knees. Let us rise.—Camille Desmoulins.

LOVE MARRIAGE.

Rev. J. D. McBrien, chaplain of the Kansas state penitentiary, has questioned 4,000 prisoners concerning the marital lives of themselves, their parents and grandparents, in the endeavor to find the fountain head of predisposing cause of criminality.

We have always contended that "loveless marriage" was a breeder of abnormality, if not, more plainly speaking, the real progenitor and mother of the criminal instinct. The chaplain is evidently afraid to come out boldly and say in plain terms what his investigations have forced him to think, lest he be accused of "attacking the holy institution of marriage" and lose his job, if not be sent to the penitentiary himself.

In the following cautious, round-about way, however, he says in effect just what LUCIFER'S editor was condemned for blurting out abruptly, that love marriage is the true and only marriage, the source of all good and blessedness, while legal, conventional, loveless marriage is not marriage at all, but prostitution, the source of all evil and a curse to the world:

"If the marriage relation could be so regulated that none should be permitted to enter into that most sacred of all the domestic relations except those who are physically, morally and intellectually capable of discharging the duties of husbands, wives and parents in the true sense, as God intended it to be, it would prevent, at least to a great degree, the hereditary tendencies to crime."

* * *

The above communication and clipping were sent us by our good friend, S. E. Shepherd, of Leavenworth, Kansas. That the chaplains of penitentiaries have many and superior opportunities for inquiring into the basic causes of vice, crime and degeneracy is certainly very true, and it is sincerely to be hoped that they will duly improve these opportunities.

With the letter and spirit of the clipping from the chaplain's published opinion I cannot say that I am altogether in accord. The suggestion that the "marriage relation" should be under the regulation or supervision of an examining board appointed by governmental authority of some kind seems to me to involve too great a risk of abuse of power in the hands of such examining board. As in matters of food, drink, religious worship, etc., etc., I think that education, joined with liberty of conscience, liberty of speech and non-invasive action, is the only safe guide in the conjugal or marital relations of women and men.

M. H.

MOSES HARMAN'S RELEASE.

About a year ago Mr. Moses Harman was convicted in the federal court of mailing an obscene article in his periodical, LUCIFER. He was convicted, not because the jury considered the article obscene, but because the presiding judge instructed the jury that the question of obscenity was not within their province, that the only question for them to pass upon was the fact of the mailing of the paper. In fact the article was not obscene, and Mr. Harman's conviction and imprisonment were, as the Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones describes them, "nothing less than a crime." It is a subject for congratulation that Mr. Harman's imprisonment has under these circumstances been treated by some of the good men and women of the community as an honor instead of a disgrace, and that they should therefore have greeted him with an honorable reception upon his return. It was no misplaced praise, that of the late Ernest Howard Crosby, when in responding to an invitation to this reception he said: "No one can know Mr. Harman personally or through his writings without becoming impressed by the purity and honesty of his purpose and by the fact that his main impulse is what seems to him a high ideal." These words we repeat and endorse, not in advocacy of Mr. Harman's views, for we dissent from them, but in the same spirit in which Mr. Crosby added to his personal praise the words: "That such men should be met by the arguments of iron bars and dungeon cells shows that the spirit of Torquemada is not entirely exorcised."—The Public (Chicago).

EMMA GOLDMAN AND THE NEWSPAPERS.

A few days ago the newspapers of the country made much of the arrest of Emma Goldman for a public speech inciting to violence, the destruction of government, etc., etc. But they made nothing of the fact that when she was arraigned the case against her was dismissed on the ground that her speech was not a lawless one but was entirely within her rights. The newspaper idea of what constitutes lawlessness offers an interesting study in the psychology of professional gossip. A woman speaker who commits no crime is haled to prison and her meeting broken up by officious policemen without warrant and without right, and the newspapers ejaculate "hurrah!" But when the courts determine that it was not the woman speaker but the police that were criminal in the matter, the newspapers pass silently by on the other side.—The Public (Chicago).

SOUND MORALTY VERSUS MORBID PRURIENCY.

The two following articles were printed under the above caption in the Arena:

MR. COMSTOCK NOT DESIRED AT THE MOTHERS' CONGRESS.

An event perhaps even quite as significant as that which marked the National Purity Federation's meeting was the recalling of the invitation extended to Anthony Comstock by the Pennsylvania Mothers' Congress. The press dispatches published in the Boston dailies of Oct. 20 stated that "the invitation extended to Anthony Comstock, the purity mentor of New York, to address the Pennsylvania Congress of Mothers at Johnstown on Nov. 1 has been recalled." One of the prominent members is quoted as saying: "I myself have pictures and statuary in my home which are perfectly beautiful and which I know Mr. Comstock would destroy if he could."

It would seem from the above that the more thoughtful and healthily moral members of the Mothers' Association have no sympathy with prurient imaginations that see impurity and evil in things that to a healthy or normal mind suggest not only naught that is low or debasing, but that which is beautiful, pure and fine. We well remember, when at school, one of the boys in our room seemed unable to see anything that did not suggest something low, vile or sensual. His mind seemed to so brood over vile and low things that his imagination apparently became so saturated with sensual concepts that all things took on an evil cast, just as one looking through green glass beholds the green sheen on every object seen. On one occasion, when this lad had obtruded one of his coarse and suggestive remarks while some of us were enjoying an historical painting that to all save the youth in question was free from any suggestion of sensualism, a schoolmate exclaimed, "I think the fragrance of a rose would suggest something low to Will."

Now it may not be the case that Anthony Comstock has searched so long for that which is sensual, low or corrupt that his mind has reached the stage of the person who looks at the world through green glass. It may be possible that he is not in the position where it is impossible for him to look at anything without seeing something degrading and immoral in it; but many of his acts of late years suggest the possibility of this state, or else that he is of that order of mind that so fears the power of evil over good that he believes that ignorance is the only helmet for virtue; that innocence born of ignorance is a better safeguard for our young men and women from the multitudinous pitfalls of civilized life than knowledge imparted by high-minded men and women with a view to making the young morally strong and healthy through knowledge coupled with appeals to the reason to think fundamentally, sanely and normally.

There was a time in the far-away past when minds of this order, that seemed to endow evil, and especially sensualism, with infinite potency, so distrusted the power of righteousness and virtue over their own minds that they fled to the deserts and to retreats, that their eyes might not even be tempted by the sight of women. Now for such persons it may be that the retreat or the desert is the healthiest place; but certainly men who so exalt the potency of evil, and especially of sensualism, that they see grossness and vileness in the breathing statues that represent some of the noblest creations of genius of the ages, should not be encouraged to pose as censors of morals, as they would inevitably teach the immature and unformed imagination of youth to look for things evil and degrading or sensual in nature and art, instead of seeing beauty, nobility and purity which the sane, healthy, artistic and informed mind sees in the master-creations of the ages.

To us it seems that a mind so keen to scent out corruption and immorality where minds like that of Ralph Waldo Emerson would see only beauty, and so indiscriminate in its attacks on the good as well as the evil as is Mr. Comstock, is liable to work a vast amount of evil to the young and to the public imagination as a whole, by centering the attention of the people on evil rather than good, making them look for that which is low, vile and debasing when they otherwise would see none of these things.

A recent issue of Life contained an admirable cartoon which hits off what many people believe to be Mr. Comstock's mental attitude. This cartoon represents Mr. Comstock as an angel flying to the gates of Heaven, but St. Peter sternly forbids his entrance, saying, "No, Anthony, no; we may have things here you would object to."

THE NATIONAL PURITY FEDERATION HOLDS A REMARKABLE MEETING.

The National Purity Federation at its recent meeting in Chicago evinced a degree of wisdom in relation to the great question of sex morality that has seldom if ever before been manifested in similar congresses, in the broad and fundamental manner in which it considered the question. Heretofore usually the tendency has been to look on the question of morality in a superficial and narrow way, but in the recent convention the members welcomed broad, judicial and fundamental consideration of the problem, which indicates that the old ostrich-like policy, which sought to stifle anything like healthy and fearless consideration of grave questions absolutely essential to sound morality, is to give place to a mental attitude in line with the modern enlightened and scientific spirit of our time.

Perhaps the most notable paper delivered at the meeting was read by Mr. Theodore Schroeder, one of the associate editors of the Arena.

At our request a correspondent in attendance has furnished us an excellent news-note dealing with the significance of this important gathering, from which we quote the following:

"An astonishing thing happened in Chicago at the recent meeting of the National Purity Federation. Mr. Theodore Schroeder, the attorney of the Free Speech League of New York, was allowed to address that conference on the need for more liberty of the press in the discussion of sex problems as a condition of moral progress.

"Mr. Anthony Comstock, who is always conspicuous on such occasions, was announced to reply, but failed to appear. The still more remarkable thing was that this organization, which in the popular mind stands for organized and legalized prudery, did unanimously adopt a resolution almost as broad as Mr. Schroeder's contention.

"In his argument he reminded us that: 'Only upon the subject of sex do we by statute declare that artificial fear is a safer guide than intelligent self-reliance, that purity can thrive only in concealment and ignorance, and that to know all of one's self is dangerous and immoral.' He made an unanswerable argument for the right of every individual to know for himself what is nature's moral law of sex, and to have access to all the evidence which anyone might be willing to submit, if permitted.

"Then he went on to show how under our laws against 'obscene' literature that right to know has been destroyed. We thought that the liberty of the press guaranteed by our constitution meant the right to tell the truth from good motives, but all that has disappeared by the unauthorized judicial amendment of our charter of liberties. Upon the subject of sex, truth and good motive for a publication are no longer a defense when the publisher is arrested as a disseminator of obscenity.

"Under the scientific absurdities which courts pronounce as the 'test of obscenity,' nothing can escape judicial condemnation. In a scientific paper before the last International Medical Congress, Mr. Schroeder showed that if the judicial tests of obscenity were applied to 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' it must be adjudged a criminally 'lewd' book.

"Before the Purity Federation he showed that once by necessary implication and twice by expressed judgment have the courts declared our Bible to be criminally obscene, and furthermore, that courts and juries of irreligious men, relying wholly upon precedents already established, might destroy every Bible in the land, as well as most of our classical literature. The test of obscenity prescribed by our courts was applied to the ten commandments, and it was shown that an impartial enforcement of the law would suppress them as criminally obscene.

"This extraordinary statute makes no exception for scientific medical books, even when circulated among professional men. By dictum only have the courts so amended the law that these books thus circulated are tolerated in spite of the statute, and not as a matter of right under it. An exact enforcement of the letter of our statutes under the present judicial tests of obscenity would extirpate all the medical literature upon the subject of sex.

"Many suppressed books were described. They came from physicians of the highest standing in their profession, and from the most conventional and conservative moralists. Nearly all of the criminal books mentioned in Mr. Schroeder's argument had the endorsement of some clergymen or religious leaders. Of course many controversial books advocating unconventional ideas have also been suppressed.

"On the day following this paper, the Purity Federation unanimously adopted a resolution which, to the outsider at least, would seem to mark a new epoch among purity workers. The following is a salient paragraph:

"'Resolved, That the president be empowered to appoint a permanent committee of seven, of whom he shall be one, who shall seek to secure such changes in the judicial tests of obscenity as will make the law so certain that by reading it anyone may know what constitutes its violation, and to secure such an interpretation of the law as will make impossible the suppression of any scientific and educational purity literature.'

"Another evidence of very great progress was the general sentiment of these purity delegates in favor of sexual instruction in our schools."

The New York Sun, on Oct. 13, closed an editorial upon these incidents of the purity conference with these pointed words:

"The truth is that a new school of purity has sprung up in the world, and for the present Mr. Comstock must be content to pass as an old fogy, out-of-date, mid-Victorian, unfashionable, or whatever the stronger party chooses. The new school is for discovering corruption; his school was ever for concealing it. He conceived credulity to be a more peaceful state of mind than curiosity and was always for hiding anything that might possibly offend even our dramatic critics. His opponents might be generous enough to credit him with a laudable ambition—the honest desire to raise every one to what we have been told is the very height of felicity: 'the possession of being well-deceived, the serene and peaceful state of being a fool among knaves.'"

I do not wonder at what men suffer, but I often wonder at what they lose.—Ruskin.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"To a rational being the prudential check to population ought to be considered as equally natural with the check from poverty and premature mortality."—Thomas Robert Malthus, 1806, English Political Economist.

THE MALTHUSIAN LEAGUE, CHICAGO, ILL., JANUARY, 1907.
MOSES HARMAN, HONORARY PRESIDENT.

OUR MOTTO—"It is the right of every child to be well born."

OUR PURPOSE—To agitate and take such other means as may be necessary to secure the abolition of all laws which make either the printed or oral discussion of sex problems a criminal offense, also to restore the right to the use of the United States mails for the transmission of such printed matter to the people, in order that knowledge of sex and its rightful functions may be disseminated, where now only ignorance abounds, which is responsible for much crime and misery.

HELDA L. PUTTKE-LOGUER, Secretary,
217 Twenty-third street, Chicago, Ill.

[N. B.—Contributions to our cause are earnestly solicited and may be sent to the secretary until further notice. The same will be duly acknowledged in LUCIFER.]

THE FREE SPEECH LEAGUE.

invites correspondence, cooperation, and membership of all who claim rights, and dare maintain them.

Join us. Help us. Get our list of books. Read them—pass them on.

Liberty tracts by Ingersoll, Wakeman, Walker, Pentecost, Darrow, Post and Schroeder. Read "Our Vanishing Liberty of Press" (5c) and "Do You Want Free Speech?" (10c) and so learn

WHY YOU SHOULD ACT WITH US.

FREE SPEECH LEAGUE, 120 Lexington avenue, New York.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

A Striking Sex Series

is appearing in SOUNDVIEW, of which James F. Morton, Jr., the well known author and lecturer, says: "Puget Sound at last has a magazine adequately representative of Progressive Thought. It is frank and fearless, refined and vigorous, witty and eloquent."

Every reader of LUCIFER should secure this remarkable symposium, whose contributors are among the brightest minds of the age. Theodore Schroeder, of the New York Bar, begins a strong article in the January issue, on "What Is Purity? A Study of Sex Overvaluation," which is alone worth the price of a yearly subscription.

This series began in 1906. Only a few complete sets remain. Order as soon as you read this.

$2.00	SPECIAL	$2.00
	Back numbers with sex articles	$2.00
	"Soundview" for 1907	1.00
	"Wildwood Philosophy," former price	1.00
	Total	$4.00
	To LUCIFER readers for only $2.
$2.00	SPECIAL	$2.00

To the "Suspicious": Two copies of Soundview, Soundview, Jr., and a copy of "The Choice," a sex-poem, 10 cents.

This "Special" is by order of the "Boss Evergreen."

Address . THE EVERGREEN (That's who!)
Olalla, Wash. U. S. A. (That's where!)

The Stellar Ray.

SUCCESSOR TO SUGGESTION.

The Stellar Ray is a magazine for thinkers. Discusses thought force, will power, astral science, occultism, all forms of drugless healing, brain building, the cultivation of mental forces, and the psychological and physiological principles that bring health, happiness and success.

The Stellar Ray advocates no creed, no dogma, no fad or ism. It stands for progress and freedom in all lines of modern thought. It is a practical magazine for those who think. It teaches how to have health without drugs or doctors. It teaches how to have health without disease or worry. It teaches how to see the powers within one's self for success, for poise and self-mastery.

THREE MONTHS' TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION.

Write us a postal card as follows:

Editor The Stellar Ray, Hodges Building, Detroit, Mich.

Please enter my name as a subscriber to your magazine, on the following conditions: After receiving three numbers I will either—

(1) Promptly notify you to discontinue my subscription, in which case there is no charge for the three issues received; or

(2) I will remit the subscription price, $1 (foreign, six shillings).

I also reserve the privilege of canceling my subscription at any time, paying only for the numbers received.

Name .....

Address .....

Adam's Diary.

BY MARK TWAIN.

The only fault to be found with Mark Twain's new book, "Extracts from Adam's Diary," is that there is not more of it, both pictures and print. It is Adam's daily record of his life from the time he found the "new creature with the long hair," which was a good deal in the way and which he wished would stay with the other animals, to the time he finally found that he could not be happy without it, and found that it was better to live outside of the garden with her than inside it without her. The story is very briefly told—too briefly—but every line sparkles with wit. The pictures, one to each page of text, are by F. Strothmann. Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Eve's Diary.

BY MARK TWAIN.

This is a companion volume to "Extracts from Adam's Diary," which thousands have laughed over. It purports to be a "translation from the original," and tells of Eve's experiences in the Garden of Eden and afterwards. It is a delightful whimsical satire, written in the veteran fun-maker's broadest style. There is much to be amused at in Eve's naive observations and in her many experiments in natural science and psychology. Altogether, "Eve's Diary" is one of the cleverest and most amusing of Mark Twain's many absurdities.

With 55 full-page illustrations by Lester Ralph. Crown 8vo. Cloth, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses.

Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid. 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Love's Coming of Age.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

A treatise on Sexual Science and Marriage, rich in thought and strong in expression. Emphatically a book for the thinker.

Carpenter holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics; she must be independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of marriage. He also makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation. American edition, cloth, prepaid, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

What the Young Need to Know.

A PRIMER OF SEX RATIONALISM.

BY E. C. WALKER.

SUGGESTIONS OF CONTENTS: Is There Necessity for This Knowledge? Analagous Dangers and Safeguards. Unwisdom of Custom-Sanctioned Ignorance. Teachers Better if of Opposite Sex. Divisions of the Subject. Definitions of Sex. Evolution of Sex: Differentiation. Reproduction Less and Less Perilous. Inestimable Value of Use. Joy Is Positive, Upbuilding. The Deciding Majority of Two. The Tendency to Multiselection. A Serious Error in Exchange. Effects of Meat, Stimulants and Narcotics. Reproduction and Social Happiness. Not so Many Children, but Better Ones. Legal Intrusion Has a Limit. Voluntary Complexity, and Health. Comparative Exemption of the Jews. The Upward March. Cure and Irremediable Punishments. Origin of the Shame of Sex. Derived from Other-World Mania. "The Son of God" and Sex. Faithful Followers of Jesus. Relation of Past Asceticism to Existing Type. Mental Slaves Are Not Investigators. Robert Dale Owen and Clarimonde. Sex Manifestation Below Our Race. Sex Inspiration in Human Endeavor. What is Immodesty? Primitive and Present Day Savage Customs in Dress. Civilized Customs and Costumes. What We Affirm on This Subject. Bathing and Dress. Asceticism and Honesty in Art. Arguments of the Puritan. Judge Phillips and Mr. Moody. To Take the Purity of Nudity in Art for Granted. Asceticism and Literature. Foolishness of Hiding Social Wrongs. Take off the Taboo.

Price, 15 cents.

MOSES HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., LA Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Thelsm in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.
1356 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1084

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number at once.

Who Is the Enemy: Anthony Comstock or You?

BY E. C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.

THE "MORAL" CENSORSHIP—The Inspiration of the Censor; A "Protection" that Betrays; Utter Lack of Discrimination; Vain Denial of Facts; A Greater Wrong to the Child; Some Officers' Zeal; Imagined "Plots"; The Law as Administered; The Vicious Law of Obscene Libel; Obscene Libel and Expert Testimony; Judge and Jury and "the Facts"; Some Criticisms Answered; The Common Law Yesterday and Today; Wrong Principles of Action; The Censorship and the Bible; Moncure D. Conway on Censors; Where Lies Responsibility—on Censor or You? The Cause of Slow Advance; Sex a Mistake—"Somebody Blundered"; Superstition Not Seriously Crippled; The Worship of Death and Decay; Characteristic Emptiness of Sex Panic.

THE "FRAUD ORDER" FRAUD—Remarkable Deliverance by Judge Thomas; The Courts and the Constitution; The Persecution of "Freedom"; Grateful for Injuries Received.

THE CENSORSHIP OF SECOND-CLASS MATTER—The Department's Rules of Exclusion; Statistics of Official Financiering; Two Arguments About Government Socialism.

Price, 20 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thoughtful—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (256 pages, 5x7 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

POEMS OF VARIED FEELING.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

The author is well known to the readers of LUCIFER, many of the poems in this volume having made their first appearance in our columns. The title well expresses the character of the work; the verses breathe of life and liberty and love; the charms of the seasons and the beauties of nature. The spirit of revolution, too, is voiced in "Liberty and the Commune," "In the Hour of Execution," "Von Plehve Dead," and other poems. "To the Enemies of Free Speech"; "The Challenge of Liberty"; "A Ballade of Butterflies"; "The Roistering Knights"; "Father Damien"; "Four Loves"; "Death is Life"; "Looking on the Sierras"; "Mother Heart," are a few titles taken at random, showing the varied scope of the work.

12 mo, cloth; gilt title; 160 pages; $1, postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man." Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,

For the Supermen and Superwomen and The New Civilization,

2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 14, E. M. 307 [C. E. 1907]. WHOLE NO. 1085

IN MEMORY OF HUGH O. PENTECOST.

A sun has been blotted out of the world's intellectual firmament, but part of its vivifying radiance remains in the lesser luminaries which derived their light from him. The light which Hugh O. Pentecost effused into the intellectual world never will be extinguished. Clouds of superstition and ignorance will continue to gather for centuries perhaps, but they will be less extensive, less baneful to human intelligence than they were before the light of his radio-active mind fell upon them and in a measure dispersed them.

In my opinion, frequently expressed during his lifetime, Hugh O. Pentecost was the most beneficial, the most enlightening character the nineteenth century produced. Others did more in the material world by useful inventions; others did more in science, art and mercantile commerce; but as an interpreter of all these, as an awakener and stimulator of thought, Pentecost was supreme.

He was great as Jesus was great, not in world-wide fame, but in his glowing sympathy with the poor and the ignorant. Like Jesus, he was "the friend of the publicans and the sinners." But unlike Jesus, he preached salvation in this world through intellectual enlightenment, rather than in another world through repentance and contrition.

We are too close to the time of Pentecost to view him with the proper perspective and get a true conception of his greatness. Emerson, Whitman, Ingersoll and Thoreau were great in their respective spheres; Voltaire and Thomas Paine did much with their keen lances to slay the ogres of superstition; but Pentecost was a concentrated epitome of all these. As an iconoclast he had no superior, but in addition he had that gentleness of spirit, that sympathy with his fellow creatures which healed the wounds his lancet made in cutting out the cancer of their ignorance and replaced their former stupefying credulity with the uplifting and strength-giving faith in their own ability to remove mountains of injustice and oppression.

He was "the voice of one crying in the wilderness"—the wilderness of economic, political, religious and social despair. With him there was no such question as the one which perplexed Shakespeare's Hamlet:

> "Whether it is nobler in the mind to suffer
> The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,
> Or take up arms against a sea of troubles,
> And by opposing end them."

He was a supreme optimist. He declared, "There is no sin but pessimism," and though his keen eye discerned clearly the sorrows and injustice in the world to which the eyes of the unthinking are blinded, he put his whole strength into an effort to show men and women the folly of tolerating a society in which such things are possible as > "the whips and scorns of time,

> The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
> The pangs of despised love, the law's delay,
> The insolence of office, and the spurns
> That patient merit of the unworthy takes."

Starting in his young manhood as a Baptist preacher, thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Jesus, it was inevitable that he should come to see that the spirit of Jesus is not in the church. When his congregation sang, "All hail the power of Jesus' name!" it dawned upon him that the power in Jesus' name—or in any other name—is the power of superstition, which thickens instead of dispelling intellectual darkness and makes oppression possible. But he clung to the spirit of Jesus—clung to it until death. He gave up his pulpit to preach the higher and broader gospel of a new humanity. He had married Miss Ida Gatling, daughter of the inventor of the famous machine gun, but he devoted a large part of his mind and energy to exposing the foolishness, the needlessness, the criminality of war of men against their fellow men. His was the war of light against darkness, of intelligence against superstition.

For several years he conducted a radical magazine called the Twentieth Century. The title was too proximate. It should have been the Thirtieth Century, for the world is not yet ready to accept its humane teachings. The magazine, published weekly, was not self-supporting, and he abandoned it to take up the practice of law.

As a lawyer he devoted a great part of his time to defending poor persons, few of whom were able to pay him any fee. He defended the guilty as gladly as he defended the innocent, if not more gladly, for it was his belief that no man is as great a criminal as the society which makes him a criminal. In this work he found an able aid in Louis Stuyvesant Chanler, a millionaire lawyer, descendant of John Jacob Astor, and now lieutenant governor of New York. Mr. Chanler's views of the causes of crime were practically in accord with those of Mr. Pentecost, and he, too, was always glad to undertake the defense of a poor criminal free of charge, even though he knew his client to be guilty.

Just think of it! Only one man stands between the people of the State of New York and a governor who would allow no person to be put to death in the electric chair during his term of office and who might open the prison doors and restore to liberty several thousand convicts who were deprived of their freedom simply because they had not sufficient money to hire lawyers able to secure their acquittal.

For several years Mr. Pentecost had been conducting Sunday meetings in Lyric hall, in Sixth avenue, New York city. If ever a man had a "call to preach," that man was Hugh O. Pentecost. At these meetings he preached the religion of humanity. It has been suspected that some preachers preach for the salary they receive. But not so Pentecost. He made his living by practicing law, and preached for nothing. Collections were taken at his meetings, but he never urged any one to give. It frequently happened that he had to go down into his own pocket to make up the deficiency to pay the hall rent.

His congregation was a cosmopolitan medley, a large proportion being composed of poor Russian Jews living in squalid tenements on the east side of the city. But his hearers were thinkers and that is why they left their synagogues and went to hear Pentecost. Probably a more intellectual congregation could not be found in any church in New York city or in any other city.

In his congregation I have seen poorly dressed Russian Jew girls not more than 14 or 16 years old, employed during the week in sweat shops and shirtwaist factories, many of them carrying under their arms volumes by Emerson, Whitman, Thoreau, Henry George, Kropotkin or Edward Carpenter. While the sons and daughters of the rich were seeking amusement and passing their time in social gayety these Jewish girls were improving their minds by reading enlightening literature, and they had a grasp of economic conditions which some college professors never will attain.

To this heterogeneous crowd of lowly foreigners, with a light sprinkling of humane Americans, Pentecost preached every Sunday, with the exception of three months of rest in the summer. The soil was fertile and it will yet bring forth glorious fruit.

But, oh, the loneliness of the preacher! He alone of all men preaching Sunday after Sunday the gospel of freedom, of justice, of intelligence, of humanity. Sometimes doubts of the usefulness of his preaching would assail him, as they assailed Jesus when he would have gathered the people of Jerusalem as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and they would not.

"After all," I once heard him say, "it is not preaching, it is not books, that will solve the problem. How many of you ever read Voltaire?" One or two hands were raised. "How many of you ever read 'The Age of Reason,' by Tom Paine?" A few more hands went up. "How many of you ever heard Colonel Ingersoll speak?" Perhaps twenty hands were raised among the 700 pairs of hands in the hall. "I heard Colonel Ingersoll speak once—only once. It was a good speech—not as good as I had expected, but a good speech. Paine, Voltaire and Ingersoll were sincere and forceful men, but what did they accomplish, after all? When I began to preach the gospel of liberty and of intelligence some twenty years ago I had a sort of a vague idea that I was going to wipe out some of the churches, but," with a smile, "I guess all of them are still doing business at the old stands.

"The typewriter and the sewing machine have done more to emancipate woman and give her economic independence than all the books that ever were written, than all the sermons and lectures that ever were delivered."

I cannot but believe that Mr. Pentecost, when he said that, was committing what he calls the "only sin"—indulging in pessimism. The good effects of mechanical inventions in making economic freedom possible cannot be overestimated, but they would only increase the horror of economic slavery if the workers did not think. Pentecost was the leaven of life in the economic world which has made more palatable, more strength-giving, the bread which the toiler eats in the sweat of his face. He has sown fertile fields with thoughts which will blossom into a harvest that cannot be choked out by commercial greed or blighted by the darkness of superstition.

If the world had twenty men like Pentecost injustice would be driven to its lair and universal brotherhood would be established before the end of the twentieth century.

JONATHAN MAYO CRANE.

FREEDOM IN MATESHIP.

Dear Helen: The fact of variety is incidental. I do not argue for variety for variety's sake. That is not the point. The things to consider are individual and social happiness and well-being. Will you sever yourself from life or enter into it? Will you suppress life or express it? It is not a question of how many lovers one has, but of how to realize one's self, as an individual—how best to grow, intellectually and spiritually.

There is really not much use in our arguing the question. For you agree that love must be free, and that this freedom will only be realized when coercion and commercial considerations no longer dictate one's course in life. You also say that exclusiveness is not meant to prevent couples from separating at will and finding other mates. Then exclusiveness ceases to be exclusive, when that latitude is allowed.

"Free love" and "free exclusive monogamy" are inconsistent terms. You cannot have monogamy that is not exclusive, or love that is not free. All I am pleading for in this article is our freedom—yours, mine, and all people's who are desirous and deserving of freedom—to honorably have one lover or several in a lifetime, as their temperament or life conditions indicate. And as intelligent, conscious, responsible beings, the one state may be just as good and right as the other. I stand for the equality of varietism with exclusiveness. A marriage throughout the years is beautiful. I do not oppose it. I am in favor of it. But to be loved by more than one throughout the years is equally good and honorable. That is all I am trying to convince you—that the "plural" ideal is on an equality with the "single" ideal. I demand honor and purity and trueness, whatever the ideal of love may be. One lover? Several? I approve. If there is understanding and appreciation and joy. Just so there is honor and purity and knowledge.

True, the factory girl might not be able to use this knowledge with discretion. She would not understand it. And the ignorant and the submerged will not be able to realize any marriage condition well. They do not know how to live, least of all how to love. They abuse the state of exclusiveness to which they cling, more horribly than they could possibly abuse varietism, or as much at least. I am not attempting to conceive of my ideal as realizable for such as these. Ignorance truly enslaves, and for the ignorant your ideal, beautiful as it is, is out of reason, and so is mine. But my ideal is not to be condemned because you say it will not work with child-deserters, the diseased, the immature. Neither will exclusiveness thrive with them. These are the weaker links in society, and they cannot realize freedom. Fire might burn a child, but it is none the less beneficial to man on that account.

Exclusiveness or variety have nothing to do with the root of disease. Let us not lop off branches, but get down to the real cause, the root of the matter. Excesses, uncleanliness, unhealthful environments, ignorance of the laws of health, are the causes of disease. I do not offer my ideal of love to the immature mind, to the lazy, the impure-minded, or to the glutton. I would be the one to suffer, and I am not willing to cast pearls before swine, or to be a martyr, if there is such a thing.

For the many a life of exclusiveness is not possible or desirable. It is often maintained at the cost of physical vitality. A woman I know out on a lonesome western ranch is an ardent exclusivist in theory. And practically, too, for she said in a recent letter that out on the ranch she was pretty safe from temptation, but admitted that she did not know what might happen if she got back to civilization again! Much credit she deserves for her exclusiveness! How people masquerade and plume the virtues they do not possess! We all of us wear masks, and the funny thing about it is that we do not deceive each other. We know that the masks are there. They are the proper thing.

Kill out sympathy, if we could; kill out sensitiveness, kill out desire, kill out appreciation, kill out the red corpuscles, and there will be left good material for a lifelong course of exclusiveness.

One more count against exclusiveness: The exclusive wife of years almost invariably is an intellectual imitation of her husband, a reflector of his views on everything. She is an exclusivist because he believes in exclusiveness (for her).

So long as there is a desire to own and possess love, for one's own selfish exclusive satisfaction, so long as it is necessary for the state to interfere in what should be a purely personal matter, so long as the blighting curse of money considerations is a factor in choosing a mate, just so long will mateship be more or less irrational and artificial.

When we are free from these obstacles, and with the law of natural selection continuing to operate, varietism can be realized honorably and purely and intelligently. Realized thus, it will become desirable, and may eventually prevail because of its desirability. But not for the ignorant, the submerged, the immature. Only for the wise, the generous, the evolved. Affectionately, 40 Scott street, Chicago, Ill. GLADYS LAMB.

A MAN TO BE PROUD OF.

St. Anthony Comstock—Too Dear Sir: When I seen by the papers that you had seized all them vile catalogs and Miss Robinson, I says, says I, "There is a man the mothers of America can be proud of. There is a man to which all things is impure and will pertect the virtue of American children," so I take my pen in hand to thank God that American children has such a fearless and senseless pertecter. Too few knows that sex is vile and purity is clothes. Some says we wasn't born with clothes, and the Japanese mingles nood, but I says, "Here we air, and we ain't Japanese, and when Adam and Eve fell they was ashamed of them fig leaves, and they ought to be, and that shows what God thinks of the nood." If I had known you was living I would have written you long ago about your temptation in Utah, when them vile wimin hung about you nood in the desert and you drove them off. That is what I would expect from a Saint like you. Go on, noble Sir, in your precious crewsade agin vice and for clothes and may you and Mr. Madden, the Washington postmaster what pertects the males keep along in your good work till there is laws requirin babies to be born in garments and any girl who has nollege of sex is obeeee. Yours respectfully, MARIA MUGGINS.

—C. E. S. Wood, in Mother Earth.

"It is impossible that the imagination should conceive a more horrible and pernicious tyranny than that which would restrain the interdourse of thought."—Tenis Wortman.

THE BILLIONAIRE.

BY MAXIM GORKI.

[Translated from the German for The Arena, by Newell Dunbar.]

The kings of steel, of petroleum, and all the other kings of the United States have always in a high degree excited my power of imagination. It seemed to me certain that these people who possess so much money could not be like other mortals.

Each of them (so I said to myself) must call his own, at least, three stomachs and a hundred and fifty teeth. I did not doubt that the millionaire ate without intermission from 6 o'clock in the morning till midnight. It goes without saying, the most exquisite and sumptuous viands! Toward evening, then, he must be tired of the hard chewing, to such a degree that (so I pictured to myself) he gave orders to his darkies to digest the meals that he had swallowed with satisfaction during the day. Completely limp, covered with sweat and almost suffocated, he had to be put to bed by his servants, in order that on the next morning at 6 o'clock he might be able to begin again his work of eating.

Nevertheless, it must be impossible for such a man—whatever pains he might take—to consume merely the half of the interest of his wealth.

To be sure, such a life is awful, but what is one to do? For what is one a millionaire—what am I saying?—a billionaire, if one cannot eat more than every other common mortal! I pictured to myself that this privileged being wore cloth-of-gold underclothing, shoes with gold nails, and instead of a hat a diadem of diamonds on his head. His clothes, made of the most expensive velvet, must be at least fifty feet long and fastened with three hundred gold buttons; and on holidays he must be compelled by dire necessity to put on over each other six pairs of costly trousers. Such a costume is certainly very uncomfortable. But, if one is rich like that, one can't after all dress like all the world.

The pocket of a billionaire I pictured to myself so big that therein easily a church or the whole senate could find room. The paunch of such a gentleman I conceived to myself like the hull of an ocean steamer, the length and breadth of which I was not able to think out. Of the bulk, too, of a billionaire I could never give myself a clear idea; but I supposed that the coverlet under which he sleeps measures a dozen hundred square yards. If he chews tobacco, it was unquestionably only the best kind, of which he always sticks two pounds at a time into his mouth. And on taking snuff (I thought to myself) he must use up a pound at a pinch. Indeed, money will be spent!

His fingers must possess the magic power of lengthening at will. In spirit, I saw a New York billionaire as he stretched out his hand across Bering Strait and brought back a dollar that had rolled somewhere toward Siberia, without especially exerting himself thereby.

Curiously, I could form to myself no clear conception of the head of this monster. In this organism consisting of gigantic muscles and bones, that is made for squeezing money out of all things, a head seemed to me really quite superfluous.

Who, now, can conceive my astonishment when, standing facing one of these fabulous beings, I arrived at the conviction that a billionaire is a human being like all the rest!

I saw there comfortably reclining in an armchair a long, wizened old man, who held his brown, sinewy hands folded across a body of quite ordinary dimensions. The flabby skin of his face was carefully shaved. The underlip, which hung loosely down, covered solidly built jaws, in which gilded teeth were stuck. The upper lip, smooth, narrow and pallid, scarcely moved when the old man spoke. Colorless eyes without brows, a perfectly bald skull. It might be thought that a little skin was wanting to this reddish face, to this countenance that was expressionless and puckered like that of one newborn. Was this being just beginning its life, or was it already nearing its end?

Nothing in his dress distinguished him from the ordinary mortal. A ring, a watch, and his teeth were all the gold he carried with him. Scarcely half a pound, all told! Taken altogether, the appearance of the man recalled that of an old servant of an aristocratic family in Europe.

The furnishing of the room in which he received me had nothing unusually luxurious about it. The furniture was solid; that is all that can be said. Oftentimes elephants probably come into this house, I voluntarily thought at the sight of the heavy, substantial pieces of furniture.

"Are you the billionaire?" I asked, since I could not trust my eyes.

"Yes, indeed," he answered, nodding convincingly with his head.

"How much meat can you consume for breakfast?"

"I eat no meat in the morning," he avowed. "A quarter of an orange, an egg, a small cup of tea, that's all. . . . ."

His innocent child's-eyes blinked with a feeble luster, like two drops of muddy water.

"Good," I began again, half disconcerted. "But be honest with me; tell me the truth. How often in the day do you eat?"

"Twice," he answered, peacefully. "Breakfast and dinner suffice me. At noon I take soup, a little white meat, vegetables, fruit, a cup of coffee, a cigar. . . . ."

My surprise grew apace. I drew breath, and went on:

"But, if that's true, what do you do with your money?"

"Make more money!"

"What for?"

"To make more money out of that!"

"What for?" I repeated.

He leaned toward me, his hands supported by the arms of his chair, and with some curiosity in his expression he said:

"You are probably cracked?"

"And you?" I said. . . .

The old man inclined his head, and, whistling softly through the gold of his teeth, he said:

"Droll wag! . . . You are the first human being of your species that I ever became acquainted with."

Then he bent his head back and looked at me some time, silently and scrutinizingly.

"What do you do?" I began again.

"Make money," he answered, shortly.

"Oh, you're a counterfeiter!" I exclaimed, joyfully, for I thought I had finally got to the bottom of the mystery. But the billionaire flew into a passion. His whole body shook, his eyes rolled actively.

"That is unheard of!" he said, when he had calmed down. Then he inflated his cheeks, I don't know why.

I considered, and put further the following question to him:

"How do you make money?"

"Oh, that's very simple. I possess railroads; the farmers produce useful commodities, which I transport to the markets. I calculate exactly to myself how much money I must leave the farmer, in order that he may not starve and be able to produce further. The rest I keep myself as transportation charges. That's surely very simple!"

"And are the farmers satisfied with it?"

"Not all, I believe," he answered, with a naïve childishness. "But they say that the people are never satisfied. There are always odd characters who want still more. . . . ."

TO THE WORKERS, PRAISE.

To him shall praises be given who has wrought for the freedom of men;
And the race whose bonds are riven, with glorified voice and pen,
Shall render the man immortal whose marvelous grace and might
Have unbarred the long-locked portal that leads unto love and light.
What see we when shadowy fingers turn over the pages fast
Of the pitiless past which lingers and is not wholly past?
Grim warriors returning from far-lands, inwreathed with laurels of fame—
For them are the woven garlands, for them the noisy acclaim;
And hypocrite priests who wrangle of things that matter not,
While ever they strive to strangle the new-born babes of thought—
Foul priests that fatten on error and fill their fellows' lives
With toil and tears and terror; and Liberty bound with gyves—
Dethroned, unaccepterd, wreathless; and Labor the burden-beast
Of the warrior whose blade is sheathless to work the will of the priest—
These men of the crozier and tabor, the flavorous wine for those;
For the longing lips of Labor are left the feculent lees!
And Love—whose breast has breeded all worlds into life and light—
Abhorred by the priest-deluded, debased in their sullied sight,
Till even those rich and ruddy with health desert her tryst
To blindly adore the bloody and pallid corse of a Christ.
The past and the present bleeding, we have still these things of the past;
But we harry them on to their ending—forever they shall not last!
Ah, no! not as now forever shall the eyes of Hope be dimmed
For Freedom's fruitless endeavor, and Labor despised and unhymned.
For, lo! even now a glimmer athwart the heavens above!
And hate and fear grow dimmer in the crescent light of love!

—James M. Pryse.

Let love be free; free love is for the best.—Tennyson.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:

E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One year .....$1.00 Three months.....25 cents
Six months .....50 cents Single copies.....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

The National Equal Suffrage Convention will be held in Chicago Feb. 14-19. There will be three sessions daily in Music Hall, Fine Arts Building, except on Sunday, Feb. 17. On that day at 3:30 p. m. the Rev. Herbert Bigelow, Jane Addams and Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch will deliver addresses.

THE EDITOR IN CALIFORNIA.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., Feb. 5, 1907.

From the shore of the great Pacific Ocean I send back fraternal greetings to LUCIFER's office on the west shore of the inland sea, commonly called Lake Michigan.

Leaving Chicago Friday evening, Jan. 25, I reached Los Angeles Monday evening, Jan. 28, at 9:15, just four hours behind schedule time. At the Santa Fe station I found waiting for me Mrs. Catharine Fry, Messrs. W. N. Fry, W. C. James, Otto Carque, Irving W. Fox and two or three more whose names I do not now recall.

When writing to Los Angeles friends that I would probably start from Chicago on the 25th by Santa Fe "limited" train I could not state with any assurance the hour at which I would reach their city, and for two reasons: First, the notorious uncertainty of the Santa Fe management as to time of completing its contracts. I paid $70 in advance, good money of the realm, for my part of the bargain; the railroad covenanted with me to deliver my person and baggage at the other end of its line—viz., at the "City of the Angels"—on the evening of Monday, Jan. 28, at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes, Pacific time. If there had been an earthquake on the line, a cyclone or a "washout," making it impossible for the company to fulfill its contract in the time agreed upon and paid for, then no censure could be laid at its doors. But there was no such reason for delay. There was no storm of any kind; no snow to speak of on its track; no general thaw or flood to make the road-bed dangerous for rapid transit; no collision, nor danger of collision, that I heard of—nothing whatever on which to base an excuse for delay. In fact, judging from the nonchalant answers I received from conductors, it was regarded the usual thing to be three or four hours behind time in reaching the Pacific coast.

It was thus three years ago when I traveled over the same road from Chicago to San Francisco. Then, as now, my friends had waited at the station about four hours for the tardy train.

Time is money, saith the proverb. Suppose instead of a half dozen friends waiting four hours at the station, four hundred persons had been waiting four hours in a lecture hall for the arrival of a speaker for whose lecture they had paid each a dollar in advance? After vainly waiting three or four hours, would not each of these persons be entitled to receive his money back from the ticket seller?

And if the fault is with the lecturer himself, does he not, in equity, owe his friends a dollar or more each for the time lost in waiting?

I am told that a certain railroad company doing business between New York and Chicago recognizes the justice of this view, and that it actually pays back to the passengers one dollar each for every hour of time lost in fulfilling its contract. Why should not all railroad companies be required to do the same? Often an hour of time is worth much more than one dollar to the loser, but a dollar, even, is better than nothing.

Another reason why I did not write my friends the exact time of my expected arrival was the fact that I did not feel sure of my strength to bear the fatigue of a twenty-two hundred mile trip without stopping for rest. I wrote them that it was possible I would stop for a twenty-four hour rest at Las Vegas, N. M. For the two reasons just named I did not really expect to find any one waiting to meet me at Los Angeles. Hence the very agreeable surprise to find so many glad hands ready to clasp mine own when the tardy train at length landed its impatient and grumbling load of passengers upon the platform at the terminus of the route.

A somewhat ludicrous attempt, as it seems to me, on the part of the Santa Fe management to mollify the feeling of resentment for failure to fulfill contract as to time was the offer of a fine bouquet of flowers to each passenger as we neared the end of the route. The bunch of flowers cost the company perhaps three cents each, wholesale, and helped a little, no doubt, to make the impression upon beholders at the station that the passengers on the Santa Fe "limited" were all gay, happy and contented beyond the lot of ordinary mortals who cannot afford to travel by this aristocratic line.

The term aristocratic is used in no offensive sense, but simply to mean that the Santa Fe "limited" is built for the accommodation, apparently, of those who can afford to pay for the very best in the way of railroad accommodations. There are no day coaches at all attached to this train. The Pullman sleepers and the "state-rooms" are fitted up in the most luxurious style yet devised—so it it claimed. The dining-coach is under the management of one of the best-known hotelmen in the country, Mr. Fred Harvey, who runs several first-class hotels on the Santa Fe line. This train is supposed to stop at only the more important stations on the route and to make the very best possible time, and for these advantages the passengers must pay higher rates than those who travel by the tourist line, or other plebeian trains.

Why, then, should the Santa Fe "limited" be habitually three or four hours behind time?

And why, it may, perhaps, be asked, does LUCIFER's editor, a plebeian of the plebeians, travel in the aristocratic "limited" train? Why does he not ride on the common and cheaper "tourist" cars?

It was my intention to take the cheaper accommodations, as I did three years ago, when journeying to the same sunset land, but my good Chicago friends would not consent to any such "mistaken economy," as they termed it. I must have a "lower berth" on a first-class Pullman train, on account of the critical condition of my health. The trip was designed primarily as a means of restoring the health lost during my ten months' incarceration within prison walls, and this object must not be imperiled in order to save a few dollars in cost of transportation to the land of the orange and the vine, and of nearly perennial sunshine and flowers.

Since my arrival in Los Angeles I have been very kindly and carefully nursed at the home of Flora W. and Irving W. Fox, formerly of Rochester, Minn., but who have within the last eighteen months built for themselves a most beautiful and comfortable home in South Los Angeles, 425 East Forty-ninth street, near to South Park, but within a half hour's ride by street car of the postoffice and center of business of this most rapidly growing of all the cities of California and of the west coast of the United States.

In my next letter I will try to tell something of experiences and observations in this truly wonderful land. Meantime will be glad to hear from all friends in any part of the state, also in Oregon and Washington, who may care to have me visit them before my return to Chicago.

My address, till further notice, will be as above, care Irving W. Fox.

M. HARMAN.

Let there be light.—God.

RECENT BOOKS.

"SEX AND SOCIETY."

On hearing that Professor W. I. Thomas, of the University of Chicago, had produced a book placing women on a mental level with negroes, the writer at once became resigned to the expectation of perusing some thoughtful remarks after the manner of Tillman, that the lord made negroes—and in this case, women—without brains, so that they might wish no better felicity than that afforded by ministering to the noble white man; and she was most agreeably surprised to find that, as far as one could ascertain from the review of the book given in a recent paper, Professor Thomas has been guilty of saying something like this: If you don't give your muscles proper exercise, you cannot expect to keep them in really first-class condition.

The book, it seems, actually contains this paragraph: "Certain it is that no civilization can remain the highest if another civilization adds to the intelligence of its men the intelligence of its women." The intelligence of its women! Think of that, and then reflect that it was but yesterday, as time goes, when it was most pompously and authoritatively asserted that women had not brains enough to master the intricacies of Latin or of Greek; and as for mathematics, the peculiar lack of the reasoning faculties in their sex put that science most decidedly out of their mental range. Nowadays those of us who have had opportunity for observation in co-educational colleges or high schools have noted that women quite frequently walk off with the scholarships in those hitherto forbidden branches; so much so that in one institution of learning it was seriously debated not long ago whether women should not be shut out altogether, lest they discourage the men. If any remarks were made about the possibility of excluding men lest women become disheartened at the greater masculine prowess in some other studies or in football, the report forgot to mention them.

Says Professor Thomas: "At present we seem justified in inferring that the differences in mental expression are no greater than they should be in view of existing differences in opportunity." No sensible person will maintain that under our present social system a woman has anything approximating the same chance for mental or physical development that is afforded a man. In our public schools boys are given useful manual training which will go far toward starting them on the road to economic independence; while above the sixth grade, girls are debarred from wood carving, metal working, etc., and taught—to sew and cook! A pleasing course of instruction for an ambitious girl, to be sure! and a most unjust and harmful discrimination, moreover, when considered from the standpoint of the brain development produced by the skillful training of the hand.

For some mysterious reason, which the writer after considerable correspondence seems totally unable to ascertain, Armour Institute, in this city, is closed to women, except in the department of architecture, which, as explained by one of the deans, is opened to "ladies" (!) for the sole reason that the course is given in conjunction with the Art Institute, which pursues a more liberal policy. In Chicago there are abundant gymnasium facilities for men, and very limited ones for women.

Even the woman who is well equipped in some useful line of work will find there is a continual tendency to cut down her salary because she chances to be wearing petticoats; and as for the unfortunate women who are given absolutely no training to enable them to support themselves, they will marry the first man who happens to ask them, and all parties concerned will very likely be extremely unhappy ever afterward.

Furthermore, as Professor Thomas states, the present marriage system is thoroughly designed to put an effectual quietus upon the continued intellectual development of women. A woman who has spent a number of years in careful preparation for becoming a high school teacher, for example, will very likely be asked to resign if she marries. This sacrifice is asked of her entirely as a matter of course, that she may fulfill to the state the duty of giving it children—the state, in the meantime, carefully neglecting to consider how very great a recompense it owes her in return. In the opinion of the writer, it is no more just to ask a woman to resign a career because she becomes "a wife and a mother" than it would be to exact the same thing of a man because he happened to be "a husband and a father." The writer once knew a woman with an unusually beautiful and well trained voice, who married a man of some social standing, and he at once demanded of her that she cease to sing in public. (This actual case reminds one of Sudermann's "Magda.") His position in the matter was as unreasonable as would have been hers had she required that he abandon his professional career at marriage; especially would she have had the right to do this in the instance quoted, since she chanced to be chancellor of the exchequer in that family.

As far as the writer can judge from a mere newspaper review Professor Thomas has written a sensible and a useful book.

LOUISA H. DANA.

* * *

Editor Lucifer: When Senator Tillman made his now rather celebrated remarks here about the unmentionable destination of some of our laws, I confess that I thought the expression not warranted in a man in his official position. But if he spoke ex officio, no one who considers the law which condemns you as a publisher of "obscene" literature will question the correctness of his sentiment. It is always a pleasing curiosity in human nature to observe how those who do anything to help the race incur the greatest risk of paying dearly for offenses of that kind. Fortunately thumbscrews and hot pincers are a little out of date, and the church can no longer condemn to ostracism in this world and the flames of hell in the next. The most it can do is a sentence to Joliet for a man who is doing his best to make life a little more worth living for all of us.

A man was recently sentenced to the house of correction—speaking of the equity of law—for taking, with another man, 18 cents' worth of ham when they were hungry. He is still there. He took the ham from Swift & Co., whom I have understood to be members of a combination that steals at least several times 18 cents every day of the year, and none of whose members have, I believe, been imprisoned. Shame on Judge Cottrell, who sent these men to the Bridewell for ten and twelve months, respectively, for such an offense. Were he hungry for a few weeks he would doubtless help himself to ham or anything else he could get his hands upon. No one will respect law so long as we perceive such maladministrations of it.

The daily papers are most intolerant in the matter of anything touching the present marriage system. When Professor W. I. Thomas' new book on "Sex and Society" first began to be reviewed, unfavorable comments on it were published by the wholesale and in as conspicuous a manner as possible. I wrote a letter, of which I inclose you a copy, to say a few words in its favor, and to call attention to some of the wrongs to which women and girls are still subjected, and could not get any paper in this city to publish it. I believe I tried all of the larger ones except the American. If there is anything shocking or offensive in it I do not know what it is, but I do know that a very large part of what I notice in the daily papers, if I look at them at all carefully, offends me very much. Yours respectfully, LOUISA H. DANA.

Room 606, 175 Dearborn Street, Chicago.

"PAM."

I have recently read with considerable interest a new novel, called "Pam," by Bettina von Hutten, published by Dodd, Mead & Co. It is not a problem novel—at least not intentionally; I don't think it will ever be called the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of social reform; it can scarcely be called a great story, for it has its weak points. But the marriage tie, illicit love, illegitimate birth, etc., are treated so lightly and irreverently that if our keepers of morals really desire to preserve the sanctity of marriage they ought to imprison Bettina von Hutten.

There is nothing new in using irregular love and parenthood as the basis of a novel, but I never read one before that was not a tragedy. The story of Pam is not without seriousness, but the characters are so frank, honest and natural, so free from any feeling of guilt or self-reproach, that it is a comedy compared with many others of similar plot—"The Woman Who Did," for instance.

The unmarried mother, a member of an aristocratic English family, runs away with her lover, a married man. When her child, Pam, is nine years old her father's steward makes her a visit, and she gives him this explanation of the situation:

"'You see, I have never tried to hide things from her or any one else; I am not ashamed. You probably can't understand that, but it is so. I have never called myself by any name but my own, or pretended to be married. And when she was born we decided at once not to sacrifice to any gods in which we do not believe, even for her; she knows all about it.

"'Oh, I know all you think, for you think what every one does, except a few. I am different, you know; I always was. It doesn't bother me a bit, the opinion of the world. I suppose it's true what they say, about all the Yeoland women being ready to ruin themselves for—love. We are none of us really good, you know, except poor Rosamond, and she was so very plain. I remember once, when I was a little child, hearing some one say that no woman with Yeoland blood ever had any morals, and I suppose it's true.'

"She spoke in a tone of mild speculation not unlightened with amusement, but the old man winced."

Pam, the daughter, who is the heroine of the story, is charmingly frank, unspoiled and natural. In talking with the same old man she says, in answer to his questions: "My name is Pamela, just Pamela. It appears that children whose parents are not married have only one name."

In defense of her mother she says: "It wasn't her fault that father was married. . . . Of course she and father were sorry about Mrs. Kennedy, but they couldn't very well kill her, could they?"

Pam always considers her mother's love life an ideal one (which is one of the weak points in the story), and very early in her own life determines never to marry. When about ten years old she has the following conversation with an old housekeeper:

"I wish that I had twins."

"Perhaps your husband might not be pleased, though, Miss Pam."

"I am not going to have a husband."

"Now what a young lady you are, to be sure! There's no danger of your being an old maid."

"Who said I was going to be an old maid? Of course I shan't. I shall have a lover, and he will adore me as father adores mother; but marriage is a bêtise. Imagine me being an old maid!"

Some years later, in answer to the question why she thought love could not endure in marriage, she says:

"Because marriage seems to me to be so hampered and narrowed by a thousand humdrum cares and superstitions; because married people squabble and get over being in love; because the very fact that one has sworn to keep on feeling a certain way is bound to make one change. Imagine vowing in church to hate and loathe your bitterest enemy all the rest of your life and then trying to do it! It stands to reason that you'd begin to like him before you had got out of the church door! . . . I think people who love each other need no promises."

She falls in love with a man who has promised to marry a titled lady because she will aid him in his political career. His final choice is an obscure life with Pam rather than a brilliant one without her, but she refuses to accept him at such a sacrifice. She argues:

"It—your career—will never get old and wrinkled; it will never be ill; it will never contradict and torment you. And I should do all these things. All this, to say nothing of hurting her so terribly."

"But why should you mind hurting her? You have never blamed your mother for doing what she did—and what she did was more than what you might do."

". . . But now, somehow—perhaps because I know Lady Henrietta, and because I know that she loves you as much as I do—I simply can't do it."

After this they have one happy summer day together in "Arcadia," the name of her parents' home; then they part, presumably forever.

There is another book advertised, "Pam Decides," with, I presume, the same character, in which, I hope, the god of love may be kinder.

LILLIE D. WHITE.

"THREE ACRES AND LIBERTY."

This is the title of a new book by Bolton Hall which is now on the Macmillan presses and which will be published March 1. It is intended to open the eyes of the city man of small means, and the working man on precarious wages, to the feasibility of getting a living out of from one to three acres, either with or without giving up his present occupation, and without cutting himself off from near neighbors; also to show the possibilities of intensive culture. The author has endeavored to be absolutely practical, and in all cases to offer proof that the assertions made, if open to question, are justified.

LECTURE TOUR.

I intend to go on a lecture tour, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the Mother Earth Sustaining Fund. I have already been invited by the San Francisco comrades, and, on my way to the coast, I am prepared to lecture in the larger cities. Those wishing to arrange meetings will please communicate with me at once.

EMMA GOLDMAN.

308 East Twenty-seventh street, New York.

WHERE THE POLICE DO NOT INTERFERE.

Other people's inconsistencies are the queerest things in the world. I am led to this reflection by recalling a vaudeville performance I attended the other day. Usually the only amusement I get out of these affairs is in watching, in blasé superiority, an audience moved to merriment by fantastic horse-play, broad jokes and a kind of caterwauling which they innocently believe to be singing. As a rule I go away glad to get a breath of fresh air, and piously thanking God that I am not as other men.

After a disgusted interval of two or three years I went again the other day, and I think vaudeville is getting on. I was highly amused by a quiet monologist who seemed at home before his audience instead of merely brazen; endured with fortitude the usual "negro melodies"; laughed before I knew it at a revamped mother-in-law joke, and held my breath while the balancers did wonderful things with pyramids of lighted lamps and dinner plates set on edge.

I went in at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The playhouse was near the center of the shopping district, but to my surprise three-fourths of the large audience were men. I should have thought I was in the wrong pew if I had not known that the house was entirely "respectable." Hereafter I mean to beware of the so-called respectable. I have been misled by it several times of late, and had my sense of propriety outraged within its hypocritical precincts. On this particular occasion my mind flew to Bernard Shaw and "Mrs. Warren's Profession" for sanctuary!

Because I enjoy showing up other people's inconsistencies I must give a hint of the kind of thing which the police (our theatrical censors) consider harmless from a moral point of view—which is the same as saying that it is the kind of thing they enjoy. Who ever believes in his heart that what he really enjoys is harmful?

At the close of the afternoon a one-act skit was put on which appealed to my esthetic sense because it was well acted; but I confess I am not so well grounded in immodesty but that I blushed for everybody concerned except the women who were not there. I was proud of them, for I concluded they had taken the censorship into their own hands, where it ought to be, and had condemned the performance by staying away.

The scene was a stateroom in a sleeping car. An unmarried couple, strangers to each other, are traveling on other people's passes belonging to a man and his wife. The train conductor, wiser than he should be but not so frank, gives them the same stateroom. From this point on it needs Mr. Shaw himself to write of the play without giving offense to the reader. People who eat meat should never go to such places nor attempt to describe them in mixed company. I refuse myself to go any farther in this direction, and would not have alluded to it at all except in pursuit of the aforementioned inconsistency.

The point I wish to make is this: The blundering, stupid, low-minded police, in whose hands, practically, the censorship is in New York, permit this suggestive, lascivious sketch, nicely calculated to rouse (if I may speak plainly) the already overstimulated instincts of men, to be played in a leading theater every afternoon and evening without a protest.

But they confess themselves horribly shocked at a play like "Mrs. Warren's Profession," in which there is not a salacious word or a suggestive situation, where there is not even a low-necked dress nor a short skirt. The truth is, they are shocked by Shaw's play because they scent danger to their profession. It was written to show the degradation which comes to women who pander to the debased appetites of men, and shows fearlessly the false social condition which drives women into that occupation.

The only inference possible is that in the eyes of the police it is disclosure of the cause of body and soul destroying thoughts and practices which is shocking, not the things themselves. The police get their living because of these practices, and only a simple-minded person saws off the limb on which he is sitting.

I suspect I have made the police out to be not so inconsistent after all. Maybe it is the public, which does not see through their little game, which is really queer.—Bertha W. Howe, in Truth Seeker (New York).

We have thought to make our marriage tie stronger by taking away all means of dissolving it; but the more we have tightened the constraint, so much the more have we relaxed and detracted from the bond of will and affection.—Montaigne.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

ELBERT HUBBARD, East Aurora, N. Y.—My Dear Moses: It was a great pleasure to me to meet you face to face, although you were behind prison bars. What I wanted to do was really to take your place and wear that baggy suit of gray and let you go free.

Emerson said that as Jesus Christ had rendered the cross sacred, so John Brown made the gallows glorious. About all of the really good men who have ever lived have been in prison; but any way I am glad you are out, for we can have too much of even a good thing.

Truth is a mighty precious article and destiny demands that it shall be fought for; it is not given gratis, and some have to suffer, even give their lives, that humanity may be free.

I have read the last number of LUCIFER with pleasure and profit, and Alice likes it very much. It is all in good temper, and while it is forward and direct it is written without bitterness. Your articles on the Chicago press are especially good, so Alice says, and Alice knows.

I believe my subscription has expired and so I hand you $2 for renewal and also to record the name of Lyman Chandler, East Aurora, N. Y.

So here are love and blessings for you and all those who love you, and, whether they do or not, we will not complain.

J. WARNER MILLS, Denver, Colo.—My Dear Mr. Harman: When I lose my interest in men and women in trouble I expect to lose my interest in the world. With the deepest heartache I have followed you throughout your trial and tribulations to the last day of your martyrdom. What is grander than the moral uplift of one steadfastly standing for the right of free speech and free press!

Your patient endurance of the punishment inflicted upon you has a grandeur that must be reckoned with in the invoice of the world's best ideals. What hope is inspired when we see, amid the rushing madness for the "almighty dollar," that there is one brave and noble man suffering for a righteous cause, who even in prison does not lose his wits or his ideals, but calls upon his friends to send him the treasured songs and poems of his youth, that he may hum away the weary hours of prison toil!

I am sorry I cannot be with you at your New Year's greeting, but enclose herewith a little token that may help you have a Merry Christmas.

J. D. WILSHIRE, 448 Linden avenue, San Francisco, Cal.—Dear Comrade Harman: I have just read in LUCIFER of January 17 of the splendid demonstration of sympathy and support made by your friends in Chicago on New Year's day. I wish I could have been present. I have a deep appreciation of your splendid services in the cause of freedom and hope that your days of martyrdom are now ended. Are there not other ways of circumventing an open-mouthed lion than by putting your head in his mouth?

Am very glad to hear that you are coming to this coast and am ready to do everything in my power to make your tour a success. The supporters of LUCIFER in each locality should organize prior to your arrival, so as to be ready to receive you and make the most effective use of your presence. Halls should be secured and the meetings well advertised. If you could have lithographs of yourself, with references to your imprisonments and their causes and announcements of meetings, forwarded for display in shop windows it would be of great advertising value. Hope you will bring along plenty of good literature for sale also.

If your friends in and around San Francisco who may wish to get together either for the pleasure of extended friendship and association, or for the promotion of our common cause, or for both purposes, will send me their addresses I will endeavor to bring about a meeting at which organization may be effected.

E. V. DEBS, Terre Haute, Ind.—Mr. Moses Harman—My Dear Brother: I have just returned and find your good letters awaiting me. A thousand thanks! Each word is precious to me. The reception was worthy of you and I regretted extremely not being there. You may be sure my heart was with you. I have but a moment here to pack my grip for the West, the call being from Moyer and Haywood, whom I feel bound to serve to the last drop of my blood. I hope you will recuperate your strength and be spared many years yet to enjoy the fruitions of your noble life-work. My loving regards and best wishes to you and all beneath your roof.

E. C. MCDONALD, Buffalo, N. Y.—Inclosed find $2—$1 for my subscription, and for the other dollar please send me as many copies as it will buy of the recent number of LUCIFER, No. 1084. The article, "The Moral Breakdown in the Churches," by Dr. A. S. Crapsey, is what I want. I had the pleasure of hearing three of his lectures lately and I think I can do some missionary work with them. So please send them, and also kindly let me know if the other lectures are printed and obtainable.

THE FRATERNAL HOMEMAKERS

is a co-operative fraternity that provides independence for its members by the accumulation of small savings actively employed in the cultivation of Gulf Coast crops. Safer than savings banks; better than life insurance. Writh for particulars to

PAUL TYNER, Secretary,
70 Dearborn st., Chicago, Ill.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"To a rational being the prudential check to population ought to be considered as equally natural with the check from poverty and premature mortality."—Thomas Robert Malthus, 1806, English Political Economist.

THE MALTHUSIAN LEAGUE, CHICAGO, ILL., JANUARY, 1907.

MOSES HARMAN, HONORARY PRESIDENT.

OUR MOTTO—"It is the right of every child to be well born."

OUR PURPOSE—To agitate and take such other means as may be necessary to secure the abolition of all laws which make either the printed or oral discussion of sex problems a criminal offense, also to restore the right to the use of the United States mails for the transmission of such printed matter to the people, in order that knowledge of sex and its rightful functions may be disseminated, where now only ignorance abounds, which is responsible for much crime and misery.

HULDA L. POTTER-LOOMIS, Secretary,
247 Twenty-third street, Chicago, Ill.

[N. B.—Contributions to our cause are earnestly solicited and may be sent to the secretary until further notice. The same will be duly acknowledged in LUCIFER.]

THE FREE SPEECH LEAGUE.

invites correspondence, cooperation, and membership of all who claim rights, and dare maintain them.

Join us. Help us. Get our list of books. Read them—pass them on. Liberty tracts by Ingersoll, Wakeman, Walker, Pentecost, Darrow, Post and Schroeder. Read "Our Vanishing Liberty of Press" (5c) and "Do You Want Free Speech?" (10c) and so learn

WHY YOU SHOULD ACT WITH US.

FREE SPEECH LEAGUE, 120 Lexington avenue, New York.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

A Striking Sex Series

is appearing in SOUNDVIEW, of which JAMES F. MORTON, JR., the well known author and lecturer, says: "Puget Sound at last has a magazine adequately representative of Progressive Thought. It is frank and fearless, refined and vigorous, witty and eloquent."

Every reader of LUCIFER should secure this remarkable symposium, whose contributors are among the brightest minds of the age. Theodore Schroeder, of the New York Bar, begins a strong article in the January issue, on "What Is Purity? A Study of Sex Overvaluation," which is alone worth the price of a yearly subscription.

This series began in 1906. Only a few complete sets remain. Order as soon as you read this.

$2.00	SPECIAL	$2.00
	Back numbers with sex articles.....$2.00
	"Soundview" for 1907..... 1.00
	"Wildwood Philosophy," former price..... 1.00
	Total $4.00
	To LUCIFER readers for only $2.
$2.00	SPECIAL	$2.00

To the "Suspicious": Two copies of Soundview, Soundview, Jr., and a copy of "The Choice," a sex-poem, 10 cents.

This "Special" is by order of the "Moss Evergreen."

Address THE EVERGREEN (That's who!)
Olalla, Wash, U. S. A. (That's where!)

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

Natural Rights.

BY M. KUHN.

A little book so small that it is full—so full that it is big. "Natural Rights" should be read by every man and woman, young or old, married or single, capable of thinking. It throws a limelight on many things of intense interest. Just from the press. Small edition. Autograph copies, consecutively numbered, bound in paper, postpaid, 10c, silver or stamps. Order now. Address M. KUHN, North St. Paul, Minn.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The Ous Tube. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Cause of Race Prejudice.

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

A timely, fair, earnest and important study of a great question.

Mr. Morton, an undergraduate associate at Harvard of the distinguished negro sociant, Professor Du Bois, has forcefully, yet dispassionately and in interesting style, made a powerful arraignment of the evils of race prejudice. There is nothing narrow or sectional in his work, nor does he confine its scope to prejudices against a particular race. Writing as an American white man, he surveys all the race prejudices of American white men, whether against the negro in one part of America, the Indian in another, or the Chinaman in another. And he notes the same morbid hostility in Russia against the Jews, and in all the domineering nations and races of history against races or nations they had wronged.—The Twelve (Chicago.)

Price, 25c. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Stellar Ray.

SUCCESSOR TO SUGGESTION.

The Stellar Ray is a magazine for thinkers. Discusses thought force, will power, astral science, occultism, all forms of drugless healing, brain building, the cultivation of mental forces, and the psychological and physiological principles that bring health, happiness and success.

The Stellar Ray advocates no creed, no dogma, no fad or ism. It stands for progress and freedom in all lines of modern thought. It is a practical magazine for those who think. It teaches how to live without disease or worry. It teaches how to have health without drugs or doctors. It teaches how to use the powers within one's self for success, for poise and self-mastery.

THREE MONTHS' TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION.

Write us a postal card as follows:

Editor The Stellar Ray, Hodges Building, Detroit, Mich.

Please enter my name as a subscriber to your magazine, on the following conditions: After receiving three numbers I will either—

(1) Promptly notify you to discontinue my subscription, in which case there is no charge for the three issues received; or

(2) I will remit the subscription price, $1. (foreign, six shillings). I also reserve the privilege of canceling my subscription at any time, paying only for the numbers received.

Name .....

Address .....

What the Young Need to Know.

A PRIMER OF SEX RATIONALISM.

BY E. C. WALKER.

SUGGESTIONS OF CONTENTS: Is There Necessity for This Knowledge? Analogous Dangers and Safeguards. Unwisdom of Custom-Sanctioned Ignorance. Teachers Better If of Opposite Sex. Division of the Subject. Definitions of Sex. Evolution of Sex; Differentiation. Reproduction Less and Less Perilous. Inestimable Value of Use. Joy Is Positive, Upbuilding. The Deciding Majority of Two. The Tendency to Multi-Selection. A Serious Error in Exchange. Effects of Meat, Stimulants and Narcotics. Reproduction and Social Happiness. Not so Many Children, but Better Ones. Legal Intrusion Has a Limit. Voluntary Complexity, and Health. Comparative Exemption of the Jews. The Upward March. Cure and Irremediable Punishments. Origin of the Shame of Sex. Derived from Other-World Mania. The Son of God" and Sex. Faithful Followers of Jesus. Relation of Past Asceticism to Existing Type. Mental Slaves Are Not Investigators. Remaud and Clarimonde. Sex Manifestation Below Our Race. Sex Inspiration in Human Endeavor. What is Immodesty? Primities and Present Day Savage Customs in Dress. Civilized Customs and Costumes. What We Affirm on This Subject. Bathing and Dress. Asceticism and Honesty in Art. Arguments of the Puritan. Judge Phillips and Mr. Moody. To Take the Purity of Nudity in Art for Granted. Asceticism and Literature. Foolishness of Hiding Social Wrongs. Take off the Taboo.

Price, 15 cents.

MOSES HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61,
BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST,
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1085

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Who Is the Enemy: Anthony Comstock or You?

BY E. C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.

THE "MORAL" CENSORSHIP—The Inspiration of the Censor; A "Protection" that Betrays; Utter Lack of Discrimination; Vain Deals of Facts; A Greater Wrong to the Child; Some Officers' Zeal; Imagined "Plots"; The Law as Administered; The Vicious Law of Obscene Libel; Obscene Libel and Expert Testimony; Judge and Jury and "the Plots"; Some Criticisms Answered; The Common Law Yesterday and Today; Wrong Principles of Action; The Censorship and the Bible; Structure It Conway on Censors; Where Lies Responsibility—on Censor or You? The Cause of Slow Advance; Sex a Mistake—"Somebody Blundered"; Suppression Not Seriously Crippled; The Worship of Death and Decay; Characteristic Eruptions of Sex Panic.

THE "FRAUD ORDER" FRAUD—Remarkable Deliverance by Judge Thomas; The Courts and the Constitution; The Persecution of "Freedom"; Grateful for Injuries Received.

THE CENSORSHIP OF SECOND-CLASS MATTER—The Department's Rules of Exclusion; Statistics of Official Financiering; Two Arguments About Government Socialism.

Price, 20 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (256 pages, 5x7 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

POEMS OF VARIED FEELING.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

The author is well known to the readers of LUCIFER, many of the poems in this volume having made their first appearance in our columns. The title well expresses the character of the work; the verses breathe of life and liberty and love; the charms of the seasons and the beauties of nature. The spirit of revolution, too, is voiced in "Liberty and the Commune," "In the Hour of Execution," "You Fishye Dead," and other poems. "To the Enemies of Free Speech"; "The Challenge of Liberty"; "A Ballade of Butterflies"; "The Bolstering Knights"; "Father Dandelion"; "Four Loves"; "Death Is Life"; "Looking on the Sierras"; "Mother Heart," are a few titles taken at random, showing the varied scope of the work.

12 mo, cloth; gilt title; 160 pages; $1. postpaid.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,

For the Separation and Segregation and The New Civilization.

2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, FEBRUARY 28, E. M. 307 [C. E. 1907]. WHOLE NO. 1086

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD.

She was young and she didn't know,
He was old and he didn't care;
So they were led to the kirk, as though
Heaven's blessing awaited there.
Prayers of the pastor so glibly said,
Ring on her finger, veil on her brow—
So they were married, so they were wed,
Under the bonnie bridal bough.

And over and over the church bell tolled
The solemn message, "To have—to hold!"

He was false, but he learned the truth;
She was true, but she learned to lie;
Strangers by nature they stood, in sooth,
Handcuffed together till one should die.
She was chained to his poisoned life,
An angel married by a priestly thug;
Partners in hatred, "husband and wife,"
So the sentence read—and their term was long.

And over and over the church bell tolled
The solemn message, "To have—to hold!"

Thus they lived in a half-live way;
She was querulous, he was coarse.
"Love!" spake the Church, and again, "Obey!"
But the priest-curse stood on the word "Divorce."
So at last when he came to die
Many clerical gentlemen
Gasped at the joy in her freedom-cry
Like a bird released from a dragon's den.

And the church bell rang with a bridal voice,
"Lo, death hath parted the twain—rejoice!"

—Wallace Irwin, in Life.

FREEDOM AND THE LAW.

By Lizzie M. Holmes.

I heard an orthodox Presbyterian minister say in a sermon recently: "If everyone had the love of God in his heart, we would need no laws, courts, jailers or prisons."

I do not believe he knew how radical a statement he was making. He, who professed to believe that men could only be kept from the depths of wickedness by the fear of an everlasting hell, could not realize how significant a declaration he was making in saying that law should spring from within—that conduct could be regulated by the condition of the inner man, and need not necessarily depend upon restraints, penalties and restrictions from outside.

We liberty lovers deem freedom precious because we know that only under it can we develop and grow to our full selves. Our opponents—or rather, those who do not understand us—profess to believe that we only want liberty that we may indulge all our passions and desires, which must necessarily be evil, they believe. It is so difficult for the ordinary man to comprehend that freedom to do what one likes will eventually lead to our doing the very best that is within us to do.

If "the love of God" is within us, we need no outside law. You may call it the love of God, or the love of humanity, or the love of the highest and best we can comprehend—it is all the same. That love will naturally find expression in the kindest deeds, the sweetest sympathy, the tenderest helpfulness, without any suggestion of coercion or compulsion.

Have you read the article of Julian Hawthorne's in Wilshire's? He says in substance that the man who obeys the code is "unmoral." Not "immoral," but he is simply not actively virtuous in merely conforming to set rules of conduct. The Jews, he said, obeyed the law as set forth in the ten commandments—they did certain things and refrained from doing certain other things, because they were so commanded, not because they in their hearts particularly wanted to do so; their only real virtue consisted in obeying God—if that was a virtue.

But when Christ came, he swept away the whole necessity for a decalogue with the one simple commandment, "Love one another." For love, he knew, was all that was essential in human relations. Love would carry out the plan of justice and harmony, without each deed being specified and emphasized with a "Thou shalt not."

It is this idea that lies at the bottom of the old saying which preachers used to thunder from their pulpits: "You will be damned if you rely on your own goodness! Morality will not save you—you must be born again!" though we used to think this the height of absurdity. It is true that the man who obeys a code, creed or set of statutes merely because they are laws and it is considered the proper thing to obey them, is not inherently "saved." He is merely good by rote. Some time temptation will come to him in a new form, something not set down in the code, and then he will be without a standard. In such an hour he will wrong some one, inflict a pain or an injustice from which he will not recover, perhaps for ages. It is this strict obedience to law, leaving, after all, the subject at a loss in cases not set down, which works so much misery and woe to the larger portion of humankind. The law says one must not break into a house and steal away the money valuables stored there; one must not pick another's pockets with his own hands, or take a loaf of bread belonging to another even if he be starving; one must not commit an "overt act," though it be in defense of his right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; one must not enlighten the people on topics tabooed by this same law, though the people are suffering and dying for such light; one must not do some kinds of work on Sunday, though no man living can tell what kinds of labor are wicked. One must not be born, or get sick, or die, or unite with one he loves, without calling on an emissary of the law to sanctify and legalize the same.

But the law does not forbid one man from robbing a hundred others of the fruits of their toil, providing he does it according to the rules of the game; it does not forbid speculation in the necessities of life until thousands of human beings starve to death or at least go hungry and cold; it does not restrain men from piling up enormous heaps of wealth others create; it does not prevent the kidnaping of innocent men, and holding them in prison in fear of their lives for so many months that we begin to count them in years. Mighty wrongs are committed in spite of the law, by the law and for the law. Law being only law and not "the love of God in our hearts," it crushes its subjects in their very obedience to it.

That genuine love, that sense of common brotherhood which the truly "awakened" know, never makes such mistakes. It will know what to do in every emergency. So that, if a lawgiver has made a blunder, or omitted some essential point, no harm is done—no one can possibly be wronged when love is the inspiration.

But, it will be said, "Freedom is all right, perhaps, if everyone had this love of God or love of humanity in their hearts; but when they have not—what then? What are you going to do with those who have the hate of the devil in their hearts?"

Well, even so, are we any better off, living under laws made by these same beings with "the hate of the devil in their hearts"?

We are never sure that only people of love will rule over us; rather, we are quite certain they will not. For people with the love of God in their hearts do not desire power over others and will not use it if they can.

We want freedom principally because only under freedom will good people with the love of God in their hearts develop rapidly and generally. Human beings cannot be made good by laws and punishments. They may be made to conform to certain laiddown rules of conduct; but that is not true "goodness." If we must always be told in detail just what to do in every step in life, can we ever learn to be self-reliant, wise, good and happy? You know the old adage about learning to swim. You might tow a sailing vessel safely across the ocean a dozen times, but unless you gave it a crew, a sailing master, a compass and a rudder, and sent it out to make its own way, you would never know whether it was a good and worthy ship or not. We must be free to grow and develop, or we can never know of what we are capable. Even if we make mistakes at first; even if we are too daring and rash in the beginning; even if we suffer ourselves, and make others suffer, we must have liberty to try and try again. Only thus can we work out our own salvation.

If it were wise to advise, we might urge the beginner on the path of freedom to raise a standard of his own and endeavor to live up to it. We might say that he ought not to allow himself to drift rudderless, a prey to every impulse and passion—but no! We will not say "ought not." Rather say, "You may if you like. For we know that somewhere, some time, some way, you will come up, bruised and bleeding, wounded and sore distressed perhaps, but sane and 'awakened.' You will have learned that love is the law of the universe and that you are one with every living creature in it; that you cannot find your own happiness while regardless of the unhappiness of others, and that your higher self is in touch with the higher self of every other being. We would save you some of the bruises and buffetings if we could, but it is another law of the universe that everyone must learn his lesson for himself."

MOTHERHOOD AND THE HOME.

By George E. Bowen.

In an address recently given before the Woman's Club of Elgin, Illinois, in furtherance of the proposed plan of the National Federation of Woman's Clubs to establish in every city and town in the United States an auxiliary political equality or equal suffrage league, one of the essential purposes announced by the principal speaker was to bring about better conditions surrounding the home, as an institution, and a higher and saner appreciation of motherhood (with all natural prerogatives) as its sacred mission and most precious and exalted ideal.

The speaker, Dr. Lucma Johnson, an authorized suffrage propagandist of the National Federation of Woman's Clubs, among other things, declared: "It is a shame and a disgrace that a child can legally be taken from its mother" (as in certain states enumerated).

Without knowing Dr. Johnson's particular views regarding causes, as well as effects, or her opinions of legal assault, as well as legal abduction, I am not inclined to consider her plea inopportune or inconsistent, and believe, with her, that "it is a shame and a disgrace that a child can be legally taken from its mother."

But, in proposing a reorganization or readjustment of domestic principles, practices and statutes, is it not shortsighted, even idle, to undertake a correction merely of effects, without accomplishing a complete and clean revision of the adjustable moral code and a rational cure for the prime evil, that should and could be prevented by these same votes to be created by this most commendable politico-social movement?

I am not willing to believe that "As it was in the beginning" should apply to man-made laws, selfishly perpetuated by these same men, while they retain and control the power to regulate social conduct by a conveniently revisable and cowardly system of sex-ethics, legally entrenched and fortified.

Hence I am glad to announce my faith in an ultimate overthrow of our present social fiction, typified by modern marriage—the unmoral, incongruous and indefensible contract based on property, privilege, or compelling masculine authority, named legal, for effect.

And for the destruction of this abomination, rooted in man-law, you strike at the flower and the fruit, as your masters have taught you.

But this radical change can only be brought about by the intelligent, courageous and unanimous political action of woman herself, who will not only say, philosophically, "It is a shame and a disgrace that a child can be legally taken from its mother," but must add, or rather, first declare, politically, through an equal ballot, "It is a greater, the greatest crime against humanity and the future welfare of the race for an unwelcome child to be legally forced upon an unwilling and helpless mother, into the endless damnation of unkind, impossible conditions, domestic, social and economic."

Otherwise this plea for equality is a pitiful travesty and its mockery shall forever sneer at woman's inconsistency, weakness and superficiality.

I believe the majority of "respectably" married women, living in a sort of perfunctory acquiescence and thoughtless allegiance to the dominant influences of the "home circle" (limited), cherish a timid, somewhat vague, yet fervent hope that some appearance of justice, some definite application of it, to say nothing of real affection, or true sympathy and understanding, may yet gladden, if not completely glorify, the narrow and exhaustive marital service to which their lives—nay, their souls—are now blindly consecrated.

But, as to ways and means, a mother's treadmill existence, with few and frivolous recreations, a hopeless outlook, and no freedom of body or mind, has never permitted a suggestion, much less proposed a policy, a propaganda or a militant crusade.

Economically disqualified from saving to herself even the child she did not invite, how shall unequal woman take up successful arms against long-established social institutions, of which, as yet, by her own fearful interpretation of their hollow laws, and her reverent, sometimes cringing submission to their senseless sound, she is but the plaything, the pastime, the drudge, the wretched dependent? True, she is clothed, fed, sheltered, amused. So, even with more lavish luxury and unrestrained affection, is her outcast sister of the street. (Poor little painted sister of prostitution, inevitably the haunting shadow of sacred marriage.) But fine feathers do not create fearlessness nor yet honesty of spirit or purpose.

Is woman ready to unveil the majesty of sex? To renounce the authority of ages; to make a first and final stand for the more than human right to the uncommanded, unlegalized exercise of her own highest nature; for the right to claim as well as to refuse motherhood, according to her reason, her happiness and her conscience?

Should this prospective movement outlined by Dr. Johnson attain the force and dignity of an earnest human protest against sex-slavery and its legal oppressions, it promises a long needed deliverance of the feminine mind from its pitiful subservience to priestly superstitions and the brutal traditions bequeathed of ancient days, if not woman's actual bodily emancipation from that infamous though cleverly mystified tyranny now sanctioned by the church and legalized by the state as "holy matrimony."

The divorce court records; the ecclesiastical consternation, high and low; the criminal calendar; the prosperous and rarely exposed special hospital practice; the overtaxed insane retreats; revelations of the Stanford White style of degeneracy; the army of homeless waifs drifting toward the jungles of prostitution—all these vividly picture a tragic situation which no pulpit oratory, no philosophy of patience nor of pure obedience to present rules, no one-sided science of society can palliate, defend or explain.

Successive generations of the beasts of the field outrival one another in physical perfection and all other points of superiority, through systematic, scientific selection, attended by every reasonable consideration of health, comfort, happiness and the fitness of things.

In nature's realm are no congenital mesalliances, no deliberate debauchery, no persistent perversions, no sexual insanity, no pestilence.

Behold the breed of humans and human tendencies! A sorry tribute to man's authority, greed, ignorance, passion; to woman's accepted helplessness, vanity and intellectual sloth.

Are wives, mothers—and daughters also (for they, too, stand perilously before this Moloch; they, too, should know and understand the beautiful processes, as well as the vital responsibilities of their nature, which our blundering educational system has deliberately hidden behind a screen of shameful mystery and vicious prejudice)—are these prospective voters ready to accept salvation—to comprehend it, to take it, to make it their own forever?

Is their courage equal to a revolutionary operation which will completely sever the grip and guidance of legalized lust in lawful prostitution?

Is their endurance ready to give up, even temporarily, all the persuasive fineries of fashion, all the stultifying privileges heretofore bribing conscience and flattering vanity, for cold neglect, bitter and unrelenting persecution, and abusive threatenings?

The study of social freedom is less engaging and attractive to a painted society doll than pink tea invitations or charity ball bewilderments, but, thank heaven, the real, bribboned plaything of fashion has few successful imitators in the average home, and the heart of womanhood is not seriously affected, although her mental forces, long cramped and biased by the suffocating influences of fashion and the blinding restraints of prejudice, can not be expected to easily leap to independence at a single bound. (Some men have been unsuccessfully trying it for several thousand years.)

There is need of much kindergarten work among the slaves to "duty" as their grandmothers and, later, the minister explained it—for "duty" is the unquestioning child of "authority." But there is great reassurance in this present "call to arms," and it is to be hoped that the answer will being both the courage and the intelligence to confidently accept the responsibilities of investigation, organization, and devoted, resolute service to the highest cause of all—free motherhood.

If woman, yoked, can not rescue her own child from the man-law; if the child, which is hers only through the mother love which has forgotten her sex-tragedy, is even by its brute-father to be torn from her affection and sacrifice by his brave law—what of the child?

What of the child!

The centuries have been confounded with this question.

The centuries that have been mumbling: "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The child himself, a victim, disfigured, deficient, diseased or abnormal, has no preventive answer from all the laws of many Christian lands. He can not assert his right to be well born.

An investigation now being made in Chicago public schools of conditions surrounding unnatural sex development, of its perverted expression, reveals the terrible importance of open, universal, high-minded knowledge of the divine principle. Children forced upon helpless or indifferent mothers soon become the logical dependency of that mechanical, unmotherly institution, the public school, of which we demand so much, providing nothing but scant appropriations and unwelcome children. In this sort of half-day nursery or orphanage the sins of the fathers seek and find early revival.

As a compact, well-disciplined, intelligent body, inspired by lofty ideals and earnest purpose, the National Federation of Woman's Clubs should successfully inaugurate, on the lines just considered, a world-wide campaign, the political victories and moral significance of which will overshadow all its memorable achievements.

Not being permitted the opportunities of womanhood, my obligation to it must be content to admire and encourage its every effort for equality and the supreme, essential right of self-control.

Meanwhile, there echoes through my heart the thrilling cry: "It is a shame and a disgrace that a child can legally be taken from its mother. It is a greater, the greatest crime of all, that an unwelcome child can be legally forced upon an unprepared and unwilling mother."

And the voice of the future answers: "What of the child?"

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AND WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

By Eva Harriman.

That is a big subject and you need not expect from me at this time a long dissertation on it. My only intention just now is to mention a case which came up in the Chicago municipal court the second week in February, while the National Woman's Suffrage Convention was in session in that city.

I wonder how many of the good and zealous women who attended that convention and labored to arouse public sentiment in favor of giving women the ballot felt the least indignation at two great governments which were challenging and denying the right of a poor Russian woman to her personal liberty.

Here is the story of Mrs. Johanna Rogdanski, her husband, and Joseph Kowalski, as reported in a daily newspaper:

"Baron Schlippenbach, Russian consul in Chicago, is to help untangle a case that is before Municipal Judge Pake, sitting in the Criminal Court. In this case, in which three persons are directly involved, none of whom can speak English, two families, most of whose members are in Russia, are interested. The defendants are Joseph Kowalski and Mrs. Johanna Rogdanski, who are charged with violating the law in living together. It was not a difficult matter to reach the conclusion that Kowalski was guilty of the charge, but when it came to giving a sentence that would be justice to all concerned, the court found itself in a predicament.

"Behind Kowalski sat Mrs. Rogdanski. In her arms she held an infant and at her side sat her husband. Despite the fact that the wife stood up and admitted she had been unfaithful to him, her husband pleaded with her to go back to him. She only made angry replies and made a motion to hit him on the nose, and Rogdanski hastily withdrew. Kowalski and Mrs. Rogdanski made no effort to deny that they had lived together as husband and wife, and both admitted that Kowalski was the father of the infant in the woman's arms.

"The testimony disclosed that Kowalski has a wife and several children in Russia. Mrs. Kowalski, he said, is insane, and without his support she, as well as her children, must starve. Mrs. Rogdanski has four children in the old country. Her husband was employed by the government there and the family was in fairly good circumstances.

"She and Kowalski eloped to America one year ago, Kowalski leaving his wife and children behind and Mrs. Rogdanski her husband and children. They brought along 500 rubles belonging to Rogdanski. The latter started after the elopers and two months ago found his wife and Kowalski living together at 915 One Hundred and Seventh street in South Chicago. His wife would not return to Russia and Kowalski testified that it was finally agreed that all three should live together, but this did not prove successful and the arrest of Kowalski resulted.

"'Well, I confess that this is the strangest state of affairs that has come to my attention,' said Judge Pake. 'I would like to send Kowalski to jail, but then his wife and children are in danger of starving. This woman, too, ought to be in jail, but I cannot take that new born infant from her; neither can I send the infant to jail.'

"He decided to continue the case until tomorrow in order to secure the advice of Baron Schlippenbach."

"A story of disgusting depravity," Mrs. Grundy doubtless would say. The city editors also regarded it in that light and, as the persons concerned were not wealthy and were not of the social prominence of Harry Kendall Thaw and Stanford White, few if any of the papers published the story as it is given here. Most of them dismissed it with only a few lines. What did this little family tangle of "low Russians" amount to anyway? It did not seem to dawn upon anybody—not even upon the learned judge of the municipal court—that Mrs. Rogdanski was anything more than an unnatural mother and a faithless wife, or that Kowalski was anything more than a faithless husband, an unnatural father and a destroyer of the sanctity of another man's home.

No one seemed to suspect that the arrest of Mrs. Rogdanski was an invasion of her liberty. She had tired of her master and had left him. Or, if it sounds better, say she had tired of her partnership with Rogdanski and had dissolved it. It is to be presumed that she entered the partnership of her own accord and why should she not have a right to dissolve it of her own accord? If she was forced into the partnership by her parents, as is said to be the case in some countries, there is all the more reason why she should feel that she had a right to dissolve it.

"But she was a thief," you say. "She stole 300 rubles from her husband." I don't know how much that was, but it was either $147 or $231, for a silver ruble is worth 49 and a gold ruble 77 cents. But her husband "was employed in the government service and was in fairly good circumstances"; besides that she had given birth to four children for him. Was she not entitled to at least $231 as her share of the partnership fund for her services?

It does not appear that either she or Kowalski had any bitter feelings against Rogdanski, for they expressed their willingness to let him live with them, but he was so persistent in his efforts to have the woman leave the man she loved and cleave to the man whom she did not love, that the arrangement proved unsuccessful. Then the man who was not personally attractive enough to hold her love sought by law to compel her love, and he called on two great governments to aid him in his outrageous efforts.

When woman's rights are recognized as human rights no learned judge will dare think of calling in a consul of a foreign government to aid him in depriving her of her rights.

LECTURE TOUR.

I intend to go on a lecture tour, the proceeds of which are to be devoted to the Mother Earth Sustaining Fund. I have already been invited by the San Francisco comrades, and, on my way to the coast, I am prepared to lecture in the larger cities. Those wishing to arrange meetings will please communicate with me at once.

EMMA GOLDMAN.

503 East Twenty-seventh street, New York.

Cast forth thy act, thy word, into the ever-living, ever-working universe; it is a seed-grain that cannot die; unnoticed today, it will be found flourishing as a banyan-grove (perhaps, alas, as a hemlock-forest!) after a thousand years.—Carlyle.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Six months	50 cents	Three months	25 cents
One year	$1.00	Single copies	5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Our editor reports steadily improving health and increasing strength. His expected letter for publication did not reach us in time for this issue, but in our next full details of some of his experiences will be given.

MASS MEETING OF PROTEST.

There will be held in Mammoth Hall, Los Angeles, Cal., on Tuesday evening, March 12, a mass meeting of protest against the purposes and methods of the United States censorship of press and mails, similar to the meeting held at Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, Chicago, on last New Year's day. Friends of freedom and justice everywhere are hereby requested to coöperate with the committee of arrangements in all possible ways to make the Los Angeles meeting a success equal if not superior to that of the Chicago mass meeting.

Several preliminary meetings have been held, and the unanimous consensus of the friends here seems to be in favor of holding such meeting. Cards of invitation will be printed and distributed at all meetings of progressive people in Los Angeles and neighboring towns. Letters and cards of invitation are being sent to friends and co-workers at a distance asking them to write letters to be read at the meeting if they cannot be with us in person. Several local speakers have been engaged, others will be invited, and it is believed there will be no lack of oratorical talent and enthusiasm at the meeting. Time is short—too short, in fact, to get the responses from distant friends we would like to have—but if all who receive LUCIFER promptly after next publication day, and who may care to help in making this proposed meeting a grand success, will write us at once and tell us what they can do, their help will probably reach us in time. Our friends say Mammoth Hall is one of the best in the city for the purpose of holding a mass meeting, centrally located, and will seat about seven hundred people. A week-day night was chosen because less open to the competition of rival attractions.

The committee of arrangements are Walter Collins, 3706 South Park avenue; Major G. M. Taber, 508 Laughlin building; Dr. Aylman Harding and Secretary Mrs. Katharine S. Fry, 711½ South Olive street, all of Los Angeles.

Christianity has done much for love in making it a sin.—Anatole France.

The polygamic appetite, so habitual to man, cannot be strange to woman. Both have the same blood and share the same heredity. —Letourneau.

SOME REMINISCENSES OF ERNEST CROSBY.

Leonard D. Abbott, in Mother Earth.

It seems appropriate that I should get a request from Mother Earth for an article on Ernest Crosby, for my first vivid memory of Crosby has to do with his fellowship with Anarchists. One afternoon—it is eight years ago now—he wrote me that he was "going up to Justus Schwab, the Anarchist, to have an interview with Emma Goldman. They want me to help secure the pardon of a Homestead rioter," he said, "and perhaps you would like to meet them." I knew Crosby very slightly at the time, but was eager to know him better, and I accepted his invitation with alacrity. I remember, as though it were yesterday, our walk together through the darkening streets of the East Side. Our objective point was Schwab's saloon on First street, and when we entered Schwab was standing behind the counter dispensing liquor to his guests. I thought he looked more like a poet than a saloon-keeper, and I liked his fine blonde head and blue eyes from the first. Emma Goldman was there, too; and it turned out that the "Homestead rioter" mentioned in Crosby's letter was no other than Alexander Berkman, at that time confined in prison. We had a lengthy conference about Berkman's case, and Crosby promised to do everything in his power to secure the prisoner's release. He took this attitude not merely because he thought Berkman had been too severely punished, but because, as he explained to me, he did not believe in prisons. The next day he wrote a letter in Berkman's behalf to Andrew Carnegie. It brought no tangible results. Berkman had to serve out his term. But the incident was typical, and that is why it is worth recounting here. Crosby was forever the knight-errant, championing the cause of those who could not help themselves. Whether it was Berkman in jail in 1898, or John Turner held at Ellis Island in 1904, he was always ready with his service, always brave and fearless, always loyal to the uttermost truth.

I remember another occasion when Crosby came into dramatic contact with the Anarchists. He had been invited to address an East Side Anarchist club, and he chose to discuss the question of "Force or Nonresistance" as a working policy in life. The little hall was packed, and some of the ablest Anarchist thinkers were there. I have never heard Crosby speak better, and the burden of his message was this: "Anarchism is a noble ideal, and it will conquer. But it must be won by love, not by force." The debate that followed his speech was tense and prolonged. I do not think he won many converts to his point of view. Almost all who participated in the discussion took the position that force was regrettable, but probably inevitable.

By reason of its contrast and its apparent paradoxes, Crosby's career was in some ways the most remarkable, the most romantic, that I have ever known. He came of conservative environment and married a very wealthy woman. During the greater part of his life his ideals were merely conventional. He was thirty-eight years old when the great change fell upon him that revolutionized his whole nature. He was living in Alexandria, Egypt, at the time, and he was getting $10,000 a year as a judge of the International Court there. The whole story of the inner change through which he passed may never be known. But he has told me that quite suddenly, quite definitely, one day, a radiant vision, an entirely new thought of life, came to him. He had been unhappy and in great spiritual travail. The heartless and luxurious life around him, a growing sense of the hideous injustice involved in Egypt's slavery to the powers, a growing disinclination to sit in "judgment" upon any man—above all, a chance book of Leo Tolstoy's that had fallen into his hands—all these things had paved the way for a kind of spiritual rebirth. He threw up his position at Alexandria, made a pilgrimage to Tolstoy in Russia, and then came back to the United States to devote his life to a crusade in behalf of ideals. Tolstoy was always his master. It was Tolstoy who told him of Henry George, and through George's influence he became an ardent Single Taxer. The third great influence in his life was Walt Whitman.

Crosby was more of an Anarchist than a Socialist and his differentiation between the two philosophies was not a slight thing. It was a point to which he recurred again and again. He made a careful and detailed study of the Socialist position, but came out of his investigation apparently more hostile to Socialism than when he started. At the conference in the Stokes mansion at Noroton last year he sided with the Individualists rather than with the Socialists, and when Jack London was last in New York, Crosby took strongly anti-Socialist ground in arguing with him. The last communication that Crosby ever sent me was an article supporting Lafcadio Hearn's theory that Socialism is a "reversion" to outgrown social forms. The article closes: "All praise to the Socialists for their condemnation of current injustice! But when they ascribe it to individualism they make a mistaken diagnosis. It is the denial of true individualism by monopoly and prejudice that lies at the root of our social ills, and the remedy lies in making the individual still more master of himself and not in enslaving him to an organization raised to life from prehistoric tombs." I tried constantly to argue Crosby out of this attitude, urging upon him the claims of a libertarian Socialism. He said that he liked the spirit of many Socialists, but that he regarded the Socialism of Marx, in its world-sense, as a menace to human growth and liberty. Taking up the point at length in one of his letters he wrote to me: "A Socialist state would require an angelic spirit in all its members, and that we shall not have for centuries. Meanwhile, the securing of justice seems to me a big enough field for political work, while outside of politics we can all do what we can to foment the coöperative spirit. The temptation to join a great world-movement is immense, but I cannot do it, just as I cannot join the Roman Catholic church, because its dogmas are contradicted by my reason. I am consoled by the fact that others see things the same way. Tolstoy, for instance, and I am sure Whitman would have joined no party, nor do Carpenter's Essays seem to point that way either. It would be a delight to me to 'pitch into' something, and I know that I am not without talents in that line, for I was a very fair Republican politician in my time, but conscience prevents." Yet, in spite of these words, I claim for Crosby a fellowship in that larger Socialism which embraces such men as William Morris, Edward Carpenter, Eugene Debs, George Herron and Maxim Gorky. Morris' portrait hung on the wall of his study. He wrote a little book interpreting Carpenter to Americans. He knew and loved Debs and Herron. And he visited Gorky both in Staten Island and the Adirondacks.

In one sense Crosby was Socialistic rather than Anarchistic. He believed in the ballot. In his earlier poems, it is true, he contemptuously links the ballot-box with the musket, and for several years he refused to vote "on principle." But during the last part of his life he took a lively interest in politics. He voted on several occasions and explained at length his reasons for so doing. These reasons disappointed many of his friends. Speaking for myself, I felt that Crosby's acceptance of the ballot as an instrument for promoting social advance was a step forward, but I heartily regretted that he chose to vote for men so infinitely inferior to himself as Alton B. Parker and William R. Hearst.

Ernest Crosby was a man of amazingly large sympathies; he was as remarkable for his poise and tolerance as for his intensity. He was inspired by no hope of sudden or dramatic social change. "I do not look for anything special to happen," he would say; "we must simply keep on working." His own personal life was almost austere in its simplicity and loneliness, but his mind ranged over the whole field of life and thought. His vegetarianism was not a fad, but a deep-rooted conviction which he lived out at much personal inconvenience. His hatred of militarism was a passion with him. He was always interested in sex-problems, and followed the various sex-wars with keen interest. He read LUCIFER every week and wrote a letter to Moses Harman on his release from jail. He was on intimate terms with J. William Lloyd, of Westfield, N. J., and sympathized with Lloyd's radical views. One day I lent him Edward Carpenter's pamphlet on "Homogenic Love." He returned it with the comment: "In the future I shall be more lenient to Carpenter's homogeneous friends, but I am thankful I am not built that way."

There was something almost tragic in Crosby's isolation. A lesser man would have sought disciples. But he evidently felt, with Ibsen, that "he is strongest who stands alone." I think of Crosby as I met him returning late one night from a meeting on Long Island, at which he had been the speaker. It had been a fiasco, with only a handful of people in attendance. This was exceptional, of course. Crosby often spoke to large audiences. But he knew all the bitterness—as well as the ecstasy—of the pioneer's experience. He was a leader of forlorn hopes. The Anarchists could never entirely claim him; he voted, and he repudiated the use of force. The Socialists felt—and correctly—his instinctive antagonism to their philosophy. Even the Single Taxers did not regard him as quite "sound" in the doctrine. The consequence was that he stood absolutely isolated. He had very few intimate friends. His home-life must have been unhappy. He lived at Rhinebeck-on-the-Hudson, in a palatial home surrounded by nine hundred acres. The property was vested in his wife's name. I always felt that Crosby was a prisoner, waited upon by servants and lackeys. Once when he was driving me over his acres he said: "This ought not to belong to me; and yet what can one do? Would it accomplish any real, any enduring good to distribute it among the people here?" He has confessed his embarrassment when called upon by his conventional neighbors and associates—such men as John Jacob Astor or ex-Governor Levi Morton—to defend his theories. He felt it was useless to argue with these people. They were separated from him by chasms. He had quite definitely turned his back on the "respectable" classes. His sympathies were all with that nether world that struggles upward to the light. "I should like to live like Edward Carpenter," he once said to me, "with farm-work in the country, and simple rooms in the city." Yet to the end he remained enslaved by his possessions!

No one who knew Crosby would doubt his absolute sincerity. The man was honest and pure to the very core. I never detected a false note in him, and I have seen him in all kinds of situations. There was not the slightest trace of egotism in his nature. He was as humble as a little child. He shunned newspaper notoriety, and used to say, jokingly: "Whenever I do or say anything that I would like to get in the papers, they never report it, but when something comparatively unimportant happens to me, they write it up at great length!" He was sometimes bitterly attacked and shamefully misrepresented, but I never heard him say an unkind word of any living being. He was the soul of generosity, and gave away money to all kinds of causes, to all kinds of people.

Crosby was a natural born leader. With his magnetism, his magnificent presence, his great abilities, he could have worn the highest political honors. As is well known, he was at one time closely associated with Theodore Roosevelt in the New York state legislature. He might have been mayor, or governor, or president. Instead, he chose to become an apostle of unpopular ideas, "despised and rejected of men." And who can dare to say that he was ineffectual? Ideas are the most potent things in the world, and the seer and the teacher influence life at its very sources. A man of imagination and vision is untrue to his highest self if he abandons his dream to handle the machinery of worldly power and ambition. The greatest men that have ever lived have been the men who impressed the greatest ideas upon their generations. And Crosby's ideas were world-encircling, world-inspiring, in their power and breadth.

Ernest Crosby was a moral genius. There was much of the poet and artist in him, too. But, under all, one felt his moral intensity burning at white heat. He always seemed to me the very incarnation of that superb line of Whitman's: "Moral conscientiousness, crystalline, without flaw, not godlike only, entirely human, awes and enchants forever."

RELICS OF ANTIQUITY.

Lowisa Deas Harding, in the Christian Register.

Once upon a time there was a god of Love who created a universe of perpetual Strife. This universe consisted of millions of worlds moving in awful, unthinkable distances from each other, and was indeed a handiwork worthy of a very great and powerful being; but he had made it all for the contemplation of some little creatures called Men, who walked about on the surface of one of the smallest of these many worlds. Yes, for their sake had he called it all into being, and he loved men so well that he made, and thereafter tolerated, a very evil god, who went around continually getting into the graces of these favorites of the good god, catching them and torturing them beyond the power of imagination, forever and forever, in a great lake of terrible fire which lay almost under the very nose of the good god,—who could have prevented all this, but he would not, for he was angry at man for having once committed a great fault. It seems that in the beginning man had lived in a charming garden, where roses were entirely thornless and the climate all that could be desired. But, after he had named the pterodactyl, the megatherium, and others, he found time hanging rather heavily on his hands; for, forsooth, he lacked any good, honest, respectable occupation to keep him out of mischief. No use cultivating the soil when the figs dropped right into your hands without even shaking the tree! Well, in this garden there was, besides 8g trees, one bearing a strange fruit called knowledge, from the eating of which man had been most strictly enjoined. Why, we do not know. Of course, an unjust despot will not encourage the establishment of schools in his realm, lest his subjects should perceive the abuses from which they suffer; but one would imagine that in the domain of a good and beneficent king there would be nothing that might not lie with perfect openness before the eye. However, this god and certain institutions, which have since claimed to be under his especial protection, have ever said to man of this one tree he dared not eat, lest he die forever. Moreover, it seems that the all-wise and powerful god, who made the whole universe, was susceptible to a feeling not admired by the most enlightened men: he was a "jealous" god, and the very first of his commandments ran, "Thou shalt have no other gods beside me,"—an unnecessary injunction, one might suppose, since there were no other gods whatsoever! He may, therefore,—since jealousy is very closely akin to fear,—have taken it into his head to imagine that, if man got enough knowledge, he would begin to build a ladder up to the sky or pile the mountains on top of each other, and so climb into the kingdom of the good god, and turn him out into Nowhere, or condemn him to live in stupid gardens with nothing to do.

Well, after the good god had let the bad god persuade man to help himself to this forbidden knowledge, he was very indignant about the matter. Indignant at the bad god? Oh, no! He let him continue business right along at the same old stand; but he proceeded to make things very uncomfortable for man, who was now, to be sure, in a most unpleasant predicament. The good god solaced him with floods and pestilences while he lived, and the bad god got him when he died. This was not after the fashion of men themselves, who, when their children disobeyed them, did not flog them to death or turn them out to fight the temptations of the great world. No, these earthly fathers remembered that those with whom they dealt were only children, and, when they punished them, it was but a little, and then all was forgiven and forgotten!

But finally the good god repented. (He was, it seems, conscious of imperfection, else how could he have "repented"?) He repented, but he did not forgive. Earthly fathers have had sons whose waywardness and lack of affection stabbed their very hearts, and yet they have fallen upon their necks when they returned home, and killed for them the fatted calf, with no single word of reproach. But the god could not do this, and so he decided to doom his only son to a pitiful and shameful death to help man. That was always the way with this god: nothing but suffering counted with him, and always he punished, punished, punished his children for their faults, instead of telling them how the faults should be avoided, and carefully putting temptations out of reach while those exposed to them were too young to understand their harm. True, he had written a book for the advisement of his beloved sons, but it was very difficult to understand it. Men were always wrangling and dying at each others' throats about it. Some said it meant one thing, some another, and some actually dared to say it was not good advice at all, but contained much that could only have come from the pen of the bad god in a frightful temper,—perhaps when he was short of men to feed the furnace.

Well, then this all-powerful and all-compassionate god sent his son to help men. All men? Oh, no, indeed! only the small fraction of their number who happened to believe in him, and the god had unfortunately failed to make the evidence anything like indisputable, and so it happened that many honest men pondered very seriously, concluded nothing of the kind ever did or could take place, and then off to the brimstone with them! But some men did believe, and, when they died, they finally found themselves in a place called heaven, where they were to live in eternal felicity; and there they looked down through the cracks in the hard, golden pavement and saw their friends and loved ones, many of whom they had known to be absolutely just and kind during their lifetimes, and yet there they were, on red hot griddles, with the bad god stirring the fire and enjoying himself hugely. And when the men in heaven saw this, what did they do? Did they make straight for the "good" god, overthrow him and the whole heart-breaking, brain-torturing, awful scheme, or else go to rebel everlastingly against him, like men, with their friends below? Not by a large majority! They grasped their golden harps, complacently adjusted their halos, and began to sing to the "good" god an eternal song of praise and thanksgiving: "for his mercy endureth forever."

Great heavens! And what shall we think of men who believe all this, and go comfortably about their daily business? Shall we pity, shall we berate, or shall we despise them for a set of rascally and heartless cowards?

[We print the above article because it illustrates in a peculiar way the impression made upon a living soul by statements which in many of our churches are still cherished, not because they are true, but because "they are relics of antiquity" which illustrate the history and progress of religion. Our evangelical brethren who do not come into personal relations with those who in scorn have cast away the creeds, do not always understand the anguish which accompanies their rejection of accepted standards of belief.—Editor Christian Register.]

Editor Lucifer: The heading of the above article is that of the editor. The writer does not believe that these doctrines are yet "relics of antiquity" by any means. Such doctrines can be heard in our churches and read in our newspapers right now: one of the most liberal ministers in New York city read the article some time ago, and said he did not know of any paper that would publish it; another minister, a broad and scholarly man, wrote it seemed to him excellent and that, if he were speaking face to face with the writer, he would say more about it; it is evident that this man was not at liberty to say in public or to write just what he thought about these "relics." Relics, as we all know, are piously preserved for centuries in the churches, and sometimes brought out and carried about the streets of the city for the adoration of the populace; if one does not believe in them he is "unfaithful" (infidel)—to dead bones, and a blasphemer—against such blasphemy as I have tried to set forth in its plain, unvarnished atrocity in this article. Ingersoll has said it all before, but it can bear repeating many, many times, until the reports from our insane asylums shall show that men and women no longer believe these things. L. D. Handcox.

A BIT OF MY PHILOSOPHY.

By Kochi Kaneko.

"What is the geisha," asked an American gentleman. "She is a woman who sings a little, dances a little, talks with any man, entertains anybody, paints her face a good deal, changes her dress every once in a while, eats a little and drinks enough, smokes cigarettes often times, and smiles, and smiles, and smiles," I answered.

Ninety-nine out of one hundred of the American magazine readers are said to be women, and seventy per cent of the writers of all those magazines are said to be women. But then it is man, and man only, who makes money out of them. Look out, you American women!

Love, but don't marry, says one. Marry, but don't live together, says the other. Who is going to unwind the knot of such philosophy?

Marrying for titles has proved a failure through your precious experience. But don't say that marrying foreigners is also a failure. For you have married the titles, not the foreigners, not the man, not the race, and of course not character.

I wish somebody would confess honestly that a marriage for money, too, is unhappy. There is a marriage for beauty, a marriage for self-happiness, a marriage for education, a marriage for mere luxury. These are not, after all, genuine. A marriage that is only happy and pure is the marriage for coöperation.

You should not look to marriage for happiness. Happiness is simply a result, not an end; you can make your married life happy, but you can not buy happiness merely by marrying.

Don't say "I wish I had," and never say "I wish I could." Say "I will have," and always say "I can have." It looks as if there were not much difference, but it makes a big difference in the long run.

The Japanese woman paints her face when she is young. The American woman does the same thing when she feels that she is getting older. This is one difference between the woman of Japan and the woman of America.

THE PRESIDENT'S POWER AS A CENSOR.

To the Editor: Your Washington dispatch this morning quotes members of the Senate and House postoffice committees as saying, in regard to barring papers from the mails for publishing details of the Thaw case, that this can only be done by prosecution under the statutes, and that each case would have to be passed on by a jury, "which would have to determine whether or not the particular matter complained of was of such character as to bar it from the mails."

Such a statement reveals an amazing ignorance of the law on the part of our legislators. If a publisher is prosecuted under that federal statute the jury can only decide upon the fact whether he is the person who caused that particular paper to be mailed; the question as to whether the published matter is "obscene" is held by the courts to be one of law to be decided by the judge. The courts also hold it to be good law that such publication can be judged by a single paragraph detached from its context and without admitting any testimony as to the rest of the matter or the innocent intention of the publisher.

It is amusing also to note the doubts expressed as to the "power" of the president to suppress objectionable publications without judicial proceedings. Why, that is frequently done. Some two years ago the entire issue of a Chicago paper was arbitrarily destroyed by the postoffice department because an inspector "thought" it contained objectionable matter. The department afterwards admitted that this matter was not unlawful, but I and others who had paid for the paper were robbed of our property without redress.

The New York editors had better be good; the president has power enough to suppress all of them and only his reluctance to exercise it against the powerful can save them from the fate that has overtaken other objectionable persons.—A. C. Pleydell, in New York World.

IGNORANT OF THE NEW FEDERALISM.

To the Editor: Examples multiply of the need for federal action in spheres of duty neglected by the states. Yesterday Vice-Chancellor Garrison, of New Jersey, in handing down a decree of divorce, remarked: "The law cannot regulate a man's affection to the extent of making him love his wife."

Obviously the vice-chancellor has not heard of the police power or of the new federalism. Nothing is impossible to the revised statutes. It is merely that the state of New Jersey is negligent in the exercise of its powers. If it continues to plead incapacity let us have a federal statute. Perchance an executive decree would be as efficacious.—A. C. Pleydell, in New York Sun.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our home. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

To the Editor: I was glad to note Mr. Harman's departure for California. I hope the climate, environments and the magnetic touch of friends and sympathizers by the hundreds all along up and down the "coast" will assure him a new lease of life, and as a matter of course every column of LUCIFER will likewise partake of its grand old editor's invigorated spirit. Please find within one dollar for renewal of subscription. ED SECRIST.

Randolph, Kan.

To the Editor: Gladys Lamb says that free love and exclusive monogamy cannot be reconciled. Whatever we freely choose is, to the choosers, freedom. If two lovers freely choose exclusiveness, then they have both love and freedom, unless it be assumed that love must, naturally, rove about if left free, and this is not proved. Monogamy is not life exclusiveness. The legal institution is not so defined and there is no other reason to so define it. C. F. H.

Chicago, Ill.

Moses Harman: I am so glad to think you are bodily free—for even in the darkest hours of your outward bondage you have never been anything but truly free. It did my heart good to read of the kindnesses and honors paid you after your suffering, and I know you do not regret what you have passed through, and would not wish an atom of harm to any one who has helped to push you into your experiences. I am glad to learn that your health is good and that you are generally feeling well.

LIZZIE M. HOLMES.

La Veta, Colo.

To the Editor: Do I object to having LUCIFER sent to me? you ask. Most assuredly not. Have read copies two years ago and they were the means of my getting acquainted with what the German calls "Innenleben," the inner life, of some one dearest to me now. "Innenleben," the inner life, of some one dearest to me now. "Innenleben," the inner life, of some one dearest to me now.

Garrison the Non-Resistant.

BY ERNEST HOWARD CROSBY.

This is a sympathetic sketch of Garrison's career which considers slavery and the Civil War from an entirely original point of view. In the opinion of the author President Lincoln made a radical mistake in undertaking to coerce the seceding states, and the enthusiasm for the "Union" of sections which hated each other he regards as immoral in itself and the source of prolific subsequent evils, including the growth of the sentiments of imperialism and militarism, together with the foundation of the trusts and the aggravation of the labor problem. That the war failed to settle the race question is obvious. If the "erring sisters" had been allowed to go, slavery would, he thinks, have died a natural death, and the states would have reunited, the race question having been peacefully and genuinely solved.

Even those who fail to accept this view of history will find it interesting and full of suggestion, and the account of Garrison's life and the record of the personal observations of the author in the South of today are both vivid and entertaining. 16mo, 144 pages, with photogravure portrait of Garrison. Price, 50 cents (postage 5 cents).

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

The Occidental Mystic and Western Spiritualist.

A 36-page monthly, devoted to the consideration of spiritualism and the occult sciences.

Clean, bright and filled from cover to cover with original matter from able contributors. Issued on the 1st of each month. $1 a year; single copy, 10c.

ARTHUR S. HOWE, Editor and Publisher,
142 S. Broadway, Room 107, Los Angeles, Cal.

Correspondence Club.

Open to those who desire to improve, and to discuss subjects of interest with kindred minds. Editor of this paper says the secretary is worthy of confidence. For particulars, enclose stamp to C. A. KIRK, Sec., Box 733, Mitchell, S. D.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25 cents each.

Haeckel's Last Word on Evolution.

BY ERNEST HAECKEL, OF JENA UNIVERSITY.

A popular retrospect and summary. Translated from the second edition by Joseph McCabe. With three plates and Haeckel's latest portrait. Price, $1.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Life and Love and Death.

BY BOLTON HALL.

A part of the larger book "Even As You and I." 12mo, paper, 116 pages, 10 cents; by mail, 15 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

The Stellar Ray.

SUCCESSOR TO SUGGESTION.

The Stellar Ray is a magazine for thinkers. Discusses thought force, will power, astral science, occultism, all forms of drugless healing, brain building, the cultivation of mental forces, and the psychological and physiological principles that bring health, happiness and success.

The Stellar Ray advocates no creed, no dogma, no fad or ism. It stands for progress and freedom in all lines of modern thought. It is a practical magazine for those who think. It teaches how to live without disease or worry. It teaches how to have health without drugs or doctors. It teaches how to use the powers within one's self for success, for poise and self-mastery.

THREE MONTHS' TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION.

Write us a postal card as follows:

Editor The Stellar Ray, Hodges Building, Detroit, Mich.

Please enter my name as a subscriber to your magazine, on the following conditions: After receiving three numbers I will either—

(1) Promptly notify you to discontinue my subscription, in which case there is no charge for the three issues received; or

(2) I will remit the subscription price, $1 (foreign, six shillings). I also reserve the privilege of canceling my subscription at any time, paying only for the numbers received.

Name.....

Address.....

THE FRATERNAL HOMEMAKERS

is a co-operative fraternity that provides independence for its members by the accumulation of small savings actively employed in the cultivation of Gulf Coast crops. Safer than savings banks; better than life insurance. Write for particulars to

PAUL TYNER, Secretary,
70 Dearborn st., Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,
THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Thetan in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61, BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,
DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1086

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number at once.

Natural Rights.

BY M. KUHN.

A little book so small that it is full—so full that it is big. "Natural Rights" should be read by every man and woman, young or old, married or single, capable of thinking. It throws a limelight on many things of intense interest. Just from the press. Small edition. Autograph copies, consecutively numbered, bound in paper, postpaid, 10c, silver or stamps. Order now. Address M. KUHN, North St. Paul, Minn.

The Cause of Race Prejudice.

BY JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

A timely, fair, earnest and important study of a great question. "Mr. Morton, an undergraduate associate at Harvard of the distinguished negro scholar, Professor Du Bois, has forcefully, yet dispassionately and in interesting style, made a powerful arraignment of the evils of race prejudice. There is nothing narrow or sectional in his work, nor does he confine its scope to prejudices against a particular race. Writing as an American white man, he surveys all the race prejudices of American white men, whether against the negro in one part of America, the Indian in another, or the Chinaman in another. And he notes the same morbid hostility in Russia against the Jew, and in all the domineering nations and races of history against races or nations they had wronged."—The Public (Chicago.)

Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Moods of Life.

POEMS OF VARIED FEELING.

BY WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

The author is well known to the readers of LUCIFER, many of the poems in this volume having made their first appearance in our columns. The title well expresses the character of the work; the verses breathe of life and liberty and love; the charms of the seasons and the beauties of nature. The spirit of revolution, too, is voiced in "Liberty and the Commune," "In the Hour of Execution," "Von Plehve Dead," and other poems. "To the Enemies of Free Speech"; "The Challenge of Liberty"; "A Ballade of Butterflies"; "The Holstering Knights"; "Father Dunne"; "Your Lover"; "Death in Life"; "Looking on the Horror"; "Mother-Heart," are a few titles taken at random, showing the varied scope of the work.

12 mo, cloth; gilt title; 160 pages; $1, postpaid.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

A Striking Sex Series

is appearing in SOUNDVIEW, of which James F. Morton, Jr., the well known author and lecturer, says: "Puget Sound at last has a magazine adequately representative of Progressive Thought. It is frank and fearless, refined and vigorous, witty and eloquent."

Every reader of LUCIFER should secure this remarkable symposium, whose contributors are among the brightest minds of the age. Theodore Schroeder, of the New York Bar, begins a strong article in the JANUARY issue, on "What is Purity? A Study of Sex Overvaluation," which is alone worth the price of a yearly subscription.

This series began in 1905. Only a few complete sets remain. Order as soon as you read this.

$2.00	SPECIAL	$3.00
	Back numbers with sex articles	$2.00
	"Soundview" for 1907	1.00
	"Wildwood Philosophy," former price	1.00
	Total	$4.00

To LUCIFER readers for only $2.

$2.00	SPECIAL	$2.00

To the "Suspicious": Two copies of Soundview, Soundview, Jr., and a copy of "The Choice," a sex-poem, 10 cents.

This "Special" is by order of the "Boss Evergreen."

Address THE EVERGREEN (That's who!)
Olalla, Wash., U. S. A. (That's where!)

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,
For the Supreme and Supercosmos and The New Civilization,
2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, MARCH 14, E. M. 307 [C. E. 1907]. WHOLE NO. 1087

ALL OTHER LIFE IS LIVING DEATH.

Do what thy manhood bids thee do, from none but self expect applause;
He noblest lives and noblest dies who makes and keeps his self-made laws.

All other Life is living Death, a world where none but Phantoms dwell,
A breath, a wind, a sound, a voice, a tinkling of the camel-bell.

—From The Kasidah of Haji Abdu El-Yezdi.

A JOLLY GOOD TIME.

ALL-DAY VISIT OF MOSES HARMAN TO THE LOWE OBSERVATORY.

By Professor Edgar L. Larkin.

We just had a frisky, rattling and lively time of our lives all day, up here on this peak, on Feb. 14, 1907—a new historic and classic date. Harman was the valentine. He started out with the flat assertion that he was born on Oct. 12, 1830. He instantly ascended a tall tree, tumbled to the earth, smashed his hip and has had a game leg since, yet he climbed up this mountain with the velocity of a sprinter, so late as the twentieth century. Immediately his hip was surgeoned up, he turned Methodist preacher and circuit rider. Then he saw the error of his ways and reformed. Then he landed in jail. The very minute he got loose he reformed some more and went to jail again. Out, he still kept it up and got into a finer place—the Illinois state prison up in Joliet. Then they removed him to a United States federal prison over in Leavenworth, Kansas. Great doors swung against him and the bolts of steel grated in their locks. This was the highest honor paid to a man since Feb. 17, 1600, when Bruno was burned at the stake for opposing Rome—an interval of 306 years. I wonder if the rasping of the bolt had any similarity to the crackling of Bruno's flames. Mr. Harman brought along good and venerable Thomas Wardall, who wrote his name in along good and venerable Thomas Wardall, who wrote his name in the register, and this: "written without glasses; born Aug. 9, 1815." He skipped up the hill with his 92 years seven feet ahead of M. Harman. And Mr. Wardall brought along his talented daughter, Flora Warlall Fox. She went and got married to a man. His name is Irving W. Fox. She brought him up here. Mr. Harman stays with this congenial family in Los Angeles.

WE JUST TALKED.

It was a regular "clam-meetin'." We would talk a while, and then talk some more. Then we went at it again and kept it up the whole livelong day. I harped and harped on the incubus now the whole livelong day. I harped and harped on the incubus now resting on women, a hideous growth of a hundred centuries—sex slavery. And we all harped. I extended the beginning of the servitude back one hundred thousand years. This is the way it happened, that feel expression always used now by newspaper reporters in giving an account of one of our modern horrible "pagan" weddings thus: "he claimed his bride." A reporter on the Cave Dwellers' Express invented that 250,000 years ago, and every reporter since has plagiarized it without change. Grooms then had to fight for their wives; do yet sometimes. After rivals had been killed before the very eyes of the bride, the successful combatant just marched up, claimed the woman, and immediately married her. And this, "they had a quiet wedding," is a prehistoric expression. The friends of the murdered man usually put up a big racket to prevent the marriage. If no friends of the slain rival came, they actually had a "quiet wedding," in which case, being so rare, the reporters always mentioned the fact. Modern reporters still say "quiet wedding" without knowing why. Then they put iron or bronze anklets and bracelets on the bride and she became an abject slave. Finger-rings now in use are lineal descendants of these ancient tokens of servitude. For a majority of all Asiatics believed and millions still believe that women are "evil" and have no souls. Mr. Wardall during his long sojourn in this vale of women's tears has stored a vast fund of wisdom and has met with many wonderful mental phenomena and occult experiences, and I was fascinated with his description of all these marvels. And I looked and looked at Mr. Harman. It seems beyond the extreme limit of human belief, to think that this man was ever in a prison. I have had vast experience with almost every kind of the human; and now let me tell of first sight. It was through a window of Mr. Fox's home in Los Angeles. I saw the venerable white hair and classic face. With the rapidity of lightning I knew that here is a man with an absolutely pure mind. I am never mistaken; and the all-day visit served only to intensify the first impression. He made the set statement to me that he was deliberately placed in a cell with a tuberculous prisoner, or rather patient, when there were empty cells in the building. The trial and imprisonment of Moses Harman injured the Americas people, but not him.

STATEMENT TO LUCIFER.

I live on this peak rising up out of a vast expanse of perpetual and everliving green. A wide area of 900 square miles of orange, lemon, apricot, pear, plum, peach, almond, fig, walnut, eucalyptus, tangerine, nectarine, prune, pepper, acacia, magnolia and camphor trees, ever bathed in the glorious semi-tropical sunshine. And hundreds of miles of cypress hedges—heavy banks and rolls of green. For a hundred kinds of roses bloom, and heliotropes, wistarias, carnations, poinsettias, great hydrangeas, with sweet violets, and marguerites. This great panorama is so beautiful that words are impotent and the pencils of artists lifeless. And roundabout the observatory rise a hundred granite peaks, with cliffs and torn and twisted crags, giant rocks and colossal facades. All these splendors by day. But human speech cannot tell of the supernal glories of the midnight sky in the great telescope, in this pure air. A hundred million white-hot suns burn and blaze in the celestial vault. They are raked into windrows, and rolls; piled in heaps, banks and terraces,—stars, stars, piled on millions of stars. The Milky Way, with its uncounted millions of diamonds, hangs up, as it were, siderial sheets, gigantic folds of cloth of pearl, majestic robes of night over the Pacific Ocean in the distant south, and trails the careless garments in the tossing waves as the earth revolves. Thus by day and by night, trees, fruits, flowers, the sea, sentinel peaks and the stars —year after year—are my constant friends. Now, into this wondrous place of the most exquisite beauty, awful things keep coming in a never-ending stream. About 5,000 tourists from every part of the habitable earth come to this observatory annually. I had not been here a week before I saw that this is a capital place in which to study anthropology and read minds. I have improved the opportunity during seven years. I have learned startling things; episodes happen here, any one of which could be wrought into a story by one who is able to handle words. These stories would be intensely human. I have seen almost every emotion in the minds of human beings on display. Vivid things happen. Here is the awful discovery: one-half of all the married pairs that visit this mountain simply hate each other. This is an appalling statement, and this is the first time that I have ventured to print it. It is the most serious thing in the United States. One-half of the remainder are indifferent to each other; and one-half of the second remainder are beginning to lose their love. The number of unharmonic children conceived without a trace of love is simply amazing. I have seen a few, out of my 30,000 visitors, that were really in love with each other; and perhaps I have seen as many as 500 love-children—that is, brought into this world strictly according to the laws of nature—not puerile laws of man, laws made in prehistoric ages of savagery by men who had not discovered even one law of nature. The work looming up before the splendid eugenic societies now rapidly forming all over the country is of vast proportion. This movement must be attended to by every woman who has her own welfare at stake. Her sex liberty is in the balance between ancient savagery and the new modern progress. To me this seems about right: Nature has given to every woman the inherent right to decide when she will bring forth a child and who shall be its father.

Any man who does not let the woman decide this question entirely of her own free will commits the heinous crime of rape. Nervous wrecks strew the shores of human existence. I have seen hundreds dying by inches immersed in each other's unharmonic auras. The time will come when eugenic societies will see to it that pairs shall not be joined where their auras are in unharmonic oscillation. Skilled mentalists will read auras of those who think of marrying, and prohibit the union if out of tune; and divorce all those who have been married under this deadly and capital mistake of all ages. Some day, some time, it will be shown to the people that the bringing of a child into this world from unharmonic auras is a crime equal to murder. Anthropology is a majestic science, and race-culture is its highest aim. It is now known to science that the invisible and inaudible oscillations of the universe are so vastly in excess of those seen and heard that these may almost be ignored. The infra and ultra are vast beyond imagination, and nature has a pulse. Harmonics is one of the most stupendous of all physical sciences. "Getting into tune with the Infinite" is one of the most profoundly scientific sentences ever written. This problem is so enormous that it will attract the attention of every scientific man in the world by E. M. 350. For when we detect the rates of oscillation of nature and learn how to oscillate our thought power in tune, diseases and drug stores will vanish. We then began to talk. I started up this embryology question. It is immense beyond imagination. See what does happen.

ARRESTED EMBRYONIC DEVELOPMENT.

This is one of the most appalling events in the existence of man on earth. Listen to its horrors. It is known to biologists that the human mind is a compound of the minds of all the animals that lived before man appeared. This is startling, but true. Man is an epitome of all preceding creatures. The beginning of each human being is a cell, the one-hundredth of an inch in diameter, in the uterus. The first stage is exactly like that of a primeval protozoan. Cells multiply and become a colony of these simple protozoans. Then the human embryo assumes the form of polyps. A little later, vertebrate attributes develop. Only a skilled embryologist at this juncture could tell whether the forming human was a fish, reptile or mammal, as they all have vertebræ. Every human passes through fish, amphibian, reptilian and mammalian forms. Cells are added to his body and brain during gestation that have characteristics of every creature that ever lived on earth. Thus every attribute of mind of every animal is stored in the human mind. See this horror: suppose that at the instant the embryo is passing the stage of hyena, jackal, ferret or wolf, some dreadful thing, as hate for her husband, loathing and unutterable disgust, should suddenly fill the very being of the coming mother and make a terrific impression on her mind; then the embryo will stop developing into a normal human, and the poor woman will bring forth an abnormal creature with the very characteristics of the minds of a hyena, jackal, ferret or wolf. And these crowd prisons to the doors, when they cannot help being criminals. Oh! yes, I have seen the outlines of the wolf, hog, tiger and panther set in the human face. Women of the United States, will you not form thousands of eugenic societies everywhere for self-protection and child-culture? Would that I could travel throughout the nation, visit every eugenic—well-born—society, and personally tell the women in their own lecture-rooms what I cannot put into print. For eugenics, the highest science, is "very low," you know! How many women have ever heard of checked embryonic development? On this mountain I have seen several cases where love changed to hate within one second of time. You now see how prisons are filled. Civilization is putrid to the center and the eugenic women will tear it up by the roots. Do you not want your daughters to know all about arrested evolution? Will you keep hammering away until our laws totally prevent the bringing of unharmonic—i. e., checked development—children into this world? Do you want your daughter to give birth to a not criminal? Ninety per cent of all we think, say and do—yes, right here in the United States—is now ridiculously obsolete, and was invented by prehistoric and savage men ages before one solitary law of nature was discovered! Any law made by man in conflict with a fixed law of nature must and will be swept out of the nation.

SOMETHING GOING ON NOW.

Dear reader, I receive floods of the most remarkable letters from everywhere. Those contain every conceivable kind of questions. I assert that nearly everything is on the verge, and the weights of the ages are about to fall. The human mind is in chaos now, and is as a choppy, boiling sea. I seem to feel the quaking, unrest and turbulence up here on this summit. I told a woman one day about these letters and asked her what the outcome would be. To my astonishment she was not surprised and said: "There is a vast spiritual world beyond the tomb, and it is about to make itself known to man." Then she explained, saying that "a psychic wave from the other side is dashing all over the earth." Four other mentalists have told me nearly the same. From these letters and from conversations with highly intelligent people,—only the better classes come up to the observatory,—from every city, town and county in the country, I am led to repeat: some remarkable mental evolution is now taking place. Chaos is coming on with great rapidity. Mental thunders are sounding and they will roar against Rome. Here is a pointer: hundreds of these letters are imbued with fearful hate of hierarchies. I have heard dreadful words hurled against the hierarchies of both England and Rome, and hissing, blistering scorn against that of Russia. Here is an expression copied from a letter: "It will cost one hundred million men their lives to wipe out religion." And another: "Religion will yet slay untold millions." These were written by sex-reformers, who all have the idea that set hierarchies are deadly enemies of reform along this way. Women, I am writing directly to you and have this to say: I cannot free myself from a nameless dread that some direful thing is coming. It may come along the political, financial or social way. Thus when old Depew was exposed I became alarmed at the appalling words spoken here; withering words were hurled against the corruption in New York, and I have often heard that city called a cancer. I send a warning from this peak, feeling that I have a right to, for I feel the pulse of the United States. All I have to do is to question my visitors. Oh! mothers of the people, listen: An appalling war is liable to come at any time with the rapidity of a flash of lightning; it may be here or in Europe. The nation is alive to the unutterable atrocities of wholesale child-murder in sweat-shops, glass and cotton factories, in iron works and mines. I have heard subdued mutterings for seven years. The race question in the South and the labor problems everywhere are simply colossal now. I hear it day by day, brain and blood curdling language. I have waited thus long to put these words in print, and cannot wait longer. See here: one of the ablest women in the United States visiting here while thinking of sex-servitude rushed for paper and pencil and wrote this: "Woman will never be able to progress until she is rid of all this Jesus Christ theology, because a theology that damns woman is surely not calculated to elevate her socially, politically, sexually or spiritually." Signed ——. I have this paper on file. An unfavorable symptom is rapid loss of respect for the United States senate and courts. Extensive reforms must come in courts, trials, prisons, jails, asylums for the insane, for the poor, and in convents. Elections must be purified, and the wholesale graft in cities and child-murder in factories has simply got to cease. I tremble to hear hissing words about Pettibone, Moyer and Haywood. I do not know what form the monster will assume, whether gigantic strikes, city riots or actual civil war; but I cannot dispel the sensation of approaching danger. The Thaw trial, with the slow torture to death of Mrs. Thaw, is rocking the United States. I hear every day such as this: "One thousand Stanford Whites in New York ought to be killed," "Slay the lepers," and the like. It does not seem possible that civil war can occur here in the twentieth century. But it can. Oh! voices that once breathed over Eden, come soon and soothe down the angry waves. And women, exert all your power to avert the coming tide of rage and blood. After settling the embryological appalling arrested evolution problem, we five talked some. We settled everything except that vast, new, scientific and majestic problem, eugenics. That is for the women of the nation to settle, and they will. Indeed, they have commenced, and the mighty movement is well under way from east to west. San Francisco has a flourishing society. This is because ancient blood-drinking kings chained their living prisoners to corpses, threw both into a dungeon, to remain until death came to the one that was alive. The chaining together of a man and woman with unharmonic auras is scarcely better. After this we talked a little; and then my distinguished visitors vanished down the mountain. It was a red-letter day.

Lowe Observatory, Echo Mountain, Cal., Feb. 20, 1907.

VARIOUS REMARKS.

By E. B. Kerr.

It is never wrong to love.

* * * * *

Men worship virgins, but marry widows.

* * * * *

When Oscar Wilde was asked his opinion of the Bible he said, "When I think of all the mischief that book has done, I despair of ever writing anything to equal it."

* * * * *

The "Confessions" of St. Augustine are worth reading. The saint was a very gay young man, but dreadfully afraid of hell fire. To combine pleasure with salvation he prayed to God every night, "Make me chaste, but not yet."

* * * * *

W. P. Austin, of Home, Wash., writes me as follows:

"There will be held in Seattle in 1909 the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. What a fine opportunity to have a convention of social radicals at that place on that occasion. There will be cheap fares to Seattle at that time and many radicals will want to attend the exposition anyway. I do hope the sex movement will be organized before that time—that will make the holding of a convention so much easier. Organization is the great need. It is high time to come out in the open—defiantly before the world with an aggressive propaganda. Comstockism and Grundyism would be shorn of much of their power if we were only organized. A branch of the Neo-Malthusian League is also needed in America."

I heartily agree with all that Mr. Austin says. His last wish is already fulfilled. I am sorry, however, that the new organization has taken the name of Malthusian League. That is the name of the English organization, but it has proved a very bad one. The English society has been dragged into all sorts of controversies with Socialists, Single Taxers, and others, over the doctrines of Malthus, and much energy has been wasted in this way. Malthus believed that population always tended to outrun the means of subsistence, and that for this reason, and this only, it was desirable to limit the family. He utterly disapproved of preventives, however, and recommended celibacy and late marriage. I do not suppose that the members of the Malthusian League in Chicago care five cents about the theories of Malthus. What they want is to make woman free by enabling her to decide when she will or will not become a mother, and I suppose they are willing that this should be done by using the best appliances of modern science. If so, they should get rid of the name Malthusian League. None of the foreign societies have adopted it. Those of Holland, Belgium and Algeria are called Neo-Malthusian League, those of France and Spain are called League of Human Regeneration, those of Cuba and Brazil are called Section of Propaganda, while the German body is called Social Harmonic Union. By far the best name is Neo-Malthusian League, because it exactly states the aim of the organization. Vagueness always gives an impression of weakness, while clearness and definiteness are taken as signs of strength.

* * * * *

One of the excellent results of Neo-Malthusianism is that it is raising the value of maternity. We see this in England especially. Since the Bradlaugh-Besant trial in 1877, which drew universal attention to the matter, there has been an astounding fall in the birth rate, which has thrown politicians and capitalists into consternation. Some months ago Sidney Webb wrote two articles in the London Times in which he claimed that at least one-half, and probably three-fourths, of all the married people in Great Britain limit their families. A census of the Fabian Society showed that of 120 couples who married from 1890 to 1899, 107 limit their families. Webb claims that state payment of motherhood is essential, otherwise it will soon be impossible to get enough children. H. G. Wells has written articles in two magazines to the same effect.

* * * * *

I am often asked what books are worth reading on the sex question. It depends on the reader. For a Y. M. C. A. young man, or an extraordinarily innocent and sensitive young woman, Carpenter's "Love's Coming of Age" is an excellent book. To the very timid the works of Heinzen, Engels, and Bebel may be recommended. Fairly progressive persons should read Dr. Drysdale's "Elements of Social Science" and Dr. Foote's "Plain Home Talk." To real thinkers I recommend the well-known book of Roedebusch. But for those who are more impressed by facts than by theories the best of all books is "My Century Plant," by Lois Waisbrooker, which contains more important facts bearing on the sex question than any other book ever written.

* * * * *

There is certainly no other paper in the world which has so many good women writers as LUCIFER. The trouble is that most of them are extremely shy and very unwilling to write. I wonder how many years it is since we last heard from Laura Earle, Lena Belfort, Voltairine de Cleyre, Adeline Champney, Mary Brundage, Flora Fox, Myra Pepper, Leona Mathers, May Huntley, Mary Hansen, Amy Linnett, or many more who do not occur to me at this moment. The one compensation for the imprisonments of the editor is that they have enabled us to hear from Lillian, who would otherwise go through life without ever writing an article.

* * * * *

Professor W. I. Thomas of Chicago says that monogamy is bad biologically, though good from an economic standpoint. If that is true, monogamy is doomed. Economic institutions are easily changed, and we can alter them as we please to suit sexual needs, but we cannot change the laws of biology, and must make our institutions conform to them. That form of sexual association which promotes health and vigor is the one that will prevail, and all social institutions will have to be arranged accordingly.

* * * * *

Gladys V. Lamb points out that the exclusive wife is an utterly namby-pamby person, a mere echo of her husband. How could it be otherwise? We all know how dull people are who have spent all their lives in one village or county, while those who have traveled widely are usually interesting. It is the same in all things. Wide experience makes a person interesting, but nobody cares for the inexperienced. Women complain that men care for them only as sex mates, but the truth is that women know so little that they are not companions for men on any other plane. Women may be "innocent" or interesting, but they cannot be both.

SPIRIT OF THE OPPOSITION.

The following paragraphs clipped from the Los Angeles Times will perhaps interest our readers:

"FREE LOVE FANATICS.

"Federal secret service men are watching the latest moves of the 'free love' propagandists, led by Moses Harman, the aged editor of LUCIFER, who are planning a wholesale flooding of the country with 'free love' literature.

"Harman, who was released from the Leavenworth penitentiary New Year's day, has left Chicago to escape the rigors of winter and is now at Los Angeles, where 'free love' votaries declare there are more followers of the cult than in any other part of the country. Plans for the publication of 'free love' pamphlets will be perfected there.

"It is the scheme of the leaders of this movement to have 2,500 'free love' advocates write and publish pamphlets containing matter similar to that for which Harman was sentenced to the penitentiary for one year. Harman will publish similar matter in his paper, LUCIFER, and it is planned that if he is arrested the others from all over the country will go into court, confess guilt to the same offense and insist on being sent to the penitentiary with him."

From a Chicago friend I have received a clipping of similar import printed in the Chicago Journal. M. H.

"SALOME" VS. "MRS. WARREN'S PROFESSION."

To the Editor: That is an interesting contrast which your theatrical critic draws between the treatment accorded to the Strauss-Wilde performance at the Metropolitan and that received by Mr. Shaw's play. But he does not seem to me to have mentioned the real reason for the difference. "Salome" is a frank appeal to pruriency. "Mrs. Warren's Profession" not only dealt sternly with an evil that is publicly condemned and privately condoned, but Mr. Shaw committed the unpardonable error of showing that if the public was really sincere in its desire to abate that evil the one thing needful was to increase wages. That sociological fact, and not its references to immorality, was the real cause for the suppression of Mr. Shaw's economic play.—A. C. Pleydell, in New York Press.

Dull and selfish chastity,
That virtue of the cheaply virtuous,
Who pride themselves in senselessness and frost. —Shelley.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Six months .....50 cents Three months.....25 cents
One year .....$1.00 Single copies .....5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFUGOU—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

FROM THE CITY OF THE ANGELS.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., Feb. 19, 1907.

Dear Friends of Liberty and Light: The two weeks that have intervened since writing the brief greeting from the Pacific coast, printed in No. 1084, have not been idle weeks. Aiming all the while to take the very best care of myself and to make as little exertion, physical and mental, as possible, I have not thought it best to seclude myself from company nor to abstain entirely from talking from public platforms.

Advertised as I had been by several articles in the Los Angeles papers, as soon as it was known that LUCIFER's editor had arrived in this city I had many callers, among whom was Professor Edgar L. Larkin, astronomer at the Lowe Observatory, Echo Mountain, Cal., some two hours' ride by rail northeast of Los Angeles. Professor Larkin kindly invited mine hostess and host, Flora W. and Irving W. Fox, their family and myself to spend a day with him at his eyrie high up against the mountain side, overlooking the plain in which are located Pasadena the Beautiful; Los Angeles, the second city in size on the Pacific coast of the United States, and many other towns of lesser fame.

Gladly accepting this invitation, on the morning of Feb. 14 mine hostess and host, with Thomas Wardall—father of Flora Wardall Fox—92 years young, set out for the observatory named after Professor Lowe, who has the reputation of having "saved the Union" in 1864 by reporting the movements of the Confederate armies from his balloon that enabled him to overlook Richmond and its environs at a very critical period of the civil war.

Luckily for us Professor Larkin, having spent the previous night in Los Angeles, met us at the station and guided us from the the start, entertaining us with his stores of knowledge of the various objects of interest visible en route.

Passing through Pasadena, the home of one hundred and thirteen millionaires—so reported—then through Altadena, a village, we were soon at the end of the trolley line that brought us from Los Angeles, and at the foot of the gorge that leads up to the observatory. Here, at a little station called Rubio, we exchanged the trolley cars for seats in what might well be called the Lowe elevator—the travel from this point onward being more like going up in an elevator car of a sky-scraper building in Chicago than anything to which I can compare it. The length of this incline road is 3,000 feet; direct ascent, 1,325 feet; steepest part of the grade is said to be "62 per cent"—giving one quite a dizzy feeling, similar to seasickness.

Arriving at top of the cog-wheel and cable route, our attention was first called to the signs of wreck and ruin caused by a storm of wind a year ago, that destroyed much property belonging to the observatory. The storm lasted twenty-nine hours, all of which time Professor Larkin says he stood at his lookout door, every moment expecting the entire building to be lifted bodily from its lofty perch and dashed to pieces at the bottom of the gulch, more than a thousand feet below. But being more securely anchored to the rocks than the other buildings, the observatory itself, with the telescope, its valuable records and its still more valuable astronomer, weathered the terrible storm in safety.

The view from this point—only about half way to the top of the mountain—must be seen to be fully understood and appreciated. Words alone cannot do it justice. The weather, though not so clear as could have been desired, was propitious and the view of the great plain at our feet was superbly beautiful and inspiring—with its countless orchards and gardens, its towns and cities, and beyond these the great ocean—the ocean of oceans on the planet Earth.

Entering the eyrie, we stood under the white dome that can be seen many miles away, and were shown the telescope, and were permitted to investigate the sun-spots which were somewhat numerous on that day, though not so numerous nor so large, the professor explained, as on many other days, since he has been making a special study of these signs of commotion on the ruddy surface of the great parent orb, the mother of our nearest planetary family. Though by no means so large as many he had seen, the professor said that one of the spots to which he called our particular attention was not less than 35,000 miles across, so that our earth might have been swallowed up by it or dumped into it without causing more than a temporary ripple.

After an hour or more of astronomic lessons we had the honor and the pleasure of a lunch with the professor on one of his own tables, using part of his tableware, though the luncheon itself had been brought with us from the "Fox Sanitarium," as good Father Wardall calls the home at 425 East Forty-ninth street, Los Angeles.

After luncheon we were shown the collection of books sent by authors and publishers to the professor for notice or review; which collection forms quite a considerable library of itself, in addition to that belonging to the observatory as such. We were also shown the collection of unpublished manuscript, and the clippings of articles contributed to many magazines by Professor Larkin, altogether forming material for not less than twenty volumes of ordinary size, which he hopes some time to have published in book form. He is much interested in LUCIFER's specialty; says he is president of a San Francisco society formed for the study of eugenics—right generation—and hopes soon to have a state organization, with a branch of the same at Los Angeles. He would write a book on "Prenatal Culture" if he were sure he could get a publisher—has a large accumulation of material for such a book.

While discussing these and kindred subjects our entertainer penciled the following for LUCIFER's readers:

A MESSAGE FROM A MOUNTAIN.

The Stupendous Scientific Problem of the Twentieth Century is to put ourselves in Tune with Harmonic Oscillations of the Universe.
EDGAR L. LARKIN.

Lowe Observatory, Echo Mountain, Cal., Feb. 14, 1907.

One of the highly cherished mementoes of my day at Lowe Observatory is a copy of Professor Larkin's latest published bound book, entitled "Radiant Energy—Its Analysis and Relation to Modern Astro-Physics." This is a book of 335 pages, of excellent workmanship in the mechanical get-up, illustrated with pictures of the latest discoveries in astronomic science. "Astro-physics," Professor Larkin says, "is an entirely new branch of research into the laws of nature." The author kindly wrote a very beautifully worded autograph dedication to myself, of this much-prized volume.

Altogether the outing to Lowe Observatory was one of the most enjoyable and long-to-be-remembered of my earthly pilgrimage thus far.

* * * * *

Sunday, Feb. 10, was for me a "strenuous" day. I expected to make one public address, but quite unexpectedly I made three. In the forenoon was invited to address the Spiritualists at Burbank Hall; spoke perhaps fifteen minutes on the need of right generation—eugenics—as a preparation for any possible continued conscious existence after the death of the physical body. In the afternoon, at Howell Hall, under the auspices of the Hygienic Club—many of whom, including the secretary, Mrs. Katharine Fry, are readers of LUCIFER—I spoke perhaps an hour on "Some Prison Experiences" and "The Methods of the Postal Inquisition." The following report of the meeting as it appeared in the Los Angeles Herald Monday, Feb. 11, is not a bad account of what occurred at the meeting. The report occupied a half-column of the paper and was headed "Lucifer Editor Talks Free Love—Moses Harman Lectures to Big Crowd":

"Moses Harman, of Chicago, the editor of LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER, addressed the Los Angeles Hygienists' Club yesterday afternoon at Howell Hall on the subject of 'Free Love.' The meeting was well attended and Mr. Harman held attention throughout his talk, the audience showing great interest in the subject. After Mr. Harman finished he invited any one to ask questions about any point that they wished to be enlightened on. The majority of the questions related to the effect of tobacco, alcoholic drinks and meat on the passions. Mr. Harman replied that he thought that there was no doubt that they did inflame the passions, though he had heard it said that alcohol deadened the senses. After the meeting a discussion was held and this subject was given much attention.

"Mr. Harman is the editor of LUCIFER, a magazine printed in Chicago. About two years ago he was indicted on a charge of sending obscene literature through the public mails. An article of his on 'Sex,' which was printed in LUCIFER, was the objectionable literature."

Then followed a fairly correct statement of the Chicago trial, the appeal to a higher court, the imprisonment at Joliet and at Leavenworth, also of my release and the reception meeting at Drill Hall on New Year's day.

Among those who spoke at this meeting was Dr. Tanner, the renowned faster. Dr. Tanner seems not to grow older, except in his hearing, which is more defective than my own. The following resolutions, drafted and submitted by Sigismund Danielewicz, were unanimously passed by the meeting:

"Resolved, That this meeting puts its most emphatic stamp of disapproval upon and expresses its most vigorous condemnation of the outrageous treatment and persecution of Moses Harman by the United States authorities at the instigation of one Anthony Comstock.

"Resolved, That this meeting keenly appreciates and deeply sympathizes with the noble efforts of Moses Harman in discussing and handling without gloves the question which lies at the foundation of the weal or woe of the human race—the sex question.

"Resolved, That this club and meeting extend to Moses Harman a most cordial welcome, and pledge to him all the sympathy and moral as well as material cooperation at their command."

* * * * *

At 8 o'clock same evening I had the honor and pleasure of addressing a much larger crowd at the regular Sunday evening meeting of the Socialists of Los Angeles at Burbank Hall. Feeling my strength inadequate to making a set speech on a subject to which I had not given much attention of late, I was much surprised to find my name announced as first speaker of the evening. I had told the lady secretary, Mrs. Daley, that I would be glad to meet with the Socialists and say a few words, in a general and conversational way, on what seemed to me a much neglected part of the scientific socialist propaganda. As shown in the report of the paper Common Sense, organ of the Socialists of Los Angeles, the meeting proved a very lively one, and was prolonged till quite a late hour, everybody being anxious to be heard on what seemed a most exciting subject—the "woman question." My opening talk was not more than thirty minutes long; then I was called upon to answer a number of questions from the audience, after which five-minute speeches were in order. Of those who defended the views advanced by me were Mrs. Kratz, Mrs. Daley, Channing Severance and several others. The rulings of the chairman, Mr. F. L. Cook, who is a regular reader of LUCIFER, were eminently fair, so far as I could see.

After the criticisms I was allowed ten minutes in which to reply. As the hour was growing late and my strength quite exhausted, I made but a short reply to my friendly critics, saying, to begin, I much preferred to hear the man who does not agree with me than him who agrees with me on all points; that most of the criticisms were fairly put and would be replied to at a future time, if opportunity should be granted. Elsewhere in this issue will be found the report of the meeting as given by the Socialist organ published in this city.

* * * * *

The largest meeting yet attended by me in Los Angeles was the mass meeting of protest against the kidnaping of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone, whose trial at Caldwell, Idaho, is now set for March 5. The meeting was held in Simpson Auditorium, one of the largest halls of the city; was attended by not less than 1,500 people, at a moderate estimate; was addressed by a half-dozen or more speakers of local and national reputation, among whom was Job Harriman, one of the best-known labor orators. The tone of the utterances of these orators was resolute and strong, perhaps I should say revolutionary; also the resolutions passed by the meeting, which resolutions will doubtless be published in the Socialist journals, East and West. Lack of time and space will prevent further notice in LUCIFER of this large and very enthusiastic meeting of protest against the imprisonment of these three labor leaders, and their threatened hanging, if found guilty of charges that seem on their face to be wholly false—merely trumped up charges by the agents of perhaps the worst combination of oppressors of the working classes ever known in this country—the Mine Owners' Association of Colorado and Idaho.

* * * * *

Finally for this time, will say that my health has improved very decidedly since I have been taking regular walks in South Park of mornings, and since taking magnetic treatment from Dr. Bagley, of this city.

M. HARMAN.

THE PERSECUTION AND THE APPRECIATION.

A report of the reception to Moses Harman at Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, Jan. 1, 1907, is now ready for delivery. It is a booklet of sixty-four pages, containing speeches by Paul Tyner, Walter Henry MacPherson, Lucinda B. Chandler, Gertrude Breslau Hunt, Parker H. Sercombe, and Moses Harman; also letters from absent friends, newspaper reports, etc., and pictures of Lucinda B. Chandler, Kiichi Kaneko and Parker H. Sercombe. Two portraits of Mr. Harman are given; one, with grandson, taken in January, 1907, has never before been published. We hope this will be an effective document for wide distribution. Price, per dozen, $1.25; single copies, 20 cents.

SOCIALISM AND SCIENCE.

The following is the report of the Socialist meeting addressed by me on the evening of Feb. 10, reference to which meeting is made in my long letter printed in this issue of LUCIFER. I certainly did not mean to say in my talk that I lacked knowledge of scientific socialism,—rather I meant to say that I lacked knowledge of political socialism. But this is a minor point. I do not claim complete knowledge of any subject whatever; am always willing to confess my own limitations, and wish in this place to thank the management of the Socialist organization of Los Angeles, especially the lady secretary, Mrs. Daley, also Mrs. Howell, Mrs. Kratz and others who spoke in my behalf, for their kindness in extending the invitation to meet the Socialists at their hall on the evening named. Also I want to thank the large audience for their appreciative reception of my unprepared and offhand remarks on what I conceive to be the most important part of scientific socialism.

The heading of the article reporting the meeting was as follows: "Socialist Cyclone Strikes Los Angeles—Standing Room at a Premium at Sunday Night Propaganda Meetings—Need of a Larger Hall." Here is what the reporter said:

"Whew! Please open the windows! Last Sunday night's propaganda meeting was the hottest yet. First, there was a perfect crush in attendance; second, the subject discussed—the woman question—was a warm one; third, each element in the local movement made its caloric contribution till the thermometer needed mending.

"It was all because the speakers committee had advertised a reformer with a 'specialty' to make an address on 'Socialism.' Of reformer with a 'specialty' to make an address on 'Socialism.' Of course the reformer spoke on his specialty, only slightly diluting the same with 'the real stuff,' and of course that threw the bars down to the critics, who were not slow to rush to the opening. They had all paid in their good money at the box office to hear a lecture on socialism, and were given a talk on marriage reform, and it was a plain case of obtaining money under false pretenses, etc. Well, as the Frenchman said when accused of having been born in Cork, 'If you will pardon me this time, I promise it shall never occur again.'

"Moses Harman, the veteran editor of LUCIFER, of Chicago, who has only recently been released from prison, where he spent a year for alleged violation of the postal laws, was the speaker. He is a grand and lovable old man, and to state the fact that he is only a socialist in the vague, sentimental sense is no harsh criticism of him. No matter how sublime and courageous a character, no matter how strong and heroic a figure, suggesting Goldsmith's metaphor of the mountain peak which lifts its head above the storm—regardless of all this, he is a shining mark for the heresy hunter, the professional thumb and rule theorist.

"The speaker, who was in feeble health, and already exhausted by two or three addresses, was in no condition to make an effective address. He frankly admitted his lack of a full knowledge of scientific socialism, though declaring his entire sympathy with the same.

"He is well and personally acquainted with Debs and other national leaders of the party. Seymour Stedman was his lawyer in his late conflict with the federal authorities.

"He related much from his personal experiences in jail and in connection with marriage reform. He stands for and has devoted his life to making woman equal with man before the law. The discussion which followed the address showed clearly that, under this system, the reform he advocates is impossible. As capitalism causes the worker's dependence upon his employer, it also causes woman's dependence upon man. And economic independence for man and woman alike will only come with the destruction of capitalism."

M. HARMAN.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

To the Editor: Some months ago Professor Paul Robin, of Paris, told me much good about LUCIFER. I now understand his enthusiasm and I realize that there was no exaggeration in his eulogy. Your publication is truly free. It appeals to me. Inclosed find $1 for a yearly subscription.—Maurice Masson.

Dear Mr. Harman: I am much interested in LUCIFER. I had never seen it until recently. In fact, I think I had never heard of it until The Public took up the question of the confiscation of LUCIFER and your arrest by the postal authorities, about a year ago. The Public has kept the postal censorship ringing pretty well since. Some day, perhaps, we will have a free press and free speech and a nobler manhood.—F. J. Wilcox, Elk Rapids, Mich.

To the Editor: I was very much pleased to see an advertisement in your paper wherein Mr. Kirk proposes to conduct a school of mutual correspondence on politics, religion and things of social interest. I have examined his plan somewhat and think it is worthy of trial. We thus get the benefit of the knowledge and ideas of all in a much cheaper and faster way than can be done by print. We need personal comparison of ideas. As Mr. Kirk's work is entirely without remuneration he ought to be sustained. I should like to hear from every reader of this journal as to the best method of conducting a really helpful school of correspondence wherein we can relate our own troubles to each other and thus get mutual support. All wishing to write may address Philo, office of this paper. Put your letter in a stamped envelope, put this in a larger envelope addressed to LUCIFER, and it will be sent to me.—Philo.

To the Editor: Sometimes I think a lot more could be done if liberals would come out more boldly in defense of their rights. If one man introduces a bill to close the theaters on Sunday, isn't there some daring man who will everlastingly get himself shut out of the legislative assembly of the righteous by proposing to shut up the churches on the same day? There are no doubt many of us who think theaters are both more instructive and moral than the average church. I know I went up here on the North Side a while ago and listened to an edifying discourse on the justice of hell that made me feel all out of mental plumb for a week. There's a bill up now to make the reading of the Bible compulsory in the schools. Can't someone propose that a chapter out of Marcus Aurelius or St. Ingersoll shall be doled out to the youthful mind at least once a week? Also, when one thinks of women doing the work of several trained nurses, a kitchen girl, second girl, seamstress, etc., all in one, and nothing ever heard on the subject of an eight-hour day (and think of what an inheritance a child gets from a nervous, overworked mother!), and then hears Mr. Teddyfelt cheerfully arising and proposing numerous additions to her burdens, one feels that if any censoring of the press is to be done, he is the gentleman to begin with, by all manner of means. I don't doubt that his intentions are good, but I suppose we have all heard of the locality with fireproof pavements made of just such intentions.—L. H. Dana.

To the Editor: I have just received LUCIFER of Feb. 14 and read with pleasure Mr. Harman's letter therein. I was glad to hear of his safe arrival, and that he had comfortable traveling accommodation and conveniences attendant thereto. I am not sure whether to take Mr. Harman's criticism of the "Santa Fe Railroad System's" overdue trains seriously or not—I'm not sure whether he is joking or not. It is certain that it could be taken either way—seriously or humorously. If Mr. Harman should complain of a slow train while going through Arkansas he would be politely told, "If yer don't like our style get off and push." It would certainly be just, and a good step in the right direction, if the railroads could be made to give compensation to passengers when not living up to their contract with them. But when one remembers how easy it is for the railroads to hoodwink, and cheat, and defraud our big United States government, how much easier must it be to hoodwink, and cheat, and violate contracts with a few transient passengers. Any one who can bring the railroads and other corporations to time will have accomplished a wonderful feat and will get his name enrolled among the immortals. But what compensation shall we ask of the railroads when they don't "deliver the goods" at all? What shall we ask when the railroad murders the passengers? What shall we ask when corporations murder men in mines, and factories, and foundries? Why not go further? Why might not Moses Harman justly ask for compensation from the United States government for denying him for nine months "the right to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness"? The United States constitution contracted with Mr. Harman at birth to guarantee him (and thousands of others) "the right to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness," and to protect him in these rights. But we have seen that this or these contracts have been wantonly and grossly violated. We have seen that the contract is a bogus farce. Mr. Harman stands about as much chance of getting compensation from a railroad as he does from the government. And I have no doubt he is as well aware of this fact as I am. But his criticism of the "Santa Fe" is nevertheless timely and just, and equally humorous. I wish the "Grand Old Man" much good health and every success.—James Myers, Jardine, Most.

Lillian Harman—Dear Comrade: Perhaps you have read the notice in the Demonstrator of the "kind release" of my dear companion. For over three months he suffered continuously, at times extremely, and as he could not recover we were all, for his sake, glad when he was released.

We two have always been lovers, and our lives and work—that is, feelings, aspirations, ideals—so interblended that the parting is like taking two-thirds or more of my life. I do not feel that I longer live; I simply exist.

Several here have said: "Not many have attained what Mr. Magoon has. But few had such depth of thought." I, who know him best, know this to be more than true, yet even I was surprised at some of the stupendous titles of his manuscripts while looking among them for a necessary paper—manuscripts that he had, like myself, written and laid away with the vain hope that some time we would have them published.

He has done much—more than many know—to forward every good cause, LUCIFER'S among the rest. Yet he has often been misunderstood, and consequently misrepresented. Although he would defend what he believed to be right, he was ever kind and good to all, from the lowest animal to the highest human. The last few weeks of his life he was actually angelic. He said he had "no hard feelings toward any one. To those who have hurt and wounded me in the past I have no feelings but deepest, most tender love. I even wonder that I was ever hurt, for I feel that, could I have looked into their souls, I would see good only."

My eyes are too blinded to write more. With love and best wishes.—Sadie A. Magoon, Home, Lake Bay P. O., Wash.

To the Editor: I am delighted to meet an admirer of Pam, especially one who does not see her weaknesses, for I like her so well I regret seeing them myself. The book was a present to me from a friend, who, knowing something of my radical views on marriage and the "woman question," decided at once that it was just the sort of thing I would like. It seems ungrateful in me to criticise the book, and I refrained from doing so in my first remarks. It contains so much that is in line with radical thought, and, coming as it does from the popular press, it is worthy of notice, but I cannot accept it as a gospel of social freedom.

Pam and her lover were quite undecided and changeable, at one time deciding to see each other no more and give up all thoughts of their love for each other. But four days before Mr. Peele's marriage they met accidentally and he proposed that they should be lovers always without the consent or knowledge of any one but themselves; he to go on with his marriage and other affairs of life as he had planned. It is upon this proposition, probably, that Mr. Kitchelt thinks Pam based her "final conviction that Peele did not truly love her." From a conventional standpoint this was a disgraceful proposition and it put the lover in a bad light. Pam was properly "insulted" and gave him a severe we-part-forever rebuke.

All who agree with Pam and Pam's mother and Mr. Kitchelt that nothing less than a lifelong, all-sacrificing devotion is "true love" will say that Pam did the right thing. Others might say that nothing in his conduct indicated weakness in his love nor that "he wanted her to sacrifice herself without giving anything in return." His plan had, at least, the advantage of leaving Pam free to live her own life, which might be something apart from him. To every healthy, well-poised woman, life should mean something better than an all-absorbing devotion to love and a lover. Pam was a great improvement on her mother, as every girl should be. Her mother was narrow and selfish; she had no love or sympathy for anyone except her lover, not even for Pam, her only child. Pam had a strong maternal nature, deep sympathy for the sufferings of others, and broader ideas; hence her weakness in trying to adopt her mother's ideal, which could not have fitted her, and the difference in their natures would have made it impossible for her to "live the same life with Mr. Peele that her mother had lived with her father." One of the poorest reasons a girl can find for doing anything is that her mother did it.

I wonder if true love appears to Mr. Kitchelt so clear and well defined that he never could be mistaken in its genuineness, wherever he might meet it. He decides that Mr. Peele did not possess the genuine article when he did not readily give up every plan he had made in life and throw off all obligations to others, all for love of Pam. Suppose he had done this, and after building up a new life with Pam he had ceased to love her and loved another woman,—all of which might have happened,—would it not be just as necessary for him to do the same thing again to prove his love for the other woman? Men have given up wealth, position, reputation, obligations to others, for love. Men have also given up love instead and suffered much, but who shall say which acts from the higher ideal?

Mr. Kitchelt expresses no doubt of Pam's love, yet, in the sequel, after eight years she loves and marries another man, and that, too, when Mr. Peele is free and she knows he has loved her all these years and has never loved another woman. Might not the same change have come to her love if she had married Peele or carried out her program (copied from her mother), which was marriage in everything except the ceremony?—Lillie D. White.

JEALOUSY PROVES NOT LOVE.

Of all popular fallacies there is probably none which is so generally believed, and at the same time so untenable, as the idea that jealousy is an indispensable accompaniment and an indubitable proof of love.

On the contrary, not 1 per cent of the jealousy which exists and which causes so much unhappiness, so many disputes, so many uncomfortable hours, is even indirectly due to love, save of self. True and genuine affection for another seeks and desires the good of that other above all else, and is willing, with St. Paul, itself to be a castaway in order to insure the happiness of that other. The jealousy felt by such a love as this is but a passing twinge, an unexpected longing for the gracious look, the bright smile which has been bestowed elsewhere, but nothing more.

"Love took up the harp of Life and smote on all its chords with might;
Smote the chord of Self, which, trembling, pass'd in music out of sight."

Love which deserves the name brings all which is noblest and best in a man's or woman's nature to the front, and genuine, devoted love is never productive of anything but good to both lover and object. Even where it is unfortunate in that it is not reciprocated, it is still ennobling in that it is and must be unselfish.

Jealousy, on the contrary, crushes all the good, encourages all the little-mindedness, the pettiness in a character. It seeketh its own, and is resultant of misery, or at least of discontent all around. No large-minded man or woman is capable of mean jealousy, and while it may be possible that a trifling amount may be a compliment to the beloved, if encouraged it becomes a source of perpetual strife. Carried to extremes, it becomes a species of insanity which not infrequently leads even to murder and suicide, as is abundantly proved by the daily records of police courts.

It may be safely said that jealousy of the ordinary sort, which we find so often in men and women who profess to love each other, more especially in women, the jealousy which warps the character and leaves unsightly lines upon the face, a jealousy which excites more contempt than pity for the misery which it brings its unhappy possessor, is caused by vanity and selfishness rather than by love. And, besides this, jealousy which is easy, pure and simple, where there is not even a pretense of love, is quite as common, and still more unlovely and inexcusable.

The prime root of jealousy is vanity where women are concerned. It is as gall and wormwood to the jealous woman to see attention and admiration given to another. It is quite possible that she does not desire those attentions for herself, but none the less she resents the fact that they are paid to another. She wants the center of the stage wherever she may be; she wants to be first with every one and in everything. She dislikes to hear other women commended, and though she may possibly remark upon their attractions herself, may speak of their good looks, more probably of other good qualities, however, she always wants it understood clearly that her own attractions are superior. Nor is this by any means only when a favored lover is in question; it is with every and any one, and is nothing more nor less than inordinate vanity, coupled with intense selfishness.

A jealous woman is usually envious. She is jealous of her friends' admirers, of their wealth, of their beauty, of everything which they possess in a greater, or even an equal, degree with herself. Moreover, while she may have the good sense and prudence not to show her jealousy openly, she is apt to betray it by ill-natured, spiteful remarks.

It is easy to detect a jealous woman by the manner in which she speaks of the women whom she knows. When one hears a woman cordially praising another woman, especially to a man, it is safe to conclude that she has no petty spirit of jealousy. But when the commendation is spiced with dispraise: "She would be pretty, but," she who speaks is jealous at heart.

One often hears it said that men are more jealous than women, and perhaps this is true with regard to the love between men and women. But men are, as a rule, much less prone to the petty jealousy and envy which are among the common faults of women. There is no doubt that most men are jealous with respect to their sweethearts. The experience of most women, especially of those who are engaged, is that they are often unreasonably so, but this is usually in the uncertain days of courtship, unless the woman herself provokes it by undue desire for admiration from other and all men.

Jealousy is directly responsible for no end of misery; for numberless broken engagements, for unhappy married lives, for divorces, for severed friendships, and no end of sorrow, yet people go on, encouraging, indulging, provoking jealousy, excusing it, maintaining that it is the result of passionate love, accompanied by a humble opinion of oneself. When George Meredith's Egoist beseeches and insists that his fiancée shall promise solemnly, before marriage, that should he leave her a widow she will never remarry, he considers his selfishness "exacting bonds from future years," as an indisputable proof of strong and passionate love. Indeed, he is both grieved and injured that she cannot see it in that light. There are many others, men and women, who have the same point of view, who cannot conceive how to less selfish people it seems merely colossal vanity, a vanity which is stung to bitterness at the bare thought of any other holding the place which is ours—a place which we consider ought to belong to us forever.

Many horrible deeds which have been perpetrated in past times, and in the present time, by jealousy spurred on by selfishness and vanity, have been in good faith often laid at the door of love, which had naught to do with them.

"Beware, my lord, of jealousy;
It is the green-eyed monster, which doth mock
The meat it feeds on."

Yes, indeed, let all who care for peace and joy in love, whether between lovers or friends, beware of listening to the promptings of the jealousy which casteth out faith and trust. Better, by far, let man or woman, however well beloved, go free than be bound by the galling cords of jealous love. No home can be truly happy where it exists. It forms a source of dissension between husband and wife, between sister and sister, friend and friend, and, unlike other barriers, it grows stronger instead of weaker as time goes on.

"Trifles light as air, are, to the jealous, confirmation Strong as holy writ."

And even time, the great healer, which brings surcease to most sorrows, seldom seems to cause a jealous heart to forget what it sees fit to consider as wrongs and slights.—Helen Oldfield in Chicago Tribune.

It requires, no doubt, strong evidence, which, however, exists in abundance, to satisfy us that the origin of marriage was independent of all sacred and social considerations; that it had nothing to do with mutual affection or sympathy; that it was invalidated by any appearance of consent; and that it was symbolized, not by any demonstration of warm affection on the one side and tender devotion on the other, but by brutal violence and unwilling submission. Yet, as already mentioned, the evidence is overwhelming.—Lubbock.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE FREE SPEECH LEAGUE
Invites correspondence, coöperation, and membership of all who claim rights, and dare maintain them.
Join us. Help us. Get our list of books. Read them—pass them on.
Liberty tracts by Ingersoll, Wakeman, Walker, Pentecost, Darrow, Post and Schroeder. Read "Our Vanishing Liberty of Press" (5c) and "Do You Want Free Speech?" (10c) and so learn
WHY YOU SHOULD ACT WITH US.
FREE SPEECH LEAGUE, 120 Lexington avenue, New York.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

Parental Rights and Economic Wrongs.
BY VIRGINIA M. BUTTERFIELD.
The purpose of this book is to discuss the ethics of optional motherhood as the result of optional conception. It is meant to show both the short-sightedness and injustice of the policy by which any effort to control conception, in the interest of purposeful and responsible parenthood, race-improvement, and child-happiness, is classed with criminal abortion.
Motherhood is at present compulsory, since all effort to control conception is forbidden, and even all discussion of the possibility or righteousness of so doing is regarded as immoral. This is not only injurious to the race, working evil and unhappiness in a multiplicity of ways to every man, woman and child in the world, but is totally unnecessary as well.
Humanity has been so long accustomed to deny its own right of volition in the matter of parenthood, and also to consider sinful even the desire to exercise such right, that no radical improvement in conditions can take place until men and women recognize the legitimacy and morality of purposeful parenthood.—Author's Preface.
Bound in gray linen. 96 pages. Price, 50 cents.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.
BY WINWOOD READE.
This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.
BY EDWARD CARPENTER.
One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.
"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."
Daintily printed. Prepaid. 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.
A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.
FORTIETH THOUSAND.
"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid. 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.
BY R. B. KERR.
Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses.
BY E. C. WALKER.
Contents—Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What Is She? What Will She Be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections Upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love and Life." Price 15c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,
THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.
Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Thelam in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61, BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,
DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1087
If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.
If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Photographs of Moses Harman.
The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25c each.

Are You Interested
in the Independence of Women? Then send for Albert Chavannes' "Lizzie Melton," the self-reliant girl who, though fallen in the eyes of the world, won the esteem of the community by her dignity, courage and perseverance in well-doing. 15c a copy; two books for 25c. Send for catalogue to MRS. C. CHAVANNES, 508 Fourth avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.

"There Is Nothing in a Name"
and only ten cents in a dime; but either one is enough to get a sample copy of Armstrong's Astronomist. You can pay me to send it to you, or I will pay you to read it. This is my idea of freedom, and the Astronomist is a realization as well as a proclamation of the editor's ideas. Don't send for it unless you are "free" enough to see nearly everything you hold sacred assailed. Address, with or without money, JAMES ARMSTRONG, 3509 North Clark street, Chicago. 88

Mother Earth.
Monthly Magazine devoted to Social Science and Literature. Published at 210 East Thirteenth street, New York City. Emma Goldman, publisher. Price, $1 per year; 10c per copy.
MOTHER EARTH'S PAMPHLETS.
The Masters of Life. By Maxim Gorky. Only translation of the original. Price, 10c.
The Criminal Anarchy Law an Suppressing the Advocacy of Crime. By Theodore Schroeder. Price, 5c. 90

The Occidental Mystic and Western Spiritualist.
A 36-page monthly, devoted to the consideration of spiritualism and the occult sciences.
Clean, bright and filled from cover to cover with original matter from able contributors. Issued on the 1st of each month. $1 a year; single copy, 10c.
ARTHUR S. HOWE, Editor and Publisher,
142 S. Broadway, Room 107, Los Angeles, Cal.

Correspondence Club.
Open to those who desire to improve, and to discuss subjects of interest with kindred minds. Editor of this paper says the secretary is worthy of confidence. For particulars, enclose stamp to C. A. KICK, Sec., Box 723, Mitchell, S. D.

Thoughts of a Fool.
A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!
A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!
This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS
CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS
Not for Preachers
320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID
A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.
Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.
Address
TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,
For the Supermen and Supermaids and The New Civilization,
2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.
10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, MARCH 28, E. M. 307 [C. E. 1907]. WHOLE NO. 1088

MEDITATION AFTER THE PASSING OF ERNEST CROSBY.

How many stalwart saviours of the race—
Dear friends of mine—have taken sudden way
Into the Cave of Silence, and there stay,
Since Eret Love's selflessness I learned to trace!
Their fiery darts they hurled at earth's disgrace,
Then sank to Darkness from the desperate fray;
While hordes—great God! still bask on Hills of Day
And turn on Wrong an unimpassioned face!
Oh, who shall dare to tread the earth for naught,
His pulse still red, when even from dead dust
Of Great Ones soars an influence of Might!
Oh, meager men are we who yet have ought
No soul's contagion from their reverent "Must!"
No self-renouncement for Man's larger right!
—James H. West, in The Public.

INTEREST IN EUGENICS INCREASING.

By Jonathan Mayo Crane.

Stung by the opposition of many religious and so-called respectable people to his efforts to promote the study of eugenics, or race culture, and by the efforts of these people to utilize the courts to prevent the discussion of sexual hygiene by prosecuting under the obscenity laws those persons who published articles on the improvement of conditions for human reproduction, Moses Harman, editor of LUCIFER, the pioneer journal of eugenics, has declared on more than one occasion that perhaps this opposition was as beneficial as it was logical, and that he feared it might be a detriment to progress if the study of eugenics should become respectable.

I do not share his fear, which probably was inspired by the animosity against him shown by the so-called respectables. I am glad to see that the new science, happily called eugenics by the great physiologist, Francis Galton, is becoming respectable. Although less than three months have elapsed since Moses Harman was released from the penitentiary, to which he was sentenced for one year for publishing articles insisting on the right of children to be born well, hundreds of papers since he was sent to prison have taken up the subject and a National Society of Eugenics has been formed, the subject and a National Society of Eugenics has been formed, the subject and a National Society of Eugenics has been formed, connected semi-officially with the United States department of agriculture.

Several recent numbers of the American Journal of Sociology, published by the University of Chicago Press, have contained long and interesting articles on race culture, which is their language have been more outspoken than those articles published in LUCIFER on which the prosecution of Moses Harman was based. Unwittingly President Roosevelt gave an impetus to the study of this subject by his philippic against "race suicide." Regardless of the suggestion of United States Judge Bethea, made in passing sentence on Dr. Alice B. Stockham for publishing an instructive article on the sexual relations—the suggestion that "if you people want to discuss such matters you should have the laws changed"—hundreds of sincere persons, including university professors, settlement workers, clergymen and amateur sociologists, have taken up the discussion and are urging the importance of recognizing the rights of children to be born under the best possible conditions.

An article in the March number of the American Journal of Sociology by Professor Edward A. Ross, of the University of Wisconsin, has aroused editorial discussion in newspapers throughout the United States. The article was read at the recent meeting of the American Sociological Society. It was regarded as one of the most interesting papers read at that meeting. The Journal of Sociology devotes twenty-six of its large pages to the publication of Professor Ross' article in full, together with comments on it by Professor Frank A. Fetter of Cornell University, Professor William A. Bailey of Yale, Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer, Miss Emily Balch of Wellesley, Bishop Potter of New York, Professor Walter F. Willcox of Cornell, Dr. I. M. Rubinow of Washington, D. C., and Professor C. W. A. Veditz of George Washington University.

Professor Ross gives interesting data of the decrease of human fertility among various races and tells various reasons which have been given for it. Some persons, he says, "blame the broadening freedom of divorce, unmindful that divorceless Ireland has only four-fifths of the birth rate of easy-divorce Switzerland, . . . and that prolific Japan leads the world with nearly twenty times the divorce rate of stationary France."

The low birth-rate of Ireland is particularly remarkable when the fact is considered that most of the inhabitants are members of the Roman Catholic Church, which is severe in its prohibition of any efforts to check natural reproduction, but Professor Ross does not mention this fact.

He maintains that "the cause of the shrinkage of fecundity lies in the human will as influenced by certain factors which have their roots deep in the civilization of our times." He points out, furthermore, that the decay of religious beliefs has had its effect in decreasing the birth rate.

"Parents who 'trust in Providence,'" he says, "and hold with Martin Luther that 'God makes children and he will provide for them,' are rare. More and more the age chimes in with Matthew Arnold when he says:

"'A man's children are not really his, any more than the pictures upon his wall or the horses in his stable are his;' and to bring people into the world when one cannot afford to keep them and oneself decently and not too precariously . . . is . . . by no means an accomplishment of the divine will or a fulfillment of nature's laws, but is . . . contrary to reason and the will of God."

"Piety, moreover, promoted parentage by reconciling woman to her lot as mother and drudge. The struggle of woman to realize an individuality has obliged her to rebel against her biblical status and to spurn the counsel of submission to the curse of Eve."

He points out that the restriction of population is beneficial rather than detrimental to the race, saying: "One effect is that diffusion of economic well-being registers itself in a rising plane of comfort, a growth of savings, and a wider diffusion of ownership. . . . Again, a decline in fecundity lessens infant mortality; for often the sole effect of prolificacy is to fill the cemetery with tiny graves. . . . These aborted lives add nothing to national or racial strength; they are simply sacrifices of the innocent to the Moloch of immoderate maternity."

In conclusion Professor Ross says, in italic letters: "Restrictive is a movement of bottom salutary, and the unbounded evils to its train appear to be minor, or transient, or self-limiting, or curable;" then, dropping italics, he finishes: "I shall have against me mystics, clerics, a priori moralists, sentimentalists, esthetes, militarists, capitalists and politicians; but, nevertheless, I take my stand with those who hate famine, war, saber-toothed competition, class antagonism, the degradation of the masses, the wasting of children, the dwarfing of women, and the cheapening of men."

Commenting on Professor Ross' paper, Professor Fetter says, among other things: "Under the touch of the new science of eugenics, many of our most vexing social problems will disappear, making possible that better democracy which we are just beginning to seek." In this he is in accord with the teachings for which Moses

Hurman has been persecuted, but, like Professor Larkin (see LUCIFER 1087), he holds that laws fixing qualifications for marriage can remedy the evil. Professor Larkin, however, further along in his brilliant contribution, made the more truthful statement that "any law made by man in conflict with a fixed law of nature must and will be swept out of the nation."

Professor Bailey of Yale, commenting on Professor Ross' views, said: "There are certainly dangers connected with a too great restriction of the birth rate, but they are small compared with those of an excessive rate."

Miss Balch of Wellesley said she believed the time would come when persons contemplating marriage would be required to pass physical and mental examinations to determine their qualifications for parenthood.

Probably the best plea for intelligent restriction of the birth rate made by any of the critics was by Dr. Rubinow, who said: "The growing desire to escape the natural consequences of normal married life has created a new mental disease, the fear of conception, which makes a mental wreck of many a normal and healthy woman. Last, but not least, since our form of marriage has not even begun to adjust itself to this almost universal fear of parenthood, unsatisfactory marriage relations at home lead by a narrow but hardly straight path to prostitution, and it is no secret to the specialist in venereal diseases that the social evil in this country is supported by married men no less than by unmarried." Other parts of Rubinow's comments, published with impunity in the Journal of Sociology, if reproduced in LUCIFER doubtless would cause this paper to be excluded from the mails.

The real reason for the cry against "race suicide" is pointed out by Professor Veditz, of George Washington University, when he says: "The community wants soldiers, it wants laborers." That is the whole excuse put in a nutshell for Kaiser Wilhelm telling his soldiers that it was the duty of patriotic Germans to "breed, fight and serve."

The largest families are found among the poor. The rich have solved the problem for themselves. But the poor are needed for "cannon food" and to glut the labor market. That is why laws have been passed making it a penitentiary offense to inform a woman how she can avoid having undesired children. The remedy is too obvious for it to be permitted by the rich, whose fortunes depend on the fecundity of the poor. All that is necessary is to abolish the law forbidding the enlightening of women as to the means of restricting their fertility. The poor are as fond of children as the rich, but the percentage of undesired births among the poor is much greater. The percentage of crime and poverty would decrease rapidly if this absurd and degrading law were abolished. Criminals, as a rule, have no strong desire for parentage, and they would be exterminated rapidly if ignorance, promoted by the Comstock law, did not compel them to continue to propagate their kind. Poverty would decrease, because the poor no longer would have undesired children and the labor market no longer would be overstocked.

Few, if any, consumptives, or persons affected with hereditary diseases, would run the risk of communicating disease or weakened constitutions to their children if they knew a safe way to avoid having children without the practice of absolute continency. Instead of laws restricting marriage, what is needed is the abolition of the law which forbids the imparting of sexual knowledge to men and women. There might still continue to be cases of injudicious mating and some children might still be brought into the world who had better never been born, but the percentage of such cases certainly will be greatly decreased when enlightenment takes the place of ignorance.

THE THAW TRIAL AND THE DAILY PRESS.

ELGIN, ILL., March 3, 1907.—Mrs. Katherine S. Fry, Secretary Protest Mass Meeting, Los Angeles, Cal.—Dear Comrade: In an early February issue the Chicago Chronicle, a conservative Republican organ, published an outspoken letter of protest against the interference of the federal authorities with the freedom of the public press in its detailed presentation of the Thaw trial.

I was both astonished and gratified to discover such liberality of the Chicago press, and was inspired thereby to add a forceful word in support of the radical position taken by the writer of the letter, Mrs. Hulda L. Potter-Loomis, whose pronounced views on sex, economic and medical questions are doubtless happily familiar to all studious friends of progress on the Pacific Coast.

My letter to the Chronicle was politely returned, and feeling that its substance and spirit not only pertain directly to the object of your meeting, but that it will also prove an interesting testimonial of the cowardly narrowness of metropolitan journalism, I send it on, as it was originally prepared, for such purpose as it may best serve.

With heartfelt prayers for the successful outcome of your great meeting, I am, faithfully yours, GEORGE E. BOWEN.

* * * * *

ELGIN, ILL., Feb. 22, 1907.—Editor Chicago Chronicle: In a recent issue of the Chronicle (Feb. 15) I was glad to find a timely declaration against the proposed plan of President Roosevelt to summarily suppress the proceedings of the Thaw trial, as given to its anxious readers by the daily press of our land.

It was also vastly encouraging to observe the fine independence of the Chronicle in giving voice to such a definite and determined demand for the constitutional right of free thought and free speech as was made by your fearless, outspoken and intelligent contributor, Mrs. Hulda L. P. Loomis. (These little keynote sermons hold the secret of revolution, too often unheeded.)

Aside from its importance as a sickening revelation of our present social state and tendency, I am not particularly interested in the Thaw trial, which at best (or worst) is only one unhappy exposure of a common, widespread evil magnified into undue prominence through its spectacular setting of wealth and reckless extravagance. The real "Thaw trial" is before the bar of social conscience (wherever that may extend) throughout the civilized world, for true barbarians and savages have attained no such depravity of sex-association or of social conduct as stains the record of this uncovered scandal.

With your faithful contributor, who certainly has sounded a thrilling warning to liberty of opinion, I deplore the arrogance and the presumption of high authority to attempt the prescription of either intellectual opiates or moral palliatives. The sense of society cannot be stupefied, nor its sight blinded to its own fevers, sores or poisons, by the pious pretensions of presidents, police or penitentiaries.

* * * * *

Nor can society, however disguised or discreet, rise above the common sources of its common shame.

The question is not, How conceal the effect? but, What is the cause? what the preventive?

If the lessons of the Thaw case shall be seriously and sensibly brought home to those dumb mothers whose false and fearful modesty has criminally deprived their sons and daughters of sacred and unprejudiced knowledge of the most vital facts and responsibilities of their being; if our understanding and practice of economics shall forever make impossible the tremendous and fatal displacement of wealth, and the corresponding reckless debauchery of its gigantic power; if the social conscience shall be stirred to its uttermost depths and the hypocrisies of life become as shameful in high places as they are heartlessly published and paraded in the lower walks of life; if, instead of by legal trickery and the ostentatious purchase of lying indemnity, we conceive and attain our moral standards and ethical ideals through honesty and some golden rule of fearless equality; if, for the brutality of laws whose blighting interpretation must be given to the refined and vicious inhumanity of some "learned district attorney," we shall instead have taken into our hearts the spirit of him who said, "Cast thou the first stone"; if the whispered protection of distinguished libertines and their secret abominations shall, at the cost of one frail woman's soul—its inhuman torture—shout into our sleeping ears the monstrous inequality and injustice of the law—of its inquisition; if the wanton destruction of character by the intimidations, the insinuations, the intolerance and cowardly despotism of unchallenged legal persecution, from whose ruthless and unwarranted invasion no last sanctuary of despairing decency is secure, shall open our deluded eyes to the mockery of courts and the pitiful travesty of Thaw trials as a means of justice to the dead or the living; if, from the nauseating particulars of luxurious licentiousness in whited sepulchers of fashion, our morbid imaginings shall be glad to reach out for the wholesome, unjealous simplicity and natural expression of life—if one or all of these things shall come to pass through the ventilating processes of the public press, society may thank heaven for its Daily Chronicles and for a cheaply purchased opportunity to make its moral inventory in a cleaner atmosphere and with an awakened conscience. Through its uncensored reflection of social and political life; through its unjuggled measurement and estimate of industry and commerce; through its unexpurgated exhibit of all those facts and forces, either now making or ultimately responsible for social weal or woe, the public press must forever and unhindered preserve, through the right of free thought and free speech,—which is the voice of the people,—the sacred spirit of liberty, whose fame we celebrate on this historic day. If that spirit be crushed or chained (and it has felt the tyrant's heel), then furl your starry flags, tear down the schools from which they wave, throw out those old ideals so long enshrined in the heart of persecuted humanity, and in the shadow of your hateful halls of state set up the slave-block, the stockade and the scaffold.

If such be our unclean appetite give us the Thaw case wholly and impartially. Let our own corruption feed on its special meat. Hold not away from our final humiliation and redemption the open mirror of our equal shame.

Give us all the crimes and cruelties of the rich, as well as of the poor, and finally give us the grace and the wisdom and the human compassion to provide neither weakness for prostitution, hunger for the training of thieves, ignorance for the exploitation of the law, nor sex-shame for the delight of scandal or the corruption of youth.

With Mrs. Loomis I protest against officious invasion of personal privilege, and deny the supreme authority of officeholders to do either my thinking, my dreaming, or my duties of conscience, and for these I demand unrestricted light and liberty.

For a free press, faithfully yours,

GEORGE E. BOWEN.

WHIMSIES.

BY ERNEST CROSBY.*

We hear a good deal from time to time of the "New England conscience," a term of reproach visited upon such survivals as are still to be identified of the Puritanism of the Fathers. Nothing is easier than the wholesale condemnation of a movement on account of its evident faults. Nothing is more difficult than to sift the wheat from the chaff. But it is worth the trouble and it is only fair to our forbears. As we hope for the charitable judgment of posterity for ourselves, we must be ready to look sympathetically upon our ancestors. What was the essence of Puritanism? It was, I think, the recognition of the fact that man has a complex nature, composed of parts of varying importance, and that where the interests of the various parts conflict, the less important should yield to the more important. It seems to me that this principle is consistent with the latest developments of the doctrine of evolution. As the race evolves, old instincts must give way to new ones, the old self to the new self, and in the inevitable struggle we must take the side of growth against that of stagnation and reaction. That there may have been much error in the Puritan assumptions as to how the nature of man was divided and what was higher and what was lower—this in no way affects the fundamental soundness of the Puritan position. It is doubtless true that matter and spirit cannot be separated as cleanly as they believed—that spirit has an important scope for activity in this world, and that it is a mistake to be preoccupied with any other future world—that the highest functions of spirit are not the observance of new moons and sabbaths but rather the practice of mercy and justice. But the errors of the Puritans were all matters of detail. The idea of mortifying the flesh is not a pretty one, but grows up naturally, and it has done so at various periods of the world's history. If, when flesh and spirit conflict, it is better to let spirit overcome flesh, then the flesh must sometimes suffer, and hence arose the idea that it was always a good thing to make the flesh suffer. As the most conspicuous pleasure of the flesh was sexual, the starving of that instinct was picked out as a special means of self-improvement, and Duty became a taskmaster whose place it was to make people do disagreeable things and avoid agreeable ones with no ulterior object in view.

The mistake of all this lay in emphasizing the stunting of the lower self rather than the development of the higher. The essential thing in Puritanism is self-control, and that is a fine quality, so long as the lower and higher natures do not wish the same thing. We can conceive of a future for man here on this earth when he will do what is best instinctively, and when his entire nature will be at one, but it is idle to suppose that we have now arrived at any such point of rest. Our world is now a laboratory of new and higher instincts in the making, and we are each of us at once experiments and experimenters in this laboratory. From this laboratory the higher man must eventually issue forth in all his perfection. Clearly by can we best contribute to his more speedy formation? Clearly by letting that which is higher in us dominate that which is lower, and it is duty and conscience which have their play in this field. The degradation of these instruments into mere tortures by an exaggerated Puritanism has resulted in a reaction and a rebellion against duty and conscience. "Do just as you like," say the new teachers. "Learn for yourself that fire burns and water drowns. Take nobody's word for it. Pray now to be led into temptation and yield to every tempter and find out for yourself what is best." But even if we follow this advice, at the end of our career we shall find the same necessity for self-control, and then it may be harder to exert it. I may, for instance, yield to the temptation to lie in bed in the morning until an accumulation of cold breakfasts, scornful friends, and failures in the business life force me by shame and self-interest to get up early, but in the end I must use the same power of self-control, and I would have been spared a long series of unnecessary experiments if I had turned myself out of bed at first. And I ran the considerable risk all along, by my yielding to temptation, of becoming a confirmed and incurable sluggard—one of the vast number of experiments gone wrong in our joint laboratory. We gain a good deal by accepting the results of other people's experiments. I know, for instance, from hearsay that the morphine habit is a bad one and leads to disaster. Surely it is not necessary for me to go out of my way to prove the fact at the risk of permanent injury. Self-control is a fine attribute and just as good before as after personal experimentation. The later school of psychologists tell us that the vast mass of our actions are already instinctive, the result of years of experiment by our ancestors, our fellowmen and ourselves. This simple settlement beforehand of the details of our lives leaves us free to devote our time to more important matters and to help in settling for posterity those questions which are evidently still open. If we still were in doubt about our hour of rising, of eating, of business, of pleasure—if we still examined again the methods of going upstairs and down whenever we had occasion to visit the upper stories of the house, there would be no time left for real progress. Let us get self-control as best we can, but the sooner and simpler the better.

I remember watching a hurdle race once—a match between two horses to settle a wager. The contestants rode over the course successively and the bet was to be decided according to the better form exhibited by one or the other. The first horse took the bit in his teeth and came down the track at a tremendous run, clearing every obstacle perfectly and finally going many hundred yards too far before his rider could bring him to a stop. The second came along comparatively slowly. His rider gathered him deliberately together before each hurdle and he took it with quiet dignity. To the tyro his performance was tame in comparison with the other, but the judges unanimously awarded the contest to him. The reason was that the latter rider had complete control of his mount, while the former was really run away with by his. And in life as in this match the question is not so much, what did you do? as, how did you do it? These two horses had done the same thing and done it well, but in one case there was a background of self-control—power in reserve, as we often call it—and in the other case there was none. It is a matter of small importance whether you drink or smoke or not, but it is a matter of supreme importance that no such habit should run away with you, and that you should at every moment have complete control of yourself. And this virtue the Puritan had, and we do wrong to revile him, for we need these very qualities even in our revolt against his narrowness. The real higher qualities of human nature which we group under the head of love to God and neighbor are also broad qualities, and not only broad but social, and these facts the Puritan forgot, and our civilization to a great extent has forgotten them. To preach love for neighbor to a generation which is distinguished for covetousness calls for stern Puritan qualities. It was a sense of duty that sent Jonah into the streets of Nineveh and Moses to the court of Pharaoh, and it still requires a sense of duty and the pricking of conscience to enable a man to fly in the face of things as they are. The protest of the Protestant can be turned against Protestantism itself, but it is still protest, and it is not easy to protest, even on behalf of sweetness and light. Self-control must be the backbone of the race yet, and it is a false doctrine which makes fun of it. But in cultivating our higher selves let us be sure that we know what is up and what is down. One thing is certain. Lovelessness is always down, and the old Puritanism was too often loveless.

Rhinebeck-on-Hudson, New York.

*A posthumous article published in March issue of Ariel, Westwood, Mass.

Be happy and you will be virtuous.—Grant Allen.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Six months .....50 cents Three months.....25 cents
One year .....$1.00 Single copies ..... 5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

LOS ANGELES PROTEST MEETING A SUCCESS.

LOS ANGELES, March 18, 1907.—Dear Lucifer Friends: After what seems a long delay I again write you to say that thus far my outing on the Pacific coast has been pleasant, health-giving and fairly prosperous in a business way; really beyond my expectations, on leaving home nearly two months ago.

After the first two or three weeks, which weeks were mainly cloudy and cool, my health has steadily improved, so that now I can walk and climb hills almost as well as before my incarceration in the state prison at Joliet.

The mass meeting at Mammoth Hall, Tuesday evening, March 12, was a splendid success in every way. The hall, though not crowded, was comfortably filled. The agent said (by actual count) the number of chairs was 460, and that not more than ten or twelve of these were vacant. The collection paid the expenses of the meeting, and something more, including hall rent, cost of advertising in the daily papers and by printed cards, of which latter we sent out 500 or 600, on which postage was paid, besides some 1,500 distributed at meetings of liberal societies in the city. From sales of books and papers at the door of the hall about $23 was received, including several yearly subscriptions to LUCIFER.

The meeting was presided over by Judge E. Major Taber, who has been for some years a regular subscriber to LUCIFER. In a very neat little speech of ten or fifteen minutes the chairman explained the object of the meeting, and then introduced yours truly as the first speaker of the evening. My forty-minute talk was mainly extemporaneous and dealt chiefly with the suppression of freedom of speech and of press by the officials of the postoffice department of the general government and with the prostitution of the powers of the federal judiciary in sending women and men to prison and subjecting them to heavy fines for no crime except the expression of unpopular opinions as to what is moral, true and good in the realm of eugenics, or of sexology, including the problems of heredity and race-culture. My talk was well received by the audience, a large proportion of which consisted of women.

The speakers that followed were, first, Arthur S. Howe, editor of the Occidental Mystic, a monthly magazine devoted to psychic science and the philosophy and phenomena of modern Spiritualism, who, with his "helpmeet," Mrs. M. E. Howe, also a very efficient speaker and writer, was my most effective helper in San Francisco three years ago. It was mainly through the efforts of these two that the San Francisco Freethought Association was formed, which association held regular weekly meetings till the quake and fire of last summer.

Mr. Howe's address was a powerful arraignment of the policy pursued by our falsely-called public servants in their administration of what should be, but never has been, a government of, by and for the people.

I made no notes of what was said by Mrs. M. E. Krutz, Dr. Ada S. Patterson, Dr. Leon E. Landone, Dr. Alvenson Lucas and others who made brief speeches, but hope to get synopses of these addresses for publication in LUCIFER.

The most widely known, doubtless, of the speakers at the mass meeting was Professor Edgar L. Larkin, astronomer at Lowe Observatory. Though at first declining to speak, at the urgent request of the chairman the distinguished writer on astronomic and kindred sciences came forward to the platform and made a brief address on human-culture, a subject to which he has given much attention. So well known has been his work in this line that he has been made honorary president of the lately formed San Francisco Eugenic Society.

* * * * *

Thursday evening of last week I accepted the invitation of our old time friend, Annie E. Cummings, to spend a day or two at her home in Vineland, a small town near the foot of the San Bernardino range of mountains. Friday I spent several hours tramping over the cactus-covered "desert" north of Vineland, which desert is waiting a supply of water to make it beautiful, fruitful and every way desirable as a foundation on which to build homes for the homeless. Saturday I had the pleasure of being driven in his buggy by our good friend Kallmyer, of San Gabriel, through the walnut groves, peach and plum orchards that lie between Vineland and San Gabriel, and afterwards to be entertained at the Kallmyer home, in their beautiful suburban town ten miles north of Los Angeles, reaching that city same day, after a very pleasant and restful outing of forty-eight hours.

* * * * *

Yesterday (Sunday) forenoon I had the pleasure of hearing my old-time friend and fellow-townsman, Clarence Darrow, deliver one of his characteristic discourses at the Mills "Fellowship," Blanchard Hall, in this city, to a large and enthusiastic audience. His subject was "The Open Shop." In the afternoon I heard Mattie E. Hull, at Howell Hall, discourse upon "The Seen and the Unseen," and at 8 p. m. I again heard Mr. Darrow at the Socialist meeting, Burbank Hall. His subject was, "The Rights of the Poor Man." The large hall was crowded almost to suffocation. Notwithstanding discomfort the audience was a very good-natured one and listened with rapt attention and frequent applause to the speaker while he showed that theoretic rights count for nothing, and that only as rights can be practicalized by might can the disinherited poor be benefited by the Socialistic propaganda. And yet no suggestion of violence was made by the speaker.

Mr. Darrow is attorney for the imprisoned labor leaders, Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone, whose trial is expected to take place very soon. Unless called to Idaho he will remain in Los Angeles till next Sunday and will talk to the Socialists in the largest hall to be obtained—so it was announced at last evening's meeting.

* * * * *

Los Angeles is a wonderful city for meetings of propagandists of all sorts, grades and shades of opinion. One regrets often not being able to attend a half-dozen meetings at the same time. Hence the difficulty of getting people together in any considerable numbers without a deal of effort and the expenditure of money in advertising. Excursions to the beaches and to the surrounding country take thousands away from the city every Sunday. Tourists, health-seekers and pleasure seekers in vast numbers flock to this city and its environs every year, and especially in winter and early spring. I should like to say something of the climate and scenery of southern California, but these have been described so often and by so much abler pens than mine I forbear the infliction, at least for this time, and will bring this letter to a close and hasten to get it into the mail, lest it should be too late for next issue of our Son of the Morning.

My address is still 425 East Forty-ninth street, Los Angeles.

M. HARMAN.

A physician, partisan of the cure by suggestion, met the son of a friend and asked how his father was. "Not at all well," said the child. "He says he is very ill." "What nonsense! Tell him from me that he only thinks he is ill!" Some days after the doctor met the same boy. "Well, how is your father?" "O, doctor, he thinks he is dead."—Il Mondo Umoristico.

SOCIALISM AND THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

At Burbank Hall, Los Angeles, Sunday evening, March 3, I heard a lecture on the above-named subject. The lecturer took the ground that it is no part of Socialistic work to attack the Christian Church or churches, their doctrines or usages. Neither is it any part of the work of Socialists to attack "the law," the civil "law of the land." While it may be all right for the "Freethinker" to assail the superstitious creeds and customs of organized Christianity, and while it may be the duty of the "philosophic Anarchist" to show the wrong inherent in the organized State—that is, in government of man by his fellow man—both these lines of reform are foreign to the work of the Socialist as such. His duty is, first, last and all the time, to attack and to crush organized capitalism. No minor issues, no side issues, should be allowed to divide and distract his efforts. Church and civil law are side issues.

Referring, probably, to the agitation for repeal or radical reform of the postal laws against discussion of sex and reproduction—science of Eugenics—under the ruling that such discussion violates the federal statutes prohibiting the dissemination of "obscenity" or of "immorality," the speaker iterated and reiterated the statement that "freedom of speech has been won." Once only did he admit that there are exceptions to this averment, when he said, "Comrade Harman has reason to think differently"—or words to that effect.

When five-minute replies were called for, "Comrade Harman" said in words or substance as follows:

"In illustration of the subject of the lecture, let me cite an instance or two, drawn from experience and observation.

"Years before the breaking out of the great American civil war I was a member and also an officer in the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church—the church that has been—justly, I think—accredited with being the main religious and moral support of the Confederacy, whose aim was to disrupt the American Union of states and to found a new federation of states, a federation whose chief cornerstone was to be the public recognition of the principle that all men are not 'born free and equal,' but that the 'children of Ham'—the African race—were created to serve the children of Shem—the Caucasian race.

"As such member and officer I had abundant opportunity for observing and studying the relations subsisting between organized Christianity on the one hand and 'organized capitalism'—organized wealth, state-protected wealth—on the other.

"The anti-slavery movement was, in essence, an attack upon capitalism—capitalism in one of its most concrete forms, the ownership of the muscles, the bones and sinews of the black man by the white man. 'By the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread,' was the sentence passed upon primitive man, according to tradition. But the Caucasian said, 'No; by the sweat of my African chattel will I eat bread'—and he did so eat.

"The black man was the white man's money, the white man's capital or money-getter, just as the white man's 'horse, ass or wife' (see Jewish decalogue) was his money, his capital. The anti-slavery movement attacked the white man's money, his investment, in the body of the black man and destroyed that investment. Before the war the capital invested in black men amounted to about $1,000 per man; women and children in proportion to ability to do a man's work. At the close of the war my brother Woodbey (a black man born in slavery, now a very effective Socialist orator, at that moment sitting a few feet in front of where I stood) had lost his capitalistic value. He could no longer be sold for $1,000, nor for any other sum.

"Yes, the anti-slavery movement attacked and destroyed capitalism in one of its most concrete forms, but did it destroy capitalism as a whole?

"Did it destroy slavery as a whole?

"No! Slavery survived. The reign of capitalism survived, and why?

"Chiefly, as I see it, because the anti-slavery movement did not dig deep enough for the causes of the state-protected capitalism incarnated in slavery of the black man to the white man. The anti-slavery movement was a surface movement; it struck at one of the limbs or branches of the great upas tree, but left the root and the trunk untouched, unmenaced, unharmed!

"The root and the trunk of this tree of evil is the love of power—the desire of some men to rule other men—and women also.

"To secure themselves in the right to rule other men and women, men ambitious of such power organized those twin institutions known as Church and State.

"The Church—not Christianity, for Christianity is a sentiment, not an organized entity at all—the Church as organized by Paul and other hierarchs, says: 'Servants, obey your masters,' thus recognizing the two classes, rulers and ruled. Also, 'Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake,' thus clearly inculcating the union of Church and State. Also, 'The powers that be are ordained of God; whoso resisteth the power shall receive to himself damnation.'

"Money is power; capital is power, in its concrete, its visible and tangible form. The first thing, then, that this twin monster, Church and State, did was to create a legal-tender form of money, a restricted, an aristocratic, a privileged form of money, partly as a debt-paying and tax-paying institution, and partly as a medium of exchange—often a medium of exchange for the release of sinners from 'purgatory.' Of course the dues of the Church, the tithes, must be paid in the money of privilege or its equivalent—slaves, white or black, being one of the recognized equivalents of this money of the realm—money of the ruler.

"'Whose image and superscription is this?' asks Jesus when shown a coin. 'Cæsar's,' was the reply. 'Render therefore unto Cæsar the things that be Cæsar's, and to God the things that be God's,' thereby recognizing that money is a creation of the civil power, the representative of royalty, the outer symbol of the psychologic doctrine that man is not free to govern himself, but must have a ruler, a visible ruler, an earthly monarch to represent the heavenly ruler, 'The powers that be are ordained of God.'

"So then, as I see it, in order to successfully assail and to effectually destroy organized capitalism, whose representative and chief tool is legal-tender money, we must first destroy the twin despots—the power behind the throne of Mammon, greater than Mammon's throne itself, namely, Church and State!"

I wanted much to add something about freedom of speech, but did not have time. I wanted to say that while the freedom of speech and of press in regard to religious opinion is practically won the freedom of speech and of press in regard to political government, and especially in regard to Eugenics—including all questions relating to sex and reproduction—is yet to be fought for, suffered for, and, most probably, died for, as our fathers and mothers for many ages fought, suffered and died for the freedom of worship, worship of the unseen and the unknown.

Freedom to advocate the abolition of government of man by man is yet to be won, as we all know, from the simple fact that every year women and men are arrested and imprisoned (or deported) because of their advocacy of the right of self-government in all things, as well as in matters religious.

* * * * *

Hoping all is well at LUCIFER'S Chicago home, also that all is well with its widely scattered friends and helpers, I remain yours for more light, and for the right to spread the light as I may see the light of truth.

M. HARMAN.

A TRIBUTE TO CROSBY.

By Ed. W. Chamberlain.

Cooper Union, in New York City, has been the scene of many meetings which history will hold memorable, but perhaps the most remarkable of such meetings was held on March 7 in honor of the memory of a man not in political life, not in the glamour of official, social or financial exaltation—only a plain citizen whose conspicuous personal goodness and earnest, consistent efforts to promote the cause of human advancement won him the affection of all with whom he came in contact.

The influence which Ernest Crosby exerted upon me was very peculiar. Upon his return from Egypt he occupied offices in the same building with me and I saw him frequently without a speaking acquaintance. In those days I was so foolish as to harbor a very unjustifiable prejudice against him, not so much on his own account as on account of his father, who was a theologian and had the objectionable characteristics of his class, and was especially venomous at the time of the outrage upon good old D. M. Bennett. And I was so wrong as to attribute to the son a discredit due to the moral obliquity of the father. Besides, I had known Ernest Crosby's uncle, who was a fine specimen of an old-time lawyer, maintaining in a high degree the dignity of his profession; and afterwards, when I came to know Ernest Crosby well and when my aversion to him had been turned into affectionate respect and admiration, it pleased me to think he was more like his uncle than like his father. I have known several sons of theologians who have been better than their fathers because of their repudiation of the parental orthodoxy, and as such Ernest Crosby must take rank with Robert G. Ingersoll, Bolton Hall, Captain Robert C. Adams and Albert Chavannes.

Upon the same Cooper Union platform whence encomiums are now delivered upon Ernest Crosby's life and work, he once stood with only a few faithful associates and protested vigorously against the official wickedness of the deportation of John Turner.

When it was proposed that Professor Herron should deliver a series of lectures in Cooper Union some of the unco guid started a crusade against him on account of the agreement he had made with his wife for a friendly separation. I was a member of the Herron committee, of which Ernest Crosby was chairman, and I remember with peculiar satisfaction Mr. Crosby's prompt repudiation of any thought of abandoning the lecture project to conciliate the unco guid.

I last saw Ernest Crosby in September at the Colonial Arms Hotel in Gloucester, Mass., and we had an hour's conversation, in which I told him of my correspondence with Attorney-General Moody in relation to Moses Harman. He was greatly interested and very sympathetic, as indeed he was in all things relating to Moses Harman. It is quite characteristic of Ernest Crosby that, with the heartiest approval of the noble work to which Moses Harman was devoted, he had no word of condemnation for those who so wickedly misrepresented that work for their own mercenary purposes. It is gratifying to know that the very last writing that Ernest Crosby gave out to the public was his letter of sympathy and appreciation to Moses Harman on his release from prison.

THE FUTURE.

By Sara Crist Campbell.

And I looked into the future and saw a new heaven and a new earth, wherein there were good homes and remunerative work for all.

The following are the things I did not see, for they had all passed away and will be no more forever: I saw no government of man by man, no churches, prisons, saloons, whisky, tobacco, flesh for food, coffee, tea, corsets, face powder, high-heeled shoes, or anything whatsoever that would in any way be injurious to health or a hindrance to freedom and happiness. And I saw happiness as an angel of glory beaming from every face. And love, the archangel of peace, health, happiness and freedom, dwelt continually in every heart. And I said, When can this be? And the angel of common sense who was with me and who also saw the vision said, All these things shall surely be when humanity is sufficiently evolved to bring it about, and nature, the great paradox but nevertheless the only providence that shapes reforms, will see to it that the men and women will be born that will create this new heaven and new earth; yea, more, the ones are already born who have begun the work of reconstruction, and more will be born as they are needed, and the work will go on forever.

A LETTER TO A CONSERVATIVE.

Dear Sonsie: I used to think a good deal as you do on the subject of theology, but I have been coming to the conclusion, the more I meditate on the subject, that very many of the evils from which society now suffers are caused, or at least perpetuated, by the preservation of a religious belief long since outgrown. You say this will all right itself. Well, so will any wrong, no doubt, if we give it time enough; but in the meantime, if people see an error in any other direction, they up and have at it. The works of Ingersoll and Paine were not popular, surely, but in the light of the percentage of religious fanatics which fill our insane asylums I believe they were as great benefactors as our time has known. Take a man who has been held long enough over a hot stove, in dread that he will be dropped thereon in a few minutes, and after a little you have reduced his mind to such an abject state of fear that if you tell him his head was made to walk on and it is wicked to stand on his feet, or that if he steps on a crack in the sidewalk a ghost will come out (a servant of ours told me that once when I was a youngster, and nearly scared me to death till I told mother and she said it wasn't so at all) he will meekly assent to each one of these absurdities. That, to my mind, is what the idea of hell has done for men; it has warped their judgment on almost every subject.

I sometimes think of the example of an organ grinder. He drives me almost mad when I want to read, and it strikes me as an infernal nuisance that he should be allowed to stand out there at all. Yet other people are sitting on the steps and getting lots of fun out of it. It will evidently be unfair to take away their music and give them nothing else. We must go slowly—the music a little better and a little better, until at last they know and enjoy the best that has been written. So far, so good. But now we have another phase of the matter. Here is this organ-grinder coming into a concert where we are enjoying fine music, and he plants his organ right in front and begins to grind vigorously. We say, "Hello, get out of this; you are spoiling our concert!" Then the grinder says, "This is a very old organ I have here. It has been grinding out the same tunes for hundreds and hundreds of years. Your fathers enjoyed it, and so did their fathers, and there are no other tunes beside it. If you don't think so you are all going to eternal perdition!" I reckon we will take him by the back of the neck and harry him out of the front door, not stopping to reflect that if our music is better he will probably stop grinding in the course of a century or two.

We need not mind about showing him any great amount of consideration, perhaps; for a great many hundred years he has been insisting that his is the only harmony there is in the universe, and when he came across a Beethoven sitting by the roadside producing melodies that are full of concentrated sunshine, and great winds, and open sky, he fell upon the master and broke his violin—and his heart when he could. He would burn you and me in the public square today were he able to do so—for our own good and for the good of the organ. There is this, too, about the grinder: I believe that he often knows he is not grinding the best there is today; but then there comes up the question, What is to become of him if the grinding ceases!

You say, "Thinking people all think alike on these questions, and the unthinking are moving as fast as is good for them." Knowest not, dear Sonnie, that the unthinking never move at all of their own volition, but only as they are prodded from behind, and that if they are shoved, nolens volens, over into a better field, they reward the active one with—kicks and entreaties to be left in peace! No doubt the wise reformer is he who uses a long stick and operates from behind a tree!

Farewell.

ALMA.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

Lillian Harman: Inclosed find $1.50, for which please enter my subscription one year to LUCIFER and one copy of "Life, Health and Longevity," by Moses Harman. As a citizen of the earth I demand the right to investigate, in the light of my own judgment and reason, any and every subject bearing upon the welfare of the race. I believe in the doctrine all for the race and the race for all. The world is my home, all mankind my brothers, to do good my (sufficient) religion.—W. J. Roberts, Ishpeming, Mich.

Moses Harman: Some time since I received, upon application, several specimen copies of your paper and have read them with great and increasing interest. Truly your work is one of grand and lofty purpose. May I extend to you, who no longer seem a stranger to me, sincerest sympathy in the work you are doing and best wishes that your health and strength may soon be restored to you? Inclosed find a money order for $2.25 for one year's subscription to LUCIFER and one copy of each of the following: . . . Yours with best wishes for success.—(Miss) Elmira E. W., Pawtucket, R. I.

Lillian Harman: This morning's mail brings the new pamphlet. I think that this is an excellent idea. A very nice collection and combination of information. Inclosed you will find $2. Please mark LUCIFER paid if it has expired. Send pamphlets for the balance. If my subscription is paid you may send me copies of the pamphlet for the inclosed. I have not recently sent you any remittances and therefore do not remember just how my subscription stands. Wish you would see that I get a few extra copies of each issue, which I will try and use for the good of the cause.—J. W. Griggs, St. Paul, Minn.

Lillian Harman: No. 1087 and pamphlet were received this morning and I hasten to inclose $1 to help pay postage for sending them out, for they, with all other means for enlightening the political and theological blind, are very much needed throughout the land. While I have not had time to read the pamphlet yet, I know it is all right, for anything along the line for freedom can be nothing less.

Hail the day when women will have all the liberty that is due them and when all will have the liberty of a commonwealth form of government; when all capitalistic tyranny shall have been relegated into the shades of oblivion; when the standard for the man and the standard for the woman will be one and the same. Yours for the revolution.—Dr. T. Morris, Columbus, O.

Dear Mrs. Harman: Will you forgive a stranger (to you) addressing you, asking help? Have taken LUCIFER for years, but not in my name—"mistresses" are so very narrow. Now will you (if you can) give me the address of a reliable employment office for domestic help? Have written to several of them, inclosing postage, references, and in two cases photos, but can get no reply. Am a cook at present; last position was housekeeper. Can give first-class references, but here woman help is so numerous it makes it hard for all. For years have had a sick sister to provide for, but she has passed on, so would like to try for a position before giving up this one. Forgive me for troubling you. I wish so much to live in Chicago. Will you please help me if you can?—Edith M.

[I am unable to give the desired information, but hope the foregoing letter will be read by some one who can give it. Letters sent in care of this office will be duly forwarded.]

Lillian Harman: Inclosed please find postage stamps to pay for the book, "The Persecution and the Appreciation," and for one copy of Carpenter's "Marriage in Free Society," which I ask you to kindly forward to me. I regret that I am not financially in a position to take any active part in the spreading of the interesting brochure you mailed to me; besides if I had a few hundred at my disposal I would not know to whom to offer one, as all those with whom I come in contact are busy following the Thaw case, and have to watch how Thaw wins in one inning and Jerome loses in the next, and Evelyn Nesbitt crushes Jerome and Jerome crushes Evelyn, and so on, together with the doings of Battling Nelson. This is enough to keep their minds occupied and they cannot bother about the trials and tribulations of "old Moses Harman, who never won even in a dog fight, and ought to shut up with his free woman idea. The women who are out of jail are free anyway, and those who are in will be free when their time is up." So that's all.—George Boecklein, Chicago.

Dear Mrs. Harman: This is to acknowledge the receipt of the excellent and very interesting pamphlet on "The Persecution and the Appreciation" and to thank you in behalf of Eugene and myself for the copies you have been kind enough to send us. I have not yet had time for careful examination of the contents, but a mere glance is sufficient to satisfy me that the pamphlet was happily conceived and will be preserved by all the friends of Mr. Harman as a souvenir of his brutal incarceration and of his triumphant and glorious release. Please find $1 inclosed, the rest of which you can apply as you wish. I shall be glad to make mention of the pamphlet to our friends and have them send for copies. Our good wishes are always with you and we are hoping that your father's remaining years may still be many and that his sunset may be as glorious as his life has been dutiful and self-sacrificing. Yours fraternally.—Theodore Debs, Terre Haute, Ind.

Moses Harman: I inclose 25 cents in stamps for a three months' trial subscription to LUCIFER, and wish also to claim the catalogue of books along the line of sex reform promised in the inclosed advertisement. I sincerely hope that in this catalogue will be listed the books mentioned in the item at the top of the right-hand column of page 43 in the issue of LUCIFER of March 14. If they are not, I am afraid I shall be troubling you for information as to where most of these books may be obtained.

I am with you heart and soul in your noble effort to help in the solution of the sex problem of the race. It is the one great problem of human life, individually and collectively. It is the one greatest of human problem, beside which those of capital and labor, trusts, political rottenness, etc., sink into insignificance.

I wish I were financially able to help along your special work, but cannot even indulge in a year's subscription just now. While I might not agree with you as to some of the best means of reaching a solution of the problem, I recognize that a strong definite purpose and concerted effort can work wonders, and I deplore my isolation from all who are actively pursuing this strong purpose. The solution of this very problem for myself individually has been the one greatest object of life to me for nearly four years. I found that my intense antagonism to the natural law of love—the law of sex—which is the law of life to every one of us, was the principal cause of my being a bed-ridden invalid for years. Having now worked out for myself nearly alone a reasonable degree of health, I need active cooperation with others and feel that the time is coming when I shall be able to help others, perhaps many others, in solving this vital problem, and so eventually reach a perfect solution for myself.

I want to join in the great movement of the women and men of the nation which Professor Larkin says is well under way from east to west, but do not know how to come into personal touch with other workers. I wish I were where I could join such a society as he says there is in Los Angeles and San Francisco. I hope to get a little in touch with the work through you.—Emma O.

To the Editor: "The course of true love never runs smooth" is an old adage, more or less true. Church and state regulations, parental authority, public opinion, etc., have made the pathway of the little god of love a rough one. And now, just as many indications point to the weakening of these enemies, new ones are springing up. Some great scientist has discovered that each person possesses an invisible, inaudible aura which oscillates, and if the oscillations of the aura of two people in love are not harmonious or in tune the results are most disastrous, especially to progeny. It is to be the business of eugenic societies to see that this harmony exists in the aura of loving pairs. If the society decides it does not exist they must not marry or have children.

It reminds me of the old negro woman who, on being accused of being superstitious, said: "'Deed I isn't superstitious! Some folks is awful skeered of ghos'es and sich things, but so long as I got a rabbit's foot in my pocket I's all right." "Some folks is awful skeered" about marriage licenses, preachers' blessings and sich things, but so long as I have a certificate of harmonious aura, signed by a skilled mentalist, is my pocket, "I's all right."—Lillie D. White.

To the Editor: In No. 1086 C. P. H. says: "If two lovers freely choose exclusiveness, then they have both love and freedom, unless it be assumed that love must, naturally, rove about if left free, and this is not proved." In my opinion this is proved. I have gone over the ground so often that I will not do so now, but I advise any doubter to read the sections on "the effects of change" and "the pleasure of variety" in Sully's "Outlines of Psychology," a standard text-book used in all colleges. Sully proves more clearly than any other writer I have read that the law of variety is a fundamental law of the human mind, from which there can be no escape.

It is interesting also to note that Ibsen and Tolstoi, who are considered the greatest creative artists in our time, both recognize this law. Ibsen calls it "the law of change," and makes it the subject of "Little Eyolf." In a conversation with W. T. Stead, Tolstoi said: "Romantic love is like opium or hashish—the sensation is overpowering and delightful. But it passes. It is not in human nature not to wish to renew the experience; and for this novelty is indispensable." Unfortunately neither Ibsen nor Tolstoi could see that "to divide is not to take away." Before the rise of the LUCIFER school Shelley was the only writer who saw that point.—E. B. Kerr.

THE PERSECUTION AND THE APPRECIATION.

A report of the reception to Moses Harman at Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, Jan. 1, 1907, is now ready for delivery. It is a booklet of sixty-four pages, containing speeches by Paul Tyner, Walter Henry MacPherson, Lucinda B. Chandler, Gertrude Breslau Hunt, Parker H. Sercombe, and Moses Harman; also letters from absent friends, newspaper reports, etc., and pictures of Lucinda B. Chandler, Kiichi Kaneko and Parker H. Sercombe. Two portraits of Mr. Harman are given; one, with grandson, taken in January, 1907, has never before been published. We hope this will be an effective document for wide distribution. Price, per dozen, $1.25; single copies, 20 cents.

Much has been said about the aid which photography gives to the police in the identification of criminals. The following has just happened in the north of Italy. From Rome six photographs of the same criminal, in different poses, were sent to the different communes. From one prefect came the following letter: "Five of the criminals of whom you sent photographs have been arrested and we are on the track of the other."—Il Duovolo Rosa.

Women have as little to hope from men as the workmen from the middle class.—Bebel.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE FREE SPEECH LEAGUE
Invites correspondence, cooperation, and membership of all who claim rights, and dare maintain them.

Join us. Help us. Get our list of books. Read them—pass them on.
Liberty tracts by Ingersoll, Wakeman, Walker, Pentecost, Darrow, Foot and Schroeder. Read "Our Vanishing Liberty of Press" (5c) and "Do You Want Free Speech?" (10c) and so learn
WHY YOU SHOULD ACT WITH US.
FREE SPEECH LEAGUE, 120 Lexington avenue, New York.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

Parental Rights and Economic Wrongs.
BY VIRGINIA M. BUTTERFIELD.

The purpose of this book is to discuss the ethics of optional motherhood as the result of optional conception. It is meant to show both the short-sightedness and injustice of the policy by which any effort to control conception, in the interest of purposeful and responsible parenthood, race-improvement, and child-happiness, is classed with criminal abortion.

Motherhood is at present compulsory, since all effort to control conception is forbidden, and even all discussion of the possibility or righteousness of so doing is regarded as immoral. This is not only injurious to the race, working evil and unhappiness in a multiplicity of ways to every man, woman and child in the world, but is totally unnecessary as well.

Humanity has been so long accustomed to deny its own right of volition in the matter of parenthood, and also to consider sinful even the desire to exercise such right, that no radical improvement in conditions can take place until men and women recognize the legitimacy and morality of purposeful parenthood.—Author's Preface.

Bound in gray linen. 96 pages. Price, 50 cents.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.
BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.
BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.
A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.
FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.
BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses.
BY E. C. WALKER.

Contents—Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What Is She? What Will She Be? The State Holding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections Upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love and Life." Price 10c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

LADY of refined tastes would like to correspond with liberal-minded gentleman. Address Box 122, Tecumseh, Neb. 88

WANT to correspond with liberal-minded, serious, healthy woman; object, matrimony. Frank S. Barber, Merriam, Johnson Co., Kan. 88

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,
THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.
Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Thelsm in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61, BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,
DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1088

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Photographs of Moses Harman.
The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25c each.

Are You Interested
in the Independence of Women? Then send for Albert Chavannes' "Lizzie Melton," the self-reliant girl who, though fallen in the eyes of the world, won the esteem of the community by her dignity, courage and perseverance in well-doing. 15c a copy; two books for 25c. Send for catalogue to MRS. C. CHAVANNES, 308 Fourth avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.

"There Is Nothing in a Name"
and only ten cents in a dime; but either one is enough to get a sample copy of Armstrong's Autosexist. You can pay me to send it to you, or I will pay you to read it. This is my idea of freedom, and the Autosexist is a realization as well as a preachment of the editor's ideas. Don't send for it unless you are "free" enough to see nearly everything you hold sacred assailed. Address, with or without money, JAMES ARMSTRONG, 3509 North Clark street, Chicago. 88

Mother Earth.
Monthly Magazine devoted to Social Science and Literature. Published at 210 East Thirteenth street, New York City. Emma Goldman, publisher. Price, $1 per year; 10c per copy.
MOTHER EARTH'S PAMPHLETS.
The Masters of Life. By Maxim Gorky. Only translation of the original. Price, 10c.
The Criminal Anarchy Law on Suppressing the Advocacy of Crime. By Theodore Schroeder. Price, 5c. 90

The Occidental Mystic and Western Spiritualist.
A 36-page monthly, devoted to the consideration of spiritualism and the occult sciences.

Clean, bright and filled from cover to cover with original matter from able contributors. Issued on the 1st of each month. $1 a year; single copy, 10c.

ARTHUR S. HOWE, Editor and Publisher,
142 S. Broadway, Room 107, Los Angeles, Cal.

Correspondence Club.
Open to those who desire to improve, and to discuss subjects of interest with kindred minds. Editor of this paper says the secretary is worthy of confidence. For particulars, enclose stamp to C. A. KIRK, Sec., Box 733, Mitchell, S. D.

Thoughts of a Fool.
A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!
A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS
CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS
Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID
A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld
By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address
TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,
For the Superman and Superwoman and The New Civilization,
2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.
10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, APRIL 11, E. M. 307 [C. E. 1907]. WHOLE NO. 1089

TRUTH, LIBERTY AND LOVE.

By Jonathan Mayo Crane.

TO MY DEAR FRIEND MARY FLORENCE JOHNSON.

Truth, Liberty and Love, ye graces three!
To you I consecrate my life and songs.
Mere palliatives for our social wrongs,
Without you, are Faith, Hope and Charity.
Love cannot live unless that Love be free
From legal fetters and from Custom's thongs
To claim at will the Love for which it longs.
He knows not Truth who grants not Liberty.

Truth is the normal Reason 's cherished aim.
One said of old: "The truth shall make you free."
And Liberty—abjuring mocking name
Of Loyalty—knows no authority.
Love asks of Law no shield, and scorns its blame
When prompted by the Heart's sincerity.

Chicago, August 11, 1898, 4 a. m.

TEST CASE ON "OBSCENITY."

Bernarr Macfadden has been again arrested for obscenity. This time it is for sending his magazine, Physical Culture, through the mail. The offending matter was those portions of the serial story, "Growing to Manhood in Civilized (?) Society," which appeared in the November, December and January numbers of his publication.

The Free Speech League has secured Mr. Macfadden's consent to make his a test case to be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States on constitutional questions never heretofore raised. Should the contention of the Free Speech League be upheld, it will forever abolish all present obscenity laws and probably make it impossible to enact any others, in so far as they relate to literature circulated among adults.

Macfadden's case will be argued in the United States district court, Trenton, N. J., March 26 and no doubt will be appealed, no matter which way decided. Under a recent statute the government can appeal on questions of law in criminal cases.

It will cost several thousands of dollars to take the case to the Supreme Court of the United States and the Free Speech League invites contributions to defray the expense. All remittances should be sent to Dr. E. B. Foote, 120 Lexington avenue, New York City.

The following is a summary of the contentions which will be urged by Mr. Theodore Schroeder, attorney for the Free Speech League, and now one of Mr. Macfadden's counsel:

STATEMENT OF CONTENTION.

The postal laws against obscene literature are unconstitutional for each of the following reasons:

I. Congress having expressed power to establish post offices and post roads, it also has the implied power to pass all laws "necessary and proper" for the execution of the power to establish post offices and post roads.

It is admitted that congress has the implied power to determine the gross physical characteristics of that which shall be carried or excluded. It has been decided that congress also has the power to preclude the use of the mails as an essential element in the commission of a crime otherwise committable and over which congress has jurisdiction (such as a fraud and gambling) within the geographical limits of its power.

But it is now claimed that the power of congress is limited to the use of means which are a direct mode of executing the power to establish post offices and post roads, or other expressly enumerated powers, and it cannot, under the pretense of regulating the mails, accomplish objects which the constitution does not commit to the care of congress. Such an unconstitutional object is the effort of congress, under the pretext of regulating the mails, to control the psycho-sexual condition of postal patrons. A differential test of mail matter based upon the opinions transmitted through the mails, or the psychologic tendencies of such opinions upon the addressee of the mails, or a differential test based upon an idea which is not actually transmitted, but is suggested by one that is transmitted, bears no conceivable relation to the establishment of post offices or post roads for the transmission of physical matter only, nor to any other power vested in congress. Such psychologic test cannot become material until congress has authority for, and does establish a system for telepathic communication. At present congress can have no implied power to make such regulations.

II. Our constitution precludes the punishment of mere psychological crimes. The creation of offenses which are based only upon ideas, such as were once punished as constructive treason, witchcraft and heresy, either religious or ethical, and all kindred psychologic or constructive crimes, is prohibited. "The doctrine is fundamental in English and American law, that there can be no constructive offenses." All punishable crimes must be based upon demonstrable and ascertained or imminent material injury to some actual being. The present postal law against "obscene" literature does not predicate crime upon any actual nor ascertainable injury, but solely upon a speculative guess as to the problematical psychological tendency upon a hypothetical person of that which is sent through the mails. Congress has no power to predicate crime upon such factors.

III. The postal law against obscene literature is void under the constitutional prohibition against abridgment of freedom of speech and press in this, that it is the artificial legislative destruction of equality or creation of inequalities of opportunity for the dissemination of ideas of conflicting tendency. Freedom of the press is abridged by the state whenever under its laws there is not an equality of freedom in the production and distribution of ideas by means of the printed page.

IV. The statute furnishes no standard or test by which to differentiate what book is obscene from that which is not, because of which fact the definition of the crime is uncertain. Furthermore, it is a demonstrable fact of science that obscenity and indecency are not sense-perceived qualities of a book, but are solely and exclusively a condition or effect in the reading mind. This is evidenced in the result that it has been and always will be impossible to state a definition or test of obscenity in terms of the qualities of a book, or such a one that, solely by applying the test to any given book, accuracy and uniformity of result must follow, no matter who applies the test, nor such that any man may know in advance of a trial and verdict, solely from reading the statute, what the verdict must be as to the obscenity, and consequent criminality, of every given book. Neither the statute nor the judicial tests of obscenity or indecency furnish any certain advance information as to what must be the verdict of a jury upon the speculative problem of the psychologic effect of a given book upon a hypothetical reader. Their verdict is therefore not according to the letter of any general law, but according to their whims, caprice and prejudices, or varying personal experiences and different degrees of sexual hypersatheticism and varying kind and quality of intelligence upon the subject of sexual psychology. In consequence, every such verdict is according to a test of obscenity personal to the court or jury in each case and binding upon no other court or jury, and not according to any general law or uniform rule. One of the reasons underlying this uncertainty is the fact that "obscenity" is not a quality inherent in a book or pictures, but solely and exclusively a contribution of the reading mind, and hence cannot be defined in terms of the qualities of a book or picture.

V. The first result of this uncertainty is that the statute of congress herein involved creates no certain or general rule of conduct for the guidance of citizens, and does not enable them to know if their proposed act is in violation of law, and therefore every indictment under said statute is "without due process of law" and unconstitutional.

VI. The second result of this uncertainty of the statute is that every indictment under said statute is always according to an ex post facto law or standard of judgment specially created by the court or jury for each particular case. The congress of the United States has no power to determine guilt of crime according to varying personal standards (like the opinion of a jury on the psychologic tendency of a book upon a hypothetical reader) and which in the nature of things cannot be known at the time the alleged act was committed, nor before the rendition of a verdict thereon, because that is ex post facto legislation. Every conviction secured under such a criterion, whether thus enacted by the congress or through delegated power by the court or jury, is unconstitutional because under an ex post facto law.

VII. A third phase of the contention may be thus stated: The statute is void for uncertainty and the total absence therein of any complete definition of the crime to be punished, or the standard by which the existence of obscenity or the dividing line between it and its opposite is to be determined. This nullification results from an application of an ancient maxim: "Where the law is uncertain, there is no law."

VIII. The statute is void because by it congress has, in effect, delegated to the court or jury, or both, as the case may be, not merely whether or not the defendant has committed the acts prohibited by the letter of the statute and as charged in the indictment, but also its legislative power to declare by standards of judgment not made certain by the statute or natural science whether or not such undisputed acts shall or shall not constitute a crime under the laws of the land, and congress has not the power to delegate to courts or juries its legislative discretion to determine what shall be criminal.

* * * * *

NEW YORK, April 4.—The indictment against Bernarr Macfadden was quashed by the court because of its technical defects, and the court thus avoided a decision upon the constitutional questions involved. In all probability the next grand jury will indict him over again. If so, the validity of the law must be decided.

THEODORE SCHROEDER.

DOES EVOLUTION FAVOR EXCLUSIVENESS?

By R. B. Kerr.

"Oh that mine adversary had written a book!" has long been the cry of every varietist. For nearly a century varietists have been writing books and articles, and no one attempted to answer them. But at last we have found an opponent. I wish Helen Untermann had written a book, but at all events she has written a letter. God bless her for it!

Mrs. Untermann says: "You have, no doubt, studied some works on the history of the family. Did you not observe in them that sex relations have become more and more exclusive?"

First let me remind Mrs. Untermann that an able writer called Ernest Untermann has said that it makes all the difference from what standpoint a history is written. Hitherto all histories of marriage have been written by exclusivists. When Comstock will allow a varietist history of marriage to be published, Mrs. Untermann will open her eyes. But even the exclusivist historians do not agree with Mrs. Untermann's story. A large school, including Maine, Starcke, Westermarck, Howard, and many others, say that monogamy has been the usual form of mating since the very beginning of human life. All writers, of whatever school, concede that many of the lowest savages, such as the Veddahs, are strictly monogamous; yet Mrs. Untermann says that "exclusiveness in love is not practiced by the majority today." Westermarck says that "irregular connections between the sexes have on the whole exhibited a tendency to increase along with the progress of civilization." Starcke stoutly maintains that variety is an evidence of fairly advanced civilization.

The fact is that we know little or nothing about the history of sex relations. The historians of marriage are at sixes and sevens on every point, and there are as many theories as there are writers. Moreover, writers on marriage describe only the legal institutions of each people, and these are no guide to the actual facts of life. All historians of marriage class the United States as a monogamous country, but Mrs. Untermann says that a majority of its inhabitants are not monogamous. On the other hand, several writers say that group marriage formerly existed in theory, but that most people were really exclusive in practice. Evidently we can learn nothing from mere historians of institutions, but historians of the life of the people are more reliable, and the best of them, such as Gibbon and Lecky, strongly maintain that civilization is fatal to exclusive love. Gibbon says that "although the progress of civilization has undoubtedly contributed to assuage the fiercer passions of human nature, it seems to have been less favorable to the virtue of chastity." Surely our own history proves this to be true. Tacitus says that among our German ancestors of two thousand years ago an unchaste woman was almost unheard of, and I think everybody will admit that Americans were more exclusive in the days of the pilgrim fathers than they are today.

Under the heading "What Is Practicable Today" Mrs. Untermann trots out the sad old story about the deserted varietist woman and her child. Varietists always smile at this point. Perhaps Mrs. Untermann never heard of Neomalthusian methods, but varietists have. Before varietists have children, they usually know better than monogamists where the grub is going to come from. I know many varietist women, and they are always rosy and smiling. One of them, who is also a free mother, wrote the other day that she was "as happy as a June-bug."

Anyway, the economic question is only a temporary one, for public maintenance of children is fast becoming a question of practical politics. In France the heavy fall in the birth-rate has already brought about the public feeding of school children, and a similar measure is now going through parliament in England. In the London Times Sidney Webb, and in other papers H. G. Wells, are vigorously advocating state payment of mothers, and even the old-party politicians are taking up the question. All women need to do to get this quickly in every country is to cut the birth-rate down so low as to create a panic among politicians and capitalists, and the most effective way to do this is to remain independent and refuse to be the slave of any man. I think Mrs. Untermann will admit that state payment of mothers will completely protect the children of varietist mothers, for she concedes that in communist colonies the children of varietists are splendidly cared for.

Economics being disposed of, the question becomes entirely one of biology. If exclusiveness is good biologically, it will prevail; if variety, it will conquer. Mrs. Untermann gives one reason, and only one, why exclusiveness is good biologically. She says that variety favors the transmission of venereal disease. On this point let me make a passing explanation. Many people think that venereal diseases are generated by variety. Nothing can be more absurd. They are simply contagious diseases, and the only one of any importance was entirely unknown in the old world until it was introduced after the discovery of America. Moreover, nothing could be easier than the total extinction of venereal diseases. Dr. George Drysdale, one of the greatest authorities on this subject, proved that all that was needed to annihilate venereal disease was publicity. He showed that, if we could deal with these diseases as openly as with others, they would be wiped out in no time. But until we have a varietist community there is no hope of publicity.

Meanwhile I am glad to say that varietists are far freer from these diseases than monogamists. Mrs. Untermann says that "over one-half of society is sexually diseased," but I can assure her that that is not true of varietists. For over thirty years the Oneida Community had variety among 300 persons, and many came and went during that time; yet at the end of the time there was not a single man or woman in the community who had the smallest trace of venereal disease. I have myself visited a varietist community and I have many varietist friends, and I can say positively that venereal disease is almost entirely unknown among varietists. The reason is that varietists are the one class of people who have nothing to do with prostitutes.

So much for Mrs. Untermann's biological argument against variety; now I will give mine against monogamy.

First, monogamy is bad because it is utterly opposed to the principles of scientific breeding. Pigeons are bred monogamously for special reasons; but all other animals are bred from a small number of the best males. That is just what varietists want to do, only they want to do it voluntarily without the coercive methods of breeders. Any breeder of horses, cattle or sheep would die of laughing at the very idea of monogamous breeding.

Moreover, monogamy interferes with heredity because persons who are ideally qualified to have children together are often totally unfit to live together. As Bernard Shaw says, a stupid English squire and a very refined Jewess would probably have children superior to either, but would be miserable if they tried to live together. Conversely, the most loving couples often have the most puny children, because they have been drawn together by love and sympathy, and not by their suitability to produce good children together.

Secondly, I say that variety is good biologically because it is good for health. Darwin says: "Slight changes in the conditions of life are beneficial to all living things. We see this acted on by farmers and gardeners in their frequent exchanges of seed, tubers, etc., from one soil or climate to another, and back again. During the convalescence of animals, great benefit is derived from almost any change in their habits of life." This fact is so notorious that no human being has ever disputed it except in the case of love. Any person who doubted that variety was good in diet, climate, scene, study, or occupation, would be regarded by everybody as an utter fool. Yet it is hardly possible for an observant man to look around him for a single day without seeing that variety in love cures more sick people than any other kind of variety has ever done.

But the most crushing of all arguments in favor of variety is the simple fact that it is pleasant. Herbert Spencer has shown that all our cravings and desires have been gradually developed by natural selection, and that whenever a desire is general among normal men and women, that proves that such desire is good for the race. As he says: "Pains are the correlatives of actions injurious to the organism, while pleasures are the correlatives of actions conducive to its welfare." And as he further says: "Every pleasure increases vitality. Every pain decreases vitality. Every pleasure raises the tide of life; every pain lowers the tide of life." This consideration alone is enough to settle the question in favor of variety.

WHY COLLEGE MEN FAIL.

In Stuffed Club for February, E. M. 307, appears an editorial headed "Which Leaf Did You Turn New Year's?" that seems to me one of the very best contributions of the year, thus far, in the line of radical reform literature.

Dr. Tilden, editor of the Club, has a well-earned reputation for saying things which startle the conventional moralist, and this editorial is one of his best and bravest. As I see it, LUCIFER's columns could not be better utilized than in reproducing the entire article referred to, which fills twelve pages of the Club, but knowing so well that our fortnightly LUCIFER can print only a small fraction of the good things found in the columns of our radical exchanges I content myself with asking our office editor to reproduce the closing paragraphs of the article about "turning a new leaf" on New Year's day, at the same time suggesting that 10 cents cannot well be better invested than in sending that sum, in stamps or coin, to Dr. J. H. Tilden, 19 East Eleventh avenue, Denver, Colo., for a copy of the February number of the Stuffed Club; or, better still, send $1 for a year's subscription.

The paragraphs referred to read thus:

"Young men start life well; they leave a good school record; but ambition seems to lose force and they settle to a very commonplace life. Prize winners become drones in the active affairs of life.

"It is often remarked that college men make poor business men, and the college is often blamed for the life failure; but the truth, if it could be proven, is due to sex exhaustion.

"The creative force is the greatest force in nature. A strong sex nature means a forceful animal. Such men move the world when this force is used in the line of physical and mental development, but when it is diverted into sensual channels the mind becomes impotent and physical disorganization begins manifesting in all sorts of conditions called disease.

"Such life failures need not necessarily be marked by what society recognizes as grossly immoral lives. The truth is, there are hundreds and thousands of these failures among people who are looked upon as exemplary characters—people who have kept within the limit prescribed by moral ethics.

"Imbeciles and fools are everywhere, due to the incontinence practiced behind the cloak of married life. Mental perversion, caus-ing life to be a failure, is seen everywhere among the commonly recognized intelligent people, all due to overindulged sex function plus the irregularities superinduced by such a life.

"We hear much about overwork bringing on dreadful nervous diseases. Bosh! Sex errors are the chief cause. This, of course, is such an unpleasant truth that our neurotic gentlemen will be astonished at the indelicacy of my statement and declare that I should be suppressed. I've been on earth too long to be fooled by the conventional lips of gentlemen. I never ask a man if he has ever been guilty of excess; I always ask, 'How long have you been abusing yourself?'

"There are those whose self-abuse is wholly mental. Their bodies are held in absolute subjection by some form of religious belief, but in spite of religious inhibition they are often the worst debauched and the most impotent of this class of subjects.

"A pure mind in a pure body is the ideal, but there is no such thing as maintaining bodily potency with an impure mind, even if the body is suppressed in its expression.

"If the ideal cannot be attained and debauchery must be indulged in, that body is safer that is allowed to express its suppressed impulses. 'A house divided against itself cannot stand.' This is one of the most sublime truths of nature. An active delirium is not so dangerous as coma. The man who expresses himself in body and mind is in less danger of disorders of body and mind.

"Is this a recommendation for license—for people to become debauchers? I do not mean anything of the kind. I am simply attempting to put a crimp in the idea that people are good who practice continence of body when the mind impulses are as licentious as hell. Such people are to be found everywhere and they are the quicksands that flounder religious institutions.

"The new leaf that most people turn on New Year's seldom includes the sex habit. The general ignorance on this subject is appalling. About all the people know is that if they comply with the church and statute requirements that is all that is necessary. The world is suffering today as much from legalized sex debauchery as from the criminal variety, perhaps more, for the children—the future men and women of this country—are injured by the neurotic diseases superinduced by excesses practiced in keeping with popular moral restraint.

"What is the matter with the man who can't hold his temper? What is the matter with the man who is jealous, envious, dishonest; who won't pay his debts; who is excessively selfish; who eats too much, drinks too much, is extravagant in supplying his own wants; who is willing that all the world shall suffer, provided he can usurp their rights to life and their pursuit of happiness? He is a neurotic who is a sex pervert. He doesn't know it probably, but the time will come when he will be cut off with some form of disease years before his time.

"The potent man is not afraid to be his brother's keeper. He is not afraid of opposition, competition. He doesn't want the earth; he only wants his part and he knows that he will have it. He is not a coward; he is not afraid of want. He isn't afraid to help some one who is struggling to get up in the world, for fear that the one helped will supplant him. The fact is, pessimism is the legitimate offspring of impotency, while optimism is the child of a full-sexed, potent progenitor.

"A country that is in danger of being overthrown by graft and general business degeneration is a country dominated by a people who are suffering with nervous troubles brought on by sex perversion. Well-balanced sex force is what gives stability to the individual, to a people and to a government.

"It is all right to turn a new leaf on eating, drinking, smoking, and hundreds of other minor bad habits, but it would be worth more if the people knew enough to realize that they needed to turn a new leaf in controlling the master passion—the grand passion—the force that gives the world of life its potency.

"This impulse, governed and directed right, is capable of making life a success; abused, perverted and directed outside of natural lines, ends in all kinds of failures, both physical and mental.

"This much-neglected leaf in the book of life needs turning, needs more attention than all others; but it will be neglected until the whole people know more about it, and they will not know more until they wake up to the knowledge that they need information on this subject.

"When the people know as much as they should they will cease imprisoning such men as Moses Harman for attempting to educate the people on this subject.

"I believe Harman to be a sane man. I have read the writings of some authors on this subject whom I believe to be sex neurotics. What they had to say was the drivel of monomania and was more disgusting than informing. This is a subject that needs a healthy mind stimulated by a body unbroken by excess. It is well to turn this leaf, for with it will turn many others." M. H.

The Anthony Comstock legislation, as interpreted by the courts and the postal department, is entitled to no more respect than the acts of Parliament which our Revolutionary forefathers defied, or the pro-slavery statutes and decisions which the friends of liberty violated and apropos of which Wendell Phillips declared, "The chief use of good laws is to teach men to trample bad laws under their feet." We are as bound to break bad laws as we are to keep good laws. Whenever human law and divine law become irreconcilable, the human law, not the divine law, should be violated. "We ought to obey God rather than men." The leaders and saviors of men have often been law-breakers. Moses, Daniel, Peter, Huss, Luther, Tell, Kossuth, Bozzaris, George Washington and John Brown were law-breakers. Thank God for the brave men and women who break bad laws for conscience sake!—Doctor Jeremiah Justice, Mount Sterling, Illinois.

"The government that interferes with the progress of opinion subverts the essential order of the social state."—Wortman.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:

E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Six months .....50 cents Three months.....25 cents
One year .....$1.00 Single copies..... 5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

ANOTHER LETTER FROM THE ANGEL CITY.

How swiftly time flies in this land of sunshine and flowers! So many attractions, so many calls, both by day and by night, that it seems impossible to do half I want to do. Among other deferred duties is that of answering the many letters received since my arrival here a little more than two months ago. A list of letters sent by friends to be read at the meeting of protest held at Mammoth Hall, in this city, March 12, will be sent for publication in next LUCIFER, and perhaps a few of the letters themselves.

These letters were not read on the occasion for which they were written—crowded out by the many speeches that could not well be omitted.

Because of this omission, and also for the purpose of organizing a branch of the National Eugenic Society here in Los Angeles, it was decided to hold another meeting in the same building on Friday evening, March 22. Though not equal to the first in numbers present, this second meeting was even more successful in enthusiasm and in substantial work done. Dr. Ada Norman-Patterson presided and read the letters that should have been heard at the previous meeting; or, more correctly speaking, she read the most important parts of those letters, so numerous were they that there was not time to hear all that was said by all the writers, notwithstanding the fact that the speeches of the evening had been cut down to ten minutes each, to give time for the letters and for the temporary organization of the Los Angeles Eugenic Society.

Of the speeches of the evening the most noteworthy, perhaps, was that of Professor Edgar L. Larkin, of Lowe Observatory, a long letter from whose pen was published in LUCIFER 1087. As in the letter, so also in his address he gave a brief account of what he had learned, as a student of anthropology, during his seven years at the observatory, that would be of value to all who take interest in sexology, provided his notes and observations could be published. Professor Larkin was elected honorary president of the now forming Los Angeles Eugenic Society, with Dr. Ada H. Patterson as active president; Dr. Aylmar Harding, vice-president, and Bertha Carlson, secretary. About thirty names were enrolled of those who wish to be identified with this movement.

Of the speakers who made ten-minute talks on the evening of March 22 was Channing Severance, one of LUCIFER'S old-time friends and faithful helpers, whose name will be recalled by many readers as an able contributor to our columns and to the columns of many other free-thought journals. Another speaker of more than local fame was Dr. Alzamon Ira Lucas, who very generously offered to the Eugenic Club the use of Symphony Hall, which hall has been leased by him for a series of Wednesday night meetings. That is to say, Dr. Lucas takes so much interest in the work of the Eugenic Society that he is willing to postpone his own series of meetings concerning what he calls "the Limitless Life" in order to help the work of free thought, free speech and free press movement, which movement includes the work of the Los Angeles society for the study of eugenics, stirpiculture, race-culture, heredity and kindred subjects that have hitherto been neglected, tabooed and denied the right and privilege of discussion through the public press and upon the public platform.

Before I forget it, I ask to make a correction: In Professor Larkin's letter in LUCIFER 1087 it is stated that I made the set statement that I had been placed in a cell with a tuberculous patient at Joliet when there were empty cells in the building. The good professor's memory is evidently at fault. What I have often stated in reference to the treatment I received at Joliet is that I was put into a cell with a patient who seemed dying of tuberculosis, when there were several other cells on the same floor which had only one occupant, and that occupant an apparently well man, as though the design of the prison management was to kill me by inoculation with an incurable disease. I wish to do injustice to no man or set of men, and therefore desire that the exact truth be told in regard to the treatment I received while at the Illinois state prison.

M. HARMAN.

[The editor expected to send a continuation of this letter, but it has not reached us in time for this issue.]

THE PERSECUTION AND THE APPRECIATION.

A report of the reception to Moses Harman at Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, Jan. 1, 1907, is now ready for delivery. It is a booklet of sixty-four pages, containing speeches by Paul Tyner, Walter Henry MacPherson, Lucinda B. Chandler, Gertrude Breslau Hunt, Parker H. Sercombe, and Moses Harman; also letters from absent friends, newspaper reports, etc., and pictures of Lucinda B. Chandler, Kiichi Kaneko and Parker H. Sercombe. Two portraits of Mr. Harman are given; one, with grandson, taken in January, 1907, has never before been published. We hope this will be an effective document for wide distribution. Price, per dozen, $1.25; single copies, 20 cents.

We have sent out over 700 free copies of this pamphlet and expect to circulate many more in the same way. The expense of publication and circulation is quite heavy and we gladly accept cooperation in the work. Those who are interested are requested to send names of persons to whom they think copies should be sent. Inability to assist financially should not deter friends from sending such names to us.

The following named sums have been received: Joshua Smith, $1; R. N. Douglass, $1; W. W. Miller, 50c; J. B. Bosthwick, $1; J. B. Phinney, $1; John Ostrom, $1; Theodore Debs, $1; A Friend (Minn.), $1.25; J. W. Griggs, $2; Kiichi Kaneko, $1.25; Col. James Freeman, $1; Louis Roser, $1.75; L. D. Abbott, $1; S. O. Bisbop, $1.25; A Friend (Chicago), $1; Maud P. Thorndyke, $1.25; Susan Reichester, 50c; James Myers, $1; B. M., $5; Cornelia Boechlin, 50c; J. B. Phinney, $1.25; H. H. Cady, $2.

LOVE AND SOCIALISM.

Dear Gladys: I mentioned in my last letter to you that you made an unfair statement in your article published in LUCIFER 1085. I am certain that you would have changed it if Lillian Harman had sent your manuscript to me and I could have called your attention to it. I did not say that "exclusiveness is not meant to prevent couples from separating at will and finding other mates." What I said was, "On the other hand, exclusiveness does not mean unconditional marriage for life for all who marry. It means only that normal beings in the majority of cases, and that the overwhelming majority, adopt this principle and live according to it. This does not prevent abnormally mated couples from separating, and is not meant to prevent them from separating and finding a suitable mate. But I do not speak of exceptions when discussing a general subject. I speak of the rule."

There is a wide distinction between separation of will and separation under the compulsion of natural necessities. I assume that exclusiveness in marriage will be voluntary, because the majority will be naturally so constituted that they will of their own account stay united for life. But it would be unnatural and cruel in the extreme to expect that people should stay together when they find that they are not suitably mated. If they make such a mistake they must be free to rectify it. And the basis of my ideal is a society of economic equals. In other words, Socialism is the first requirement for the development of such a race as I have in mind. And the development of such a race, in my opinion, is as inevitable as the coming of Socialism itself.

You see, then, that there is no contradiction between my conception of free exclusive monogamy and the admission that people may separate. For if their natural state induces the majority to live a life of exclusive monogamy, it also implies that those who are not in such a state of natural equilibrium must be free to seek it. You distorted my meaning.

You ask: "Will you suppress life or express it?" By this question you show once more that you distort my conception of "free" exclusiveness into a system of compulsion. You claim that "free love and free exclusive monogamy are inconsistent terms. You cannot have monogamy that is not exclusive or love that is not free." But you do not supply any proofs for your assertion. You still confound my conception of free exclusive monogamy with the ordinary bourgeois form of monogamic serfdom, in which the man is the master. I hold, on the contrary, that freedom of choice and exclusive monogamy are very well compatible, and that such an ideal may be realized, even if only under exceptional conditions, even under the present capitalist system, under which it is almost impossible to adhere consistently to this ideal.

I do understand, very well, that there are men and women whose physical and mental make-up compels them to have more than one mate. But I also realize that such a varietist make-up is overwhelmingly due to the dissipating tendencies of the historical development through which mankind has passed. To the extent that these tendencies disappear, their results in the physical and mental make-up of men and women must also disappear. Mental education is a great help in this direction. To this end I give expression to the opinion that in order to "express life" it is not necessary to mate physically with more than one, nor does one who believes in and practices free exclusive monogamy necessarily "suppress life." Here again you overlook the fact that in my conception people will not practice exclusiveness unless it "expresses" their real nature. On the other hand, back of your objection lurks the idea that one man alone cannot satisfy all the manifold qualities of your rich nature. It may be true that one man or one woman does not ideally match every one of the qualities of another. But I do not see that it is necessary to mate physically with every one who may satisfy some particular phase of my being. It seems to me rather that the sensible thing to do is to mate with one who satisfies the essential qualities of my nature, and to be satisfied with the social intercourse of others who match some of my minor qualities better than my chosen mate.

Again I repeat that I never condemn those who find happiness in varietism. I am liberal enough to grant to others the freedom of living the life which is best, or is supposed to be best, for their physical and mental development. I do this all the more, as the present economic system prevents the majority from living the life of their natural inclinations and even compels most of us to live a life which runs contrary to our ideals in marriage, whether this be varietism or exclusiveness. But this does not prevent me from stating clearly what is a historical tendency, what is merely an individual and one-sided opinion, and what is a social ideal into which the majority must grow naturally through social evolution. Nor does it prevent me from realizing the disastrous effects of varietism, such as has been practiced in the past and is now universally practiced under the capitalist system. To point out these facts as they are, and are admitted to be by all unbiased students, is not to condemn them.

Mere condemning or praising does not convince. I did not reply to you, in my former article, in a spirit of condemnation or self-praise, nor did I reply for the sake of arguing the mere sex question. What prompted my reply was rather the ardent desire to call the attention of sincere students to certain very essential facts, which are very material in this discussion, and without which a discussion of the sex question is practically as useless as the discussion of female equality is among bourgeois suffragists. These facts are sadly neglected in LUCIFER. It is particularly the economic cause of female bondage which is almost never brought out in the editorial and contributed articles of LUCIFER. To speak of "free" love without calling attention to the fundamental economic cause which binds women and stands in the way of "free" love, is to dis-cuss Hamlet with Hamlet left out. So long as LUCIFER continues to dwell upon purely sexual problems, without a clear emphasis upon the main factor in these problems, the general impression made by it upon the majority of new readers will be that of a purely individualistic champion of varietist practices. Particularly is this impression produced by the editorial remarks of Mrs. Lillian Harman and the contributed articles of such regular patrons of the paper as R. B. Kerr, Lois Waisbrooker and others. The articles of these contributors are continually published without any editorial comment, and have evidently the sanction of the editorial staff of the paper. On the other hand, the editorial comment of Mrs. Harman on my last article is aimed wholly against the purely sexual aspects of my position. And this position is criticised wholly from the individual point of view of Mrs. Harman. But I miss any sign of appreciation for the social forces which I have mentioned, and which shape the bodies and minds, together with the sex nature, of men and women. And I also miss a social and historical method and standard by which all these questions are judged. Nowhere is there any sign of any appreciation for the peculiar social conditions under which this or that ideal may be the natural expression of the qualities of the majority. Everywhere throughout the paper we are offered only the individual opinions of a few individuals, who dwell upon their own peculiar experiences and tendencies and hold their own ideals up as though they were practicable for the vast majority at any period and under any form of society. The reader comes to the paper for information. He may have tried monogamy or varietism, and, not having found satisfaction, turns to LUCIFER for information, in order to find the reasons for his failure. But he finds in the paper nothing but the individual experiences of persons who talk as though they impersonated all of mankind, and as though their particular tendency were a remedy for the evils from which large masses are suffering. The reader does not find any social or historical facts back of these articles. Under these circumstances he cannot find any fundamental information.

My main object in replying to you, then, was to call attention to the economic and social facts which enter into this question. But neither you nor Mrs. Harman have taken any notice of this main point of my article. Both of you direct your objections to the mere sexual aspect, and do it from a purely personal point of view.

But aside from this main object of my article, neither of you has appreciated one very essential point of the purely sexual question. This is the fact that there is not only a sexual development, but also a mental evolution. And it is a fact, recognized by all great scientists, that there is a growing concentration of mental powers and an increasing ability to control physical desires by mental discipline. It is quite evident that R. B. Kerr, and others who share his views, always emphasize the physical portion of sex, but fail to appreciate the vital influence which a preponderance of mental affinities may exert over mere sex. In other words, they do not seem to know anything of a love whose strongest element is mental understanding and an increasing mutual elevation by mental cooperation. In such a love the sex plays a greater rôle in mental than in physical interchange. The physical sex, while naturally essential for complete satisfaction, is then under the control of the mental activity. This overwhelmingly mental love does not exclude friendship with others, but it seeks no physical satisfaction with others, because sex is here subordinate. It rather seeks to give expression to that great sympathy for all who are in need of comfort and friendly interest, a need which is so strong among those who are misunderstood, and which is better satisfied by social intercourse between people of different sexes than people of the same sex. This mental satisfaction is often far more important for the growth and advancement of individuals than physical mating with many. But neither you nor Mrs. Harman, and others who write in the same vein, make any clear distinction between this universal social love and individual sex love. At times you speak of the one as though it were the other. And the result is that one reads here and there passages which seem to imply that every individual impulse, whether it be dictated by individual sex love or by social love, must be accompanied by physical sex manifestation.

This contradictory and confusing method of reasoning shows itself in all your articles. To mention only one more illustration, you say in your last article that "marriage throughout the years is beautiful," but in the same breath you say, "Kill out sympathy, . . . sensitiveness, . . . etc., . . . and there will be left good material for a lifelong course of exclusiveness." In this way you come to the ridiculous conclusion that "the exclusive wife of years is almost invariably an intellectual imitation of her husband." The fact is that exclusive monogamy makes both husband and wife close copies of one another. To say, as you do, that the wife is almost invariably the copy would imply that women are naturally inferior mentally to men, a position which you would be the last to admit.

No, you would not admit that women are mentally inferior to men. On the contrary, you pride yourself on your individuality. You even carry this so far as to admit frankly that your ideal of free love is not for the great mass, the "ignorant, submerged, immature." You claim for yourself and your ideal an exceptional position. And you say that neither your ideal nor mine is for those. Here is the point where I strongly differ with you. If there are any starving hearts, of which you spoke in your first article, they are certainly among those weaker members, as you call them. They are starving for food, for knowledge, for love, for everything that makes life worth living to human beings. If it were a question of offering any ideals, they are the people to whom I should go first of all, for they are most in need of them. You strong and exceptional natures are able to take care of yourselves, and in any event you would go your own way, for you are "the wise, the generous, the evolved." But I have no ideals to offer. I find only facts to study and state. I read what I see in the whole social life, and I follow the course of things among just that class whom you would least consider, as you say. And because I do, I pay more attention to the economic and social causes which make people "ignorant, submerged and immature" than to the sex question as such. For I know that, when these social and economic questions are settled right, then there will be no "ignorant, submerged, immature," and that then the sex question can be discussed and settled as it is now being settled by the "wise, the generous, the evolved." Fraternally,

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 24, 1907. HELEN UNTERMANN.

In acknowledging receipt of the foregoing letter I remarked to Mrs. Untermann that her criticism of LUCIFER for its alleged ignoring of the economic question from the Socialistic standpoint applied, inversely, in a much greater degree to the political Socialist papers, for they, though much larger, absolutely ignore the sex question. I said that LUCIFER, though so small, has published many articles on Socialism. Also that we do not assume that our readers depend on LUCIFER alone for their literature or their ideas. Mrs. Untermann replied in the following letter:

"ORLANDO, FLA., March 14, 1907.—My Dear Mrs. Harman: I do not want you to think that I wish to misrepresent LUCIFER by my criticism of it. I fully appreciate your and your father's efforts to bring light and understanding in sex matters to others. But I realize that your strength and energy are largely wasted and scattered without apparent results, so long as you overlook the fact that mere advocacy of emancipation from sex bondage, without pointing out the way in which alone this emancipation can be accomplished, must necessarily be futile.

"The smallness of LUCIFER should not prevent you from giving its readers full light on this question. It does not take any more space to do so than you are now occupying. The sexual problem is inseparable from the economic problem. Both must be discussed in the same breath. And of the two, the economic problem is the more fundamental.

"By asking me whether my criticism of the method of LUCIFER does not apply in the opposite sense to the Socialist press, you show plainly that you overlook the relation of secondary to primary facts. The Socialist press discusses the main problem, and when this problem will be settled the sex problem will be settled with it. On the other hand, you cannot settle the sex problem at all, so long as the economic problem is not solved. All you can accomplish by discussing the mere sex problem, without taking notice of the economic problems on which it rests and of which it is but a secondary expression, is to come to some sort of a temporary makeshift, but not to any fundamental solution. For this reason the Socialist press has no particular cause to pay any great amount of attention to the sex problem. But a paper like yours, which makes a specialty of the sex problem, is missing its best argument when it neglects to point out the economic causes of the present sex evils and the way out of them through a solution of the fundamental economic problems.

"Your paper loses the best of its value if you neglect this fundamental part of your argument. The Socialist press, on the other hand, by dwelling particularly on the fundamental problem of economics, can well afford to make light of the sex problem without losing its particular usefulness.

"Now, my dear Mrs. Harman, I wish you would read my letter in a calm hour, if possible, and realize that I have not the slightest ill-feeling against you or your paper. But I have for many years diligently searched for the truth, in order to learn how to accomplish in the best way the emancipation of women from sexual and economic bondage. This searching was very painful and involved much physical and mental suffering. But when at last I acquired the understanding and saw the truth, it became my ardent desire to bring it to others, in order that they might not be compelled to go over the same thorny path which I had traveled. And I hoped to bring happiness through it to others, just as I know it has made me happy.

"I have often thought of publishing a paper of my own on the relations between sex and economic problems, in which both sides should receive due recognition. But I always prefer to connect with coöperators who already exist in the field, rather than to run in competition against them. And so long as I can count on getting a free forum in LUCIFER I would rather support your paper than start one of my own. Your father has already suffered so much for his teaching. I respect him very highly for his courage.

"I hope that in due time you will realize the full implications of the question of 'free love,' and that then you will not fail to emphasize that there can be no truly free love until women are economically free. When you do so, we shall be able to shake hands and call one another truly 'comrades.' Sincerely,

"HELEN UNTERMANN."

Dear Mrs. Untermann: I wonder what there was in my note that gave you the impression that I had read your letter in an un-"calm hour." I do not find expressions of differences of opinion at all exciting. Do you? I can appreciate the situation of the man who couldn't say anything against either heaven or hell, because he had friends in both places! I have so many friends of so many widely varying views that if I were as susceptible as you seem to think, I would have died of nervous prostration long ago.

I think that the word "comrade" is a much-overworked word, and personally rarely use it now, though I did "when I was young;" also can exist quite comfortably without being so addressed. However, I can assure you that for many years I have realized that no individual can be really free in the expression of love or in anything else while an economic slave. And this fact is occasionally mentioned in LUCIFER, also. It does not necessarily follow, however, that Socialism will eliminate economic slavery. Perhaps so. But I'm a Missourian. Let those who believe it will, work for it, and show us. All Socialists do not agree in regard to what will come "after Socialism." For instance, Mr. R. B. Kerr is a very earnest and enthusiastic Socialist, has studied the question deeply, and yet does not agree with you at all in your reading of the past nor in your predictions for the future. And if the pet scheme of Mr. Kerr and of many other Socialists—State recompense of motherhood—will involve, as it seems to me it must, State control of motherhood, and ownership of children, then I'm "ag'in'" it, and will rebel against the Socialistic State as emphatically as against the capitalistic State. George Macdonald says in Liberty: "Past and present events which cast their shadows behind prepare us for the day when public ownership of the embryonic will loom as a campaign issue, and when with the first sign of maternity the mother will pass under government supervision, and the child in the full sense of the word be delivered to the State."

I am reminded of the thoughts which came to me when, as a little child, I heard my elders talking of the horrors of slavery. I was born a few years after the close of the war, and the topic was still a vital one in the earliest years of my memory. When I heard of the sufferings of the slaves I thought, "But why did they marry and have babies come? Why didn't they stop eating, and die!" That seemed a natural and practical escape from slavery, and when I heard that the Indian would die rather than work for a master, I respected him—and later I learned that the Indian is not regarded as contemptuously as the negro and for the reason that he refused to be a slave. And if I had to choose between enslavement to one man, or to a State, or death, I would choose the latter alternative.

Certainly, the "smallness" of LUCIFER doesn't prevent our giving "full light" on any question—if all that is necessary is a "Thus say I." But if the assertion that Socialism settles all things is sufficient, then LUCIFER is not needed. There are plenty of Socialist papers asserting that.

I do not know how long you have read LUCIFER. It has been sent to you for about six months. I have been acquainted with LUCIFER for more than twenty years, and I do not agree with you that our work is "wasted and scattered without apparent results." Results quite apparent to me well repay me for all that I have done. And as I previously remarked, LUCIFER has not ignored the economic question, and has not even ignored Socialism. (Probably half the subscribers of LUCIFER are Socialists, by the way.)

You assume that contributions necessarily have "editorial sanction" because they are published without "editorial comment." It seems to me that even six months' reading of the paper should have been sufficient to prevent any such impression. We assume that our readers have enough intelligence to do their own thinking, and do not consider it necessary to point out all the points of disagreement. The editor was imprisoned for the publication of an article criticising his work and opinions.

Mrs. Waisbrooker does not advocate variety. I have published articles by her that contained many statements which I do not indorse. Mr. Kerr and I have disagreed in regard to many points; but that does not detract, in my opinion, from the interest and value of his communications. He gives us food for thought. Our failure to arrive at the same conclusion is nonessential. As to myself, I have never said in LUCIFER that I am a varietist nor a monogamist. I am neither "ist," either in theory or in practice. And when you say that you find passages in my writing which "imply that every individual impulse, whether it be dictated by individual sex love or by social love, must be accompanied by physical sex manifestation," you find something which is nonexistent. I have never either written, said or thought anything of the kind. My objection to the conventional marriage ideal is that it is as a broken reed on which deluded victims lean. The marriage license gives a false sense of security; "impulses" are yielded to, the helpless little ones come—the "starving hearts" and "starving stomachs" of the creatures of unrestrained impulse in conventional "monogamic" marriage.

You are mistaken in assuming that I am unaware of the existence and the importance of mental and emotional attraction and satisfaction, and of the possibility of control of physical desire by mental discipline. But these are equally desirable whether one loves one or more than one. Mental and emotional attractions may be enjoyed with or without physical relations, and self-control is desirable at all times and under all circumstances. But if one believes that it is absolutely wrong to love more than one, then all expressions of interest or affection should be carefully guarded.

If you want to publish a paper you should not refrain from doing so because of fear of "competition." I believe that all advanced-thought publications are really coöperators, and the more there are the better for each.

Personally, I wish I could feel that LUCIFER is an unnecessary publication—or at least that my work on it is superfluous. I like the work, but I like home work better. I succeeded in convincing myself, about three years ago, that I was not needed in this work, and let go, and had a few months of uninterrupted domesticity, but then "our friend the enemy" took a hand and attempted to suppress LUCIFER, so I had to get into the harness again. And now goodness knows when I shall be able to let go. Not till I die of old age, I suppose. Maybe I don't accomplish much, but I feel better satisfied with myself when I do what I can. But every time I buy a ready-made garment for the baby or buy a loaf of baker's bread for the family, I anathematize the necessity!

This is not intended to be a complete reply to your letter, but only a few thoughts which occurred to me as I read it. I will publish an article by Mr. Kerr which has been here about two months awaiting insertion. I think your letter and his are of special interest, giving as they do the widely different views of enthusiastic Socialists. And if Socialism is to "settle" the sex question, I wonder in which way will it be settled? Yours cordially,

LILLIAN HARMAN.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

* * *

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

To the Editor: Money is a medium of exchange. Gold money for use in America is less useful than paper money. Gold money for use is of imaginary value. Lead in its proper place and for use, pound for pound, is of more value and of more use than gold. Little gold is of any use or value only in imagination. Paper money to greater value can be conveniently carried, provided a person has the money to carry, from place to place. Gold money melted can be restored to money shapes. By heat lead and gold melt and are changed into lumps. Lead pipe melted becomes the value of lead per pound, the same with coined gold, gold rings, etc.—A. F. Hill, 13 Isabella street, Boston, Mass.

Dear Mr. Harman: Enclosed please find amount for the following-named books: "Parental Rights and Economic Wrongs"; "The Old God and the New Humanity"; "Marriage in Free Society"; "The Strike of a Sex"; "Up-to-date Fables." I have received a number of copies of LUCIFER, which some one has kindly sent me. I read and enjoy each copy. I am in sympathy with LUCIFER and its followers. I know of your unjust imprisonment. You, like the Socialists and all other brave and unselfish reformers who have ever raised their voices against a popular wrong, have been persecuted by the ignorant and prejudiced; but your light will shine. Every knock is a boost. I shall subscribe for LUCIFER before long. I contribute nearly all my spare money to the cause of Socialism. You know of our late trouble in the imprisonment of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone. I have long wished to help your cause and shall whenever I can. Accept my hearty congratulation for your release from prison. May you prosper and your cause flourish.—Lizzie E. S., Uvalde, Texas.

Mr. Moses Harman: Inclosed you will find 40 cents in stamps for one copy each of "Up-to-date Fables," by R. B. Kerr, and "Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses," by E. C. Walker. Also, if you have a catalogue of the publications you have on the sex and free speech problems, I wish you would send me a copy. I have already purchased some books which I read of in LUCIFER'S columns, but doubtless you have many more. Also, if you can secure me a copy of Grant Allen's "Woman Who Did," I shall be grateful. I have found it impossible to secure a copy. Perhaps some of your readers may have a copy they would loan to me. Also wish you would tell me when my subscription to LUCIFER expires, so I may renew at an early date. I enjoy reading it and would not miss a single number.

May your present rest enable you to store well from nature so that you may for years to come help the great work you are doing for the sex,—I do not say my sex alone, for what injures one injures the other. Yours for freedom and health.—Maude Wooden Kitchell, New York.

Mr. Moses Harman: Inclosed find 25 cents, for which please send me "The Old God and the New Humanity," by Winwood Reade, and "Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses," by E. C. Walker. I saw those books advertised in LUCIFER of March 14, the copy of which was handed me, I not being a subscriber to it, and am very likely ever to be, either, for I do not agree with your ideas on the subject of marriage, and variety of loves, and children by any man whom a woman wants for the fathers of her children. Your ideas are too much on the line of animal propagation, and, of course, that cannot possibly be conducive to morality and to the best interests of women and their children, and that is why I do not agree with you. However, I would not if I had the power put a stop to your disseminating your ideas or of publishing them, or confine you in prison; but I believe that those who fall victims to your ideas should be incarcerated in lunatic asylums, for only weak-minded persons could accept your ideas of "variety" or "free" loves, as I understand your ideas by what I have read in a few copies of your publication which were handed me. Of course, you may, as some orthodox people now claim I am for having left the church of my fathers, believe that I am myself weak-minded, etc., for expressing myself as I have on your ideas advocated in your publication. But I believe in striking straight out from the shoulder at anything that appears to me to be contrary to common sense and to the best interests of morality and virtue and manly responsibilities to women and helpless children.—John Hwaley, Atchison, Kan.

To the Editor: My friend, Miss Israel, at twenty was hale and hearty, beautiful and strong, but poor and an ardent advocate of Free Love. She worked in a printing office, holding a case on an evening paper, and earned her $15 per week. One day it fell to her lot to set up an ad. announcing for the following Thursday evening a charity concert by home talent. She wanted to go so she could hear the singing and playing of some of her friends, and she half-way hoped that some young man among her acquaintances would ask her to accompany him. But on account of her pronounced views on the sex question she was fully aware how slender her chances were for having congenial company for that particular evening. If it had been the custom of the country to allow young ladies to invite young men to accompany them to places of amusement she surely would have asked one and cheerfully paid his way, simply because she did not like the idea of reserving a seat where she might be surrounded by entire strangers. But the evening for the entertainment arrived without an escort showing up, so she went alone.

After the concert was over and as she was leaving the hall a young man whom she had casually met on previous occasions stepped up to her rather briskly and asked the privilege of seeing her home. In her surprise she told him that, inasmuch as she had come alone she could also return alone; that she had no fear of being harmed, although she lived well out in the suburbs. He insisted that it would afford him great pleasure to be in her company and to assure himself that she was safely at home. To which she replied that if it afforded him any pleasure she preferred not to rob him of it, and permitted him to accompany her. Having arrived at the young lady's home, she walked through the gate, closed it behind her, turned and faced the young man, who had tried to follow her in. Not wishing to appear harsh or severe, she conversed for a little while longer, but soon suggested that it was time for her to turn in, as she was in the habit of rising early to assist in the preparation of breakfast and be at the office by 8 o'clock. Whereupon her escort wanted to know why he might not accompany her. She simply asked him: "What for?" Which he answered by asking: "Aren't you a Free Lover?" The reply was: "I am; but what of that?" His last question as well as last remark was: "Well! don't you practice what you preach?" Now was her opportunity to squelch the young man, and she did it by saying: "I surely do, but I don't love you. Good-night."

Here is a fine example of what a thoroughly emancipated woman can do with a man fully her equal in physical as well as mental powers. Instead of considering herself insulted and running away, as 99 out of every 100 would, they should stay and argue it out, and ever thereafter meet the vanquished individual with a smile.—C. H. W., Ouray, Colo.

We ought to regard books as we do sweetmeats, not wholly to aim at the pleasantest, but chiefly to respect the wholesomest; not forbidding either, but approving the latter most.—Plutarch.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE FREE SPEECH LEAGUE
invites correspondence, coöperation, and membership of all who claim rights, and dare maintain them.

Join us. Help us. Get our list of books. Read them—pass them on. Liberty tracts by Ingersoll, Wakeman, Walker, Pentecost, Darrow, Post and Schroeder. Read "Our Vanishing Liberty of Press" (5c) and "Do You Want Free Speech?" (10c) and so learn
WHY YOU SHOULD ACT WITH US.
FREE SPEECH LEAGUE, 120 Lexington avenue, New York.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

Parental Rights and Economic Wrongs.
BY VIRGINIA M. BUTTERFIELD.

The purpose of this book is to discuss the ethics of optional motherhood as the result of optional conception. It is meant to show both the short-sightedness and injustice of the policy by which any effort to control conception, in the interest of purposeful and responsible parenthood, race-improvement, and child-happiness, is classed with criminal abortion.

Motherhood is at present compulsory, since all effort to control conception is forbidden, and even all discussion of the possibility or righteousness of so doing is regarded as immoral. This is not only injurious to the race, working evil and unhappiness in a multiplicity of ways to every man, woman and child in the world, but is totally unnecessary as well.

Humanity has been so long accustomed to deny its own right of volition in the matter of parenthood, and also to consider sinful even the desire to exercise such right, that no radical improvement in conditions can take place until men and women recognize the legitimacy and morality of purposeful parenthood.—Author's Preface.

Bound in gray linen. 96 pages. Price, 50 cents.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.
BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.
BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.
A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.
FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.
BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses.
BY E. C. WALKER.

Contents—Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Conformity of Hate-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fulfilling, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Variefolds; The New Woman: What is She? What Will She Be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections Upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love and Life." Price 15c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25c each.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,
THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61, BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,
DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1089

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number at once.

An Essay on the Duty of Civil Disobedience.
BY HENRY D. THOREAU.

A reprint of this classic essay on the supremacy of the individual conscience. Antique paper; artistic covers, dark green on olivine. 10c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Natural Rights.
BY M. KUHN.

A little book so small that it is full—so full that it is big. "Natural Rights" should be read by every man and woman, young or old, married or single, capable of thinking. It throws a limelight on many things of intense interest. Just from the press. Small edition. Autograph copies, consecutively numbered, bound in paper, postpaid, 10c, silver or stamps. Order now. Address M. KUHN, North St. Paul, Minn.

Are You Interested
in the Independence of Women? Then send for Albert Chavannes' "Lizzie Melton," the self-reliant girl who, though fallen in the eyes of the world, won the esteem of the community by her dignity, courage and perseverance in well-doing. 15c a copy; two books for 25c. Send for catalogue to MRS. C. CHAVANNES, 308 Fourth avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.

Mother Earth.

Monthly Magazine devoted to Social Science and Literature. Published at 210 East Thirteenth street, New York City. Emma Goldman, publisher. Price, $1 per year; 10c per copy.

MOTHER EARTH'S PAMPHLETS.

The Masters of Life. By Maxim Gorky. Only translation of the original. Price, 10c.

The Criminal Anarchy Law an Suppressing the Advocacy of Crime. By Theodore Schroeder. Price, 5c. 90

The Occidental Mystic and Western Spiritualist.

A 36-page monthly, devoted to the consideration of spiritualism and the occult sciences.

Clean, bright and filled from cover to cover with original matter from able contributors. Issued on the 1st of each month. $1 a year; single copy, 10c.

ARTHUR S. HOWE, Editor and Publisher,
142 S. Broadway, Room 107, Los Angeles, Cal.

Correspondence Club.

Open to those who desire to improve, and to discuss subjects of interest with kindred minds. Editor of this paper says the secretary is worthy of confidence. For particulars, enclose stamp to C. A. KIRK, Sec., Box 753, Mitchell, S. D.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to rectify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in grey and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00
POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,
For the Supermen and Supermenes and The New Civilization.
2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, APRIL 25, E. M. 307 [C. E. 1907]. WHOLE NO. 1090

MOSES HARMAN.
By James Armstrong.

When Moses Harman was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for the crime of giving free expression to his noblest thought, he told the court and jury that he not only did not hate them, but did not even blame them. I was thinking of this when the following lines were written.

He is not great who hates his fellow-men,
For greatness walks abroad where all may see
Its beauteous form and glory in the strength
Delighting in itself for others' good;
Whilst hate—the envenom'd fang of ignorance,
Still going on its belly in the dust,
Must strike the best it can in self-defense.
And like the snake whose body hides itself
In various line of things 'mongst which it lives,
Hate hides its hideous head in prejudice,
And custom sheathes its deadly treachery.
The man who hates his fellow-men is near
The snake, as he who pities them is near
The gods. For love distinguishes the great
From little men, as speech ourselves from brutes.
The race that hates a race is weak;
For hate is fear, and what do giants fear?
What fears a giant race in other men,
Unless, indeed, it is a giant, too?
And if it is, what shall such fear avail?
What fears a giant soul before the throne
Of Lies, where Murder, rob'd and crown'd, is king?
What fear is his, unless the fear to be Afraid—to let his soul destroy itself?
The virtues of the great of soul are these:
Courage and love—courage to meet all odds,
And love to overcome all prejudice.
Foul, selfish hate we share with every brute.
Courage and love—with them alone we may Make good the universal human boast
That man himself is nobler than the beast!

SEX PROBLEMS NOT SOLVED BY ECONICS.
By Gideon Dietrich.

In LUCIFER No. 1089 Helen Untermann emphasizes the conventional statement that the problems of sex can only be solved through the solution of economic problems. Such statements are repeated so often that it appears strange that those who make them do not stop to consider what elementary relation, if any, the phenomenon of sex has to the normal circulation of our economic social blood.

Economic problems are factors of a social organization, and sex is an expression of one of the fundamental principles of life, so that the two have no more primary relation to each other than a lonely robin has to the coming of spring.

It is now a well established scientific fact that the social units as well as all living beings are propagated through a process of cell-division; and that cell-division is merely an expression of egrowth and matureness of the parent. Propagation, therefore, is a process of cell-division.

It is also a scientific fact that, through the metabolic tendency of one being to become better nourished than another being, all living units constantly tend to become divided into the well-nourished anabolic female class and the less-nourished katabolic male class, and this causes the phenomenon of sex. With their respective sex maturity, unicelled beings—such as egg and sperm units—gradually reach a point in their living process where their life must end in death, if something does not occur to restore the process back to a growing equilibrium. Thus sex maturity carries the living organisms toward a point of death by two opposite paths: one by an overfed anabolic stagnation, and the other by a katabolic exhaustion; and this fact causes a nutritive, or metabolic, attraction between the two. The fertilizing union resulting from such attraction can therefore only restore a growing equilibrium within the new stem unit, and thus fertilization is only a life-saving act.

In "The Dynamics of Living Matter," published by the Columbia University Press, Professor Loeb, the author, has clearly demonstrated that fertilization has only a catalytic chemical effect upon a living process, and that it is therefore only a life-saving act and not a life-creating act. He shows how the fertilization of sea-urchins' eggs may easily be accomplished through the catalytic effect of a special salt solution in which they are placed. Both the male and female germ units of other species have also been restored to a growing equilibrium through an artificial process. A chemical catalyzer acts from a distance or through its mere presence without effecting a direct chemical union with the substance acted upon. Thus fertilization may be accomplished, and is in fact the normal process in a large number of the lower species, by the mere contact association of one living unit with another unit without a complete or even partial assimilation of the two into one.

Now, from the fact that propagation is merely an expression of cell-division, and from the further fact that fertilization is only a life-saving act and not a life-creating or reproducing act through the union of so-called "sex elements," it is clearly evident that contact fertilizing association (expressed only in sexed germ units and the higher aquatic and land animals) is purely the result of an impulse within the individual unit to regain a fertilized life, and is not caused by a reproductive impulse to perpetuate a species. All of the recently discovered facts of biology clearly demonstrate that the entire phenomenon of sex, including the impulse and act of fertilization, the supplying of embryo food within the egg and during gestation, and the gradually developed impulse of contact association among higher animals, has been caused by the anabolic and katabolic tendencies of the living process, and so these sex expressions are only secondary factors of propagation or reproduction.

Thus the entire factors of the sex problems may be resolved into this question: What constitutes a normal fertilizing association and how can the social units obtain the highest degree of fertilization? Or to state it in a different form: Sex being an expression of metabolism, and not of the propagating process, the entire problem of sex is one of how to maintain a fertilized metabolic life.

Economic problems are only factors of a social organization and can therefore have no elementary relation with a proper or improper fertilized life of the units composing that organization. Even if the social blood of dollars and cents, bread and butter and proper raiment would flow freely and equally through the whole social body the question of a normal, healthful fertilized life would still be unsolved. Those modern sociologists who dogmatically advocate economy as a specific "cure-all" should remember that bread and butter problems are not all the problems of life; that the phenomenon of sex is an expression of a basic principle in life; that fertilization revives, restores, saves life and seeks to maintain a normal healthful metabolic equilibrium within every social unit; and that only as a high degree of fertilized life is maintained in these units will the offspring propagated by cell-division possess that same high degree of fertilization.

Even if we reach our highest ideal in a social organization, LUCIFER and those who are working in the interest of sex reform will still have a great task before them in teaching humanity how to obtain and maintain a high degree of fertilization.

ANN MEDITATES.

I never saw a newspaper displaying a daily cartoon and carrying a daily editorial to complain that school teachers had too little pay, or women too little influence on the school board.

"He who centers on love is a candidate for the monkey-house," says Brother Elbert, of East Aurora, which is in New York. Loud amens from the orthodox corner. Alack, had he put the pronoun in the feminine what loud wails should we not have heard about "denatured," "unsexed" and "monstrous" women!

A dozen men and women pushed and knocked one another about in an effort to get in and out of one door at the Fair store. When a man came along and opened the other side of the door they heaved great sighs of relief and fell right in behind him. Why did 4,000 human beings use to sit open-mouthed in the Auditorium to hear John Alexander Dowie announce he was Elijah III!?

"Take ye no thought for the body, therefore, what ye shall eat and what ye shall wear." And then think of how those good Christians looked on Easter Sunday morning.

A group of students listening to a philosopher commands our respect; but when we find men claiming that their particular creed holds all the wisdom of the ages, and then behold them going about their daily work without paying the least attention to the principles this creed contains; and when we further see that they revile all those who do not chance to be of a mind of them, and that they honestly believe the sun never shone and the human heart never beat kindly before they got around to tell us how to live—why, how can the most charitable of us help despising them for a set of ignorant and foolish bigots? "For if your faith be in vain, then are you the most wretched of all men."

A farmer and his son were wrestling that they might pry a big rock out of a wheat field. "Destructive criticism," yelled a man on the fence; "what will you put in its place?" But I suppose something grew there when the stone was toted off.

"The rock of our salvation"—very hard, very much in the way, affording no foothold either for great trees or for fragrant flowers. If you sit long enough behind it, where the great jolly sun cannot look at you, perhaps you can extract a notebook from your pocket and tell us something new and comforting next Sunday morning about hell.

"Ye are the salt of the earth." Salt, excellent for embalming purposes, is good for living men only in the smallest doses. Rub it into a wound and you have a fine test for stoicism; put it on the flowers of life and you have killed them; empty it into the clearest stream and the thirstiest of travelers will pass by.

A priest is a shepherd and he has a shepherd's crook. When he perceives any threatening symptoms that the sheep may get through the fence into a better pasture, where peradventure they may not be accessible for fleecing, out comes the crook, and under penalty of everlasting hell he hauls them back again.

When there was a prospect of fighting at the front Jacob stayed behind and wrestled with an angel. Dear, dear, how like a Jacob is the church!

If man is such a barbarian that he is restrained from murder and pillage only by the feeling that his conduct will displease his Father, whom he loves, then Christianity is a good system. Better for civilized folk seems to me the stoic school of philosophy, which assigns reasons instead of exacting blind obedience, utters no threats of hell-fire, and has never made any topographical surveys of "mansions in the sky."

Once I saw a woman intoxicated in a street car. She had just come out of the Bismarck Garden, and she waved a wine glass in either hand, loudly ejaculating, "Lieber Gott, why did I take them mixed, and who will care for mother now!" The sight was not exactly edifying, as it were; but just behind the disorderly one I saw a woman standing in the aisle, with vulgar curiosity, leering malice, and joy in the misfortune of another writ so plainly on her face that I forgot my disgust at the one spectacle in unspeakable displeasure at the other.

And now cometh the Rev. William Quayle and allows that Goethe was a man with sensibilities like leather, and a deadened soul. Goethe, my dear William (not you not?), had a mind so keen and marvelously complex that it intuitively grasped great facts which science had not demonstrated in his time, and some of which have not yet percolated into the philosophy of the clerical. "All my life," said he of Weimar, "I have meant honestly toward myself and others, and in all my earthly actions have looked to the highest. Let us remain untroubled about the future." He died, as he had lived, this great world-thinker, seeking for more light. He's dead, William; furthermore, were he alive today he would not be sitting in the congregation of the righteous in your church; hence, on with the coals, let hell be unconfined! But by any strange coincidence should Charon in the ultimate hereafter chance to paddle you across the Styx in the same boat with this "dead soul," take along some ballast, reverend sir,—putting it, of course, in whichever particular end of the boat it happens to come in handy!

Continueth Brother Quayle, regarding Herbert Spencer, "His calm assurance of surprising superiority, his hopeless unconsciousness of divine things, puts me at zero in a second." Quite so, brother; yea verily, Ann will agree with you that you have gotten into the right place for once, but why proceed in the next sentence to say, "Their [Goethe's and Spencer's] egotism was colossal enough for anything"? Herbert Spencer and Goethe were men who "knew not and knew that they knew not," and thus, according to Pascal, they had attained the highest point of human reasoning. Beloved, in the matter of egotism, is there ever a sensation as of a beam troubling your right eye?

Only little men will band themselves together in subscription to a creed of fixed ideas formulated by dead men, according to which creed they pass judgment on the actions of other men; such an association of men can never grasp a great new thought, and as they form a part of the dead mass through which all progress makes its way by slow and painful toil.

Senator Beveridge informs the readers of the Saturday Evening Post that the Christian Bible contains the story of the development of "the only divine religion known to man!" Behold what mental giants are those who make our laws. Oh, the unspeakable blasphemy of the gentleman from South Carolina, who says to hell with some of the productions of the gifted ones!

The Rev. Alexander Allen, who writes paradoxes about "freedom in the churches," does not deny the "miracle" of the virgin birth. Believes he also in the story about Danaë, which methinks is better suited to our own times? What is his opinion about the miraculous birth of Minerva, who sprung full-armed from the brain of Jove? The suffragists give this latter tale odds of no less than ten to one over the rib story, backing their preference by the unorthodox assertion of the scientist that woman was made first. What, pray, is the voice of the clergy in the matter?

In 1892 the Times spoke thus of Mr. James Herne's play, "Margaret Fleming," which was then given in Chicago for the first time: "The author seems never to suspect that its argument goes necessarily on the theory that the restrictions and limitations of marriage as we know it rest, in the last resort, on the old idea of ownership of the wife by the husband, with the power of repudiation, even of life or death. Is Mr. Herne quite aware of the logical consequences of this theory? At least so far as that there can be no possible remedy except one that must involve a radical reconstruction of society in respect to the world character of marriage. This is the pet theory of that class of cranks called free-lovers." Perhaps the profound mind of the Times editor accounted in some way not yet known to common folk, for the wearing of a ring about the finger and the ticketing (either by the decorations in the hair, the style of the toga, or the particular prefix before the name) of women as "taken or not taken." The mind of the "crank," however, has not yet become evolved so that it can perceive any other reason for those mysteries; nor, we should judge, had that of Wagner, since the "Curse of the Ring" figured so largely in his music dramas. By the way, how many visitors to the opera perceive this point in the great works of the externally orthodox and proper Richard? Goethe, too, knew no better, at what one might suppose to be the discreet age of sixty, than to produce a book on elective affinity, which classes him most plainly with the cranks! But fear not, O immovable worshipers of the god of things as they are! the time is indeed far distant when these curious ideas will percolate through the cranium of our good Theodore, who adviseth about all things well, or will work up under the headgear of the Rev. William Quayle.

Felix Adler, in his brochure entitled "Shall Ostracism Be Used by Religious Societies in the Struggle Against Public Iniquity?" takes the position that the "free-lover," while well-meaning and under the impression that he is in advance of the procession, is in reality a menace to society, and should be rewarded with the Boston adze and the Franz Josephland shoulder until he repenteth and climbeth back into the band wagon. Same old story, Brother Adler; Galileo is a well-intentioned man, and no doubt thinks his theories an improvement over those in circulation among the respectable; nevertheless, holds he still stubbornly to the opinion that "for all that, the world does move"? What ho! bring out the red-hot tweezers and the rack, and let us give his arms and back a yank that we may straighten out his soul!

Professor Thomas, of the University of Chicago, says that heightened nutrition and favorable circumstances produce an increased proportion of females in the human race; and he further adds that love affairs with which the clergyman has nothing in the world to do also seem to have the same effect! Really, we are considerably astonished that up to this time no one has yet thought to call this gentleman a graduate of the devil's school; and right respectfully do we commend him to the attention of the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst and Brother Anthony of New York. I never knew a scientist yet who was a "moral" man.

What do you think the public librarian would do if you were to ask him for a copy of St. Huxley, or the latest edition of Holy Haeckel? But if they do not contain more truth and beauty than the collection of myths which stands boldly out on the shelves of the reading room, labled as a "holy" book, Ann will cheerfully devour the only bonnet that she has.

EGOISM VS. ALTRUISM.

By M. Macon.

Why should folks prattle about altruism, when upon close analysis all our acts can clearly be traced to pure egoism? When we are caught in the act of doing a good turn to a fellowman once in a long while we are anxious to brag about it and call it by the high-sounding name of altruism, as if there really were such a thing as absolute sacrifices for others without the simultaneous gratification of our ego.

When relieving or helping our neighbor we, consciously or unconsciously, relieve our own painfulness at seeing him suffer. People call this philanthropic benevolence. It sounds so beautiful, you see. But why not call a spade a spade?

Of course, there are two kinds of egoism—animal and human. Cannibalism is an example of the purely animal egotism in the primitive savage. Martyrdom for an idea or the common good is the truly noble human egoism.

Was society organized by altruists anxious to devote their lives to others, or by plain egoists striving to benefit themselves? We are fast learning to know that in order to live a peaceful and happy social life we must let others live likewise. Else our own effort will fail also. War is hell for the victor as well as for the vanquished, and in the end even the winner of the strife is the loser. Hence it is that war is becoming a thing of the past.

Man will do good and avoid harm, not to please a deity, a sovereign or society, nor because of the fear of a Gehenna, the drastic law or social ostracism, but because he will deem it to his own earthly egoistic interest—whether physical, intellectual or spiritual—to do so. It simply does not pay in the long run to down your fellowman or to live in constant discord with your next door neighbor.

Is there a man who does not feel happy when making his beloved happy or when helping the helpless? Do good because you desire to be good and true to yourself. Here is a motive which is inherent, eternal and in full harmony with the first law of organic nature, the law of self-preservation. Do harm, and everybody's hand will be raised against you. You may gain for the moment and materially, but your soul, your conscience will suffer. Your peace of mind will be gone. Your sleep will be disturbed by heavy dreams and you will be unhappy because afraid.

I like the rational human egoist. He does all the good he can not because of any hypocritic duties to God, to society or any other external, inflated and high-sounding abstractions, but because of an innate conviction of self-gratification. When he sees any living thing suffer it hurts him. Unconsciously he puts himself in that being's condition, and in order to quiet his own pain he hastens to relieve the other's.

There is no room among us poor mortals for Nietzsche's uebermensch, Spencer's altruist or Jehovah's saint. We do not strive to "angelicize" the ursus, but simply to evolute and elevate the genus homo to his proper position spiritually as well as intellectually.

SHOCKING MORMON EXAMPLE.

By L. H. Dana.

Some time ago, when we read in The Philistine (which is published in East Aurora, which is in New York) an article comparing Mormonism and our own social system, not altogether to the detriment of the former arrangement, we said on the spot that Elbert Hubbard was wrong, as usual; and now that we have refreshed ourselves with Senator Burrows' recent attack on Reed Smoot we are sure that he was.

The Mormon church, says Mr. Burrows, places itself above the laws of common decency; and he pictures President Smith "sitting in the home of his fifth plural wife, rocking the cradle of the latest illegal offspring of his debauchery and crime," thus "degrading womanhood, debauching public morals, and striking at the Christian civilization of this age." Really this is extremely shocking of President Smith; he should rather imitate the example of some worthy non-Mormons among us, who never in their lives were guilty of rocking the cradles of their illegitimate children or of doing anything for their support; who implicate one woman in the sight of the world and then marry another; or who desert their wives and families as soon as they discover that it costs some self-denial and labor to support them. An inspection of the first page of our morning paper will readily convince us that no cases come to light nowadays of double lives and plural marriages outside of the Mormon church, and it is equally evident that the degraded women who are to be seen upon our streets are the victims of Mormon immorality. Little had we suspected it before, but now, in the light of Senator Burrows' speech, we know that it must be so.

However, were we of an inquisitive turn of mind, we might perchance, refusing the comforting solace of platitudes, make a few earnest efforts to find out how it happens that woman under our present "Christian civilization" is so frequently forced either to live a life of humiliating dependence, which offers no outlet for her natural abilities, or else to work for an inadequate wage, so that we often behold her going about these cold days insufficiently clad, and can guess by her thin cheeks that she has not enough to eat. This frail being is too delicate, we learn, to vote, but by no means too much so to starve or to stand upon her feet behind a store counter a trifling matter of some eight or ten hours every day. Who is to blame for this pitiable condition of affairs? Can any reasonable person question that the entire fault rests with—the Mormon church?

Doubtless Mormonism is also responsible for the shocking injustice portrayed in one of our popular modern plays, "Mrs. Dane's Defense," where the central figure is confronted by a judge during a court case, compelled to admit that she has led an irregular life, and then, although she was about to marry the man she loved, forced to flee into obscurity and "innocuous (or nocuous) desuetude." How many men, we venture to wonder, would be delighted to meet this inquisitive gentleman of the bench? Beyond question, however, he would have terrors for—none but Mormons.

Who are they that ostracize Gorkys and George Eliots, subject to rigid divorce laws, and fraternize with those who some half-dozen times or so have taken advantage of lax ones? Oh, fie, fie upon the lack of logic of—the Mormons!

Who was the author of a sentence we read a few days since in our newspaper about women with dead futures and men with dead pasts? Was a more damnable, disgraceful, heartless line ever penned? Down with the shameless disciple of Joseph Smith who wrote it! Alas, it is all too apparent that the Mormon is indeed the root of all evil! Let us confront him with a few of our charitable, consistent and highly "respectable" Gentiles, so that he may see the error of his way, hang his disreputable head and die of very shame and self-contempt. Nothing is lacking to bring about the millennium on earth but the stringent enforcement of the laws against Mormonism.

"Unless individuals are permitted to reflect and communicate their sentiments upon every topic it is impossible that they should progress in knowledge."—Wortman.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Six months .....50 cents Three months.....25 cents
One year .....$1.00 Single copies ..... 5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

LETTERS FROM THE EDITOR.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., April 8.—Dear Lucifer Friends: Just a few lines to let you know that you are not forgotten. I seem to have lost the knack, or the habit, of letter-writing. Have been so wrapped up in the work of getting the Los Angeles Eugenic Society properly on its feet that I seem to forget that I owe any duties to the home office or to the readers of LUCIFER generally.

After the two public meetings at Mammoth Hall, on the 12th and 22d of March, we have held two successful meetings at Symphony Hall, a more expensive place of meeting, but attended by a different class of hearers—at least such was the opinion of those who advocated the change. Desiring to reach all classes of people in the City of the Angels, it was believed worth the risk of financial loss in the matter of hall rent. Not having the report of the secretary of the club, I cannot say whether there has been financial loss or not. Wednesday eve of this week we are to have another meeting at the same place. The subject of discussion as advertised by cards and by Sunday papers is as follows:

"PLEADS FOR THE VOICELESS UNBORN.

"Come to Symphony Hall Wednesday evening, April 10, to help solve the problem of the ages: How to secure a sound mind in a sound body, through a better knowledge of eugenics, the greatest of all sciences; incomparably more important than mathematics, politics, economics, physics, metaphysics, or any other science taught in schools or colleges.

"Knowledge the only savior; ignorance the only devil. Compulsory ignorance of eugenics the worst of all civic crimes.

"First address by Moses Harman, of Chicago. Professor Edgar L. Larkin, honorary president of the Los Angeles Eugenic Society, and several other well-known speakers are expected to follow. All are welcome."

Among the speakers expected to take part in this meeting is Professor William Windsor, well and favorably known to many of our readers. Few if any public lecturers and writers of books are better equipped for the work of spreading the gospel of eugenics than is our old-time friend and generous helper, William Windsor, author of "Loma" and several other books of national fame, and one of the most scientific and successful delineators of character through phrenologic readings I have ever known.

Besides the public meetings in the interest of the newly-formed (or forming) Los Angeles society of eugenics we have held three parlor meetings that have been well attended by those who have given their names as prospective members.

As usual, I have postponed writing home until the last moment, and therefore, in order to get this line, together with a number of selections for LUCIFER's columns, into the mail in time for next issue I close for this time.

M. HARMAN.

P. S.—I have received several invitations to hold meetings in California towns. Among these are San Diego, Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz and San Francisco. If there are other points between San Diego and Seattle, Wash., at which it is desired that I shall stop before returning to Chicago I should be glad to hear from friends and readers of LUCIFER at those places. Still address me at 425 East Forty-ninth street, Los Angeles.

M. H.

* * * * *

LOS ANGELES, CAL., Sunday, April 14.—And still another very successful mass meeting at Symphony Hall was held on Wednesday evening, April 10, in the interest of the Los Angeles Eugenic Society. Successful as to numbers in attendance, and as to interest in the subjects discussed, and in the additions to the roll of members. The first speaker on the program was the editor of LUCIFER, who read the poem entitled "The Fence and the Ambulance," the closing lines of which are in these words:

"Better generate well than reclaim them when old;
For the gist of this matter is seeing
That to rescue the fallen is good, but 'tis best
To hinder such people from being.
Better close up the source that generates crime
Than deliver from dungeon or galley—
Better put a stout fence round the edge of the cliff
Than an ambulance down in the valley."

The rest of the forty-five minutes allowed him by the president of the society, Dr. Ada Herman-Patterson, was taken up in giving selections from the essay entitled "Motherhood in Freedom," and in comments thereon. Then followed a twenty-six minutes' talk from Dr. William Windsor, the best known and most successful delineator of character, from the phrenological standpoint, since the demise of O. S. Fowler, that the United States has yet produced.

In many respects I regard Dr. Windsor as the superior of his great predecessor in this field. His philosophy of life strikes me as an improvement upon that given us in Fowler's books—broader, deeper, more inclusive, more satisfying. Those of our readers who have read the book "Loma"—the traveler from Venus who slid down on a ray of light from his native home in the sky, landing in Lake Michigan at the foot of Van Buren street, Chicago, just in time to save from drowning the heroine of that story—will remember that Windsor adopts the theory of Samuel T. Fowler in regard to the origin of celestial and terrestrial phenomena; the central plank or keynote of which philosophy, as I now recall it, is that the universe consists of matter and space, and that all the operations of nature, physical, mental and psychic, including, of course, everything human, subhuman and superhuman, are the result of a conflict between matter and space—matter being magnetic and warm, space electric and cold—a condition of perpetual war between the two poles of being, variously called gravitation and levitation, condensation and rarefaction, inertia (fixity of form) and change or mutation of all form.

Dr. Windsor began his talk by saying that when a boy he often regretted the fact that he was too young to take part in the great conflict for the emancipation of the negroes of the Southern States, but after reaching manhood it was not long before he became convinced that a far more important conflict was yet in store for those who loved freedom and hated oppression than was that waged in behalf of the enslaved Africans—namely, the battle for the emancipation of women and children from the tyranny of masculine domination, the despotism of man-made laws that put the woman and her children in the almost irresponsible power of the husband and father.

Dr. Windsor paid me the high compliment of saying that my teaching, through LUCIFER and its pamphlets, had first roused him to a sense of the horrible injustice done by our falsely called civilization to the so-called weaker sex, and to infant children, by treating them as property, as chattels; adding that whatever of success in life he has hitherto achieved he owes to me more than to any other man. The remainder of his twenty-six minutes was taken up in telling the audience something of what he believed the best methods of teaching eugenics, and what the outcome would be of the present agitation for larger liberty for women and better instruction for children in this bed-rock science, the science of sciences, how to create a better race of human beings.

The last speaker of the evening was Dr. Price, a lady physician, of the Naturopathic College of this city, who gave us quite an interesting talk upon race-culture from the standpoint of the physician and physiologist. Her remarks were in the nature of a criticism, in part at least, and as her paper is expected to be made the subject of a reply at our next meeting a further report thereof will probably appear in these columns later on.

Again I ask the forbearance of the many friends whose letters I have failed to answer. So many calls are made upon my time and strength that letter-writing is postponed to a more convenient season. "The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak."

Among recent cards is one from Lois Waisbrooker, saying that she has been quite sick since I saw her last in Chicago. Few if any of the pioneers of eugenics deserve better of the Liberal public than does Lois Waisbrooker, and in closing this brief letter I bespeak for her a kindly letter from each of her old-time friends, as well as from all who know of her faithful work in humanity's behalf, and when writing to her I ask LUCIFER's friends to remember that in her old age and feebleness she has no income except from the sale of her books. Letters sent in care of the Douglas Printing House, Chicago, or care of LUCIFER, will reach her.

In haste, but cordially and hopefully,

M. HARMAN.

LETTERS TO LOS ANGELES MEETING OF PROTEST.

The following is the list of letters sent to be read at the Los Angeles mass meeting of protest, held at Mammoth Hall, March 12, 1907, but which, on account of the lateness of the hour—after the speech-making was done—were not read. But at what may be called the adjourned meeting of protest, held in the same building on March 22, these letters were read, in whole or in greater part, by the president of the Los Angeles Eugenic Society, Dr. Ada S. Patterson, who is an excellent reader and who made very appropriate comments upon each letter.

This list should have been sent home for publication some weeks ago, but by a strange oversight was not sent: B. O. Flower, editor Arena, Boston; Dr. Alice B. Stockham, Chicago; Edwin C. Walker, New York; Dr. J. H. Tilden, editor Stuffed Club, Denver; Parker H. Sercombe, editor Tomorrow, Chicago; Bolton Hall, New York; Rev. Walter Henry McPherson, minister and teacher of the People's Church, South Chicago; Elbert Hubbard, editor Philistine, East Aurora, N. Y.; M. R. Leverson, M. D., Ph. D., M. A., author and publisher of books on vaccination, etc., New York; Lucinda B. Chandler, Norwood Park, Ill.; Rev. J. M. A. Spence, minister People's Church, Aurora, Ill.; George E. Bowen, Elgin, Ill.

If any names have been omitted from this list that should be included therein the writers will please let me know. With my usual forgetfulness, and on account of press of other matters, it is quite possible that some have been overlooked and mislaid.

Though late about it, I desire in this public manner to return sincerest and most heartfelt thanks to the writers of the fore-mentioned letters for the great kindness conferred on myself personally and also upon the committee of arrangements of the mass meeting, as well as upon all who took a sympathetic part therein, whether as speakers or auditors. The second meeting at Mammoth Hall, though not equal to the first in numbers present, was well attended and even more earnest and enthusiastic in its indorsement of the sentiments expressed by the speakers and by the writers of the letters read.

M. HARMAN.

WHAT THE "OBSCENITY" STATUTE MEANS.

On page 29 of The Light for January, Dr. Sylvanus Stall says:

"The law as it now stands, if logically enforced, would brand the Bible as an obscene book; scarcely a single person in this convention would escape the penitentiary, and Jesus himself, if he came to Chicago or New York, could be arrested and successfully imprisoned. . . . . No wonder that the statue of Justice holding the scales in one hand is represented as totally blinded by a bandage which covers both eyes."

On page 31 the doctor says:

"Today a man may deliberately murder his wife by a series of exactions and wrongs; he may bring to his own home disease as the result of his own impure life and deliberately infect his own wife with a disease which is now annually sending many thousands of women to the dissecting table for surgical treatment of the most serious nature and which is causing the death of thousands of pure, innocent and unsuspicious wives; and yet the law makes it a crime for the physician who treats the husband to warn the wife by a single suggestion, and judges the husband as acting within his marital rights, and even here in Chicago sends a man to the penitentiary for a series of years who dares to call public attention in printed form to such a fact."

The Light (La Crosse, Wis.), from which magazine these paragraphs are reproduced, is the official organ of the National Purity Federation, of which association Dr. Sylvanus Stall is second vice-president. These paragraphs are part of an address delivered at the national convention of that association held in Chicago last fall. One of the leading speakers at that convention was Theodore Schroeder of New York, who is attorney for the Free Speech League, the object of which league is to secure the repeal or radical modification of the federal statute known as the "obscenity postal law." Anthony Comstock, whose name appears on the advisory board of the National Purity Federation, was expected to reply to Mr. Schroeder, but for some reason he did not appear. Looking for causes of such non-appearance, it would seem reasonable that Mr. Comstock knew that the chief managers of this association were entirely out of sympathy with the law which was enacted in 1873 at the instigation and by the active lobbying of himself and his religio-moralistic adjutants.

Under the head "The National Purity Federation Holds a Remarkable Meeting," B. O. Flower, editor of The Arena, gave an extended summary of the address of his colleague, Mr. Schroeder, at this historic meeting and closes his report by quoting the following significant utterance from the New York Sun's editorial on the same subject:

"The truth is that a new school of purity has sprung up in the world, and for the present Mr. Comstock must be content to pass as an old fogy, out-of-date, mid-Victorian, unfashionable, or whatever the stronger party chooses. The new school is for discovering corruption; his school was ever for concealing it. He conceived crebility to be a more peaceful state of mind than curiosity and was always for hiding anything that might possibly offend even our dramatic critics. His opponents might be generous enough to credit him with a laudable ambition—the honest desire to raise every one to what we have been told is the very height of felicity: 'the possession of being well-deceived, the serene and peaceful state of being a fool among knaves.'"

Until the thinking portion of the American people wakes up to a sense of the true meaning and real intent of the postal legislation that denies freedom of speech and of press in regard to sexology, eugenics, race-culture, etc., it is well to keep the foregoing statements of fact and opinion before the readers of LUCIFER and of the reform press generally.

"By their fruits ye shall know them." By the fruits of the so-called Comstock legislation only can we learn the real character of that legislation and the real character of the men who secured the enactment of that legislation.

M. H.

A STUDY IN SEX OVERVALUATION.

Another example of the loss of sex perspective and the overestimation of sex evil is found in the feverish excitement with which ostentatiously and professionally "pure" people periodically demand the suppression of prostitution, while endorsing, at least by silence, marriage ideals embodying most of its evil essences. The vehement outcery with which this problem is approached by our overexcited purists has almost suppressed every effort at a rational discussion of sex questions, such as might easily lessen unhappiness and divorce, or tend to a discovery or a lessening of the causes of prostitution or the minimizing of its evil consequences. The professional purist, seeking a life of lucrative morality, gets his living more easily by appealing to the sensitive emotions of the over-sexed multitude than by dispensing cold-logic wisdom on the subject.

In the mind of our sex-mad populace, unauthorized self-indulgence has such an overwhelming influence that we have come to speak of it as "the" social evil, as though there existed but one evil, and that sexual. The purist's overestimation of sex evil and sex sacredness perhaps is seldom a consequence of bad logic, but oftener a product of inherent defects of perception as to all matters sexual. As with the ancient ascetic, the modern extreme purist is the victim of sexual hyperesthetieism.

Our marriage ceremonies also bear unconscious testimony to the general overvaluation of the sex relation. No event in our whole lives do we celebrate with such lavishness of expenditure, such ringing of bells, such peal of organ, such blare of trumpets, such feasting and abandon, as we habitually use in announcing the commencement of authorized sex intercourse. Then after the marriage comes the wedding trip, that little hiding away for a season of excess and exhaustion; and later, with a joyous remembrance of an endurance now lost, we refer to this little debauch as the "honeymoon" of our life.

Plainer than words could make it, this signifies again that to most people the conventional beginning of sex relation is the most important thing in all life. This reminds one that in ancient Rome it became a proverb to say if one talked specially indecent, that such a one "talked like a bride." We moderns might with propriety say that the extravagantly lascivious act like bridegrooms.

When discussed sex sensitiveness is the foundation of asceticism, we will find a gross overvaluation of the sinfulness of unauthorized sex indulgence. Very often, both anciently and at present, this results in the assertion, and a practice in harmony with it, that mere irregular sex indulgence, without any tangible aftereffect, is a more grave offense than murder.

So extravagant was the sinfulness of irregular sexuality esteemed that even the sacredness of the confessional could be violated by priests in order to facilitate punishment. Furthermore this seems to have been the only offense which was of such gravity, for certainly murder was not. An Italian author says: "Thus we see four different popes, in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, ordering the revelation of a sin of impurity, and forbidding it in cases of parricide. A woman confesses, or supposes in her confession to a Carmelite, that a Cordelier attempted to seduce her; the Carmelite must impeach the Cordelier. A fanatical assassin, believing that he shall serve God by killing his prince, consults his confessor on this case of conscience; the confessor is guilty of sacrilege if he save the life of his sovereign."

The lingering consequences of such sex overvaluation are still with us. Though nobody ever commits suicide solely because of loss of virginity, undiscovered by others, yet the oversexed male usually adjudges a woman's loss of virginity, outside of wedlock, though voluntarily and fairly parted with, as of more value than some one else's life. To kill the man who induced one's mature female relative to join him in a mutual gratification, without a marriage ceremony, is still a meritorious act, in the estimation of the oversexed mob, which, however, boasts of its humanitarian abolition of statutory capital punishment.

In some states murder committed in revenge for infringement of a husband's sex monopoly, or the seduction of a mature female relative, is justifiable homicide, by statute. In other states the virtuous juror excuses such murder, and eases his conscience for the violation of his oath by pretending to believe in the murderer's temporary insanity.

Such a murderer and the jury who acquit him both justify the crime, by reason of the same error of overvalued female sex sacredness. The male fornicator and the male adulterer must still expiate their acts by death, though long ago the states renounced direct responsibility for such barbarously disproportionate punishment. Through the jury the oversexed mob, with its characteristic lawlessness where its emotions are appealed to, appoints the relative of the seduced woman an executioner, and without trial, in the name of the state, ratifies murder because a man and a woman, both mature, did without fraud of ceremony enter into a relation which in itself is natural and healthy and may be entirely harmless.

In a recent case, where a Texas jury, with some regard for its oath, found a man guilty of killing a sister's seducer, the governor came to the rescue with a pardon for the murderer after thirty days of penitentiary confinement. In his pardoning proclamation the distinguished governor used this language: "The deceased had been on intimate terms of friendship with the family of the applicant, and such a base betrayal of confidence deserved death."

That the seduction of a mature woman, who presumably is as much a free agent as the man, and who has no fraud practiced upon her, should be considered a crime adequate to invoke the death penalty, is indeed startling enough, but not the worst of what is implied in this pardon. The governor's act assumes that he and the murderer may conspire to make and enforce ex post facto law, which the law-making power of the state has not seen fit to make. It also means that the murderer, after conviction, may have his murderous act glorified through the pardoning power. More damnable than both is the fact that the supposed seducer is first killed, and his innocence, or the circumstances of his guilt and degree of his turpitude, are inquired into only after his death has made it impossible for him to testify in his own behalf. In the state of Utah, the oversexed mob, pursuant to the Mormon blood-atonement doctrine, has by statute made justifiable homicide of such murders as the Texas governor pardons.

This desire to slay the male seducer exists not solely because of the overvaluation of virginity, as such, but is usually limited to overvalued female virginity. No one credited with sanity advocates the murder of female seducers of men. This difference in the estimated value of male and female virginity is but a special manifestation of the different standard of sex morals which obtains for men and women. Both are relics of the class morality of a slave-holding past, when wives were bought, owned and sold by men. Then the seduction of the female slave was a violation of her male owner's property right in her, and was revenged accordingly. There could be no seduction of a man, because he alone was a free moral agent.

It is no offense to seduce a man, because sex experience enhances, rather than diminishes, his chance of matrimony. With women this is otherwise. Loss of maidenhood is still esteemed the loss of her chief stock in trade in the matrimonial market. Through its advantageous sale, by marriage to a rich husband, she too often hopes to insure herself a life of comfort.

However, the time will come when married women not actually nor fully occupied by the duties of maternity, nor devoting themselves to social service, and who consent to live in idle ease at a husband's expense, will receive the same measure of pity and contempt then given to unmarried women who accept like support in return for a like barren sex service. In either case, it is but a useless life of laziness and commercialised lust. Thus, perhaps, we will ultimately abolish even the monster jealousy, which is ever the natural result of an unbalanced relation of the sexes.

With our sex-worshiping ancestors, sex and marriage were still more sacred. Therefore, feminine initiation into the mysterious joy of sex usually took place in the temple, either by the process of priestly prelibation or sacred prostitution. In ancient Egypt the priests determined the time when a husband might visit his wife. They can no longer do that, but the modern priests are still tenacious in maintaining something very near to it, in seeking to reserve to themselves the determination of our right to marry at all.

During long ages of our phallic-worshiping past, religion and sexualism have become so inseparably interwoven that the management of the sex relation of others seems always to have been one of the chief occupations of the clergy. So generally is this conceded, that every one expects to secure a clergyman's permission before a sex relation is deemed authorized. So exacting is the present bigotry, that it would be very difficult to find a woman, of even moderate pretensions to "respectability," who would have either the disposition or the courage to enter the married state without having it parsonized. After all, we have not so far outgrown the Egyptian.

The Mormon church carries all this to its logical conclusion. It denies the religious validity of all marriages not solemnized by its ceremonial code, and insists that the government has no right to prohibit polygamy, because marriage and the begetting of children, whether by one wife or many, are acts of religious worship.—Theodore Schroeder, in Soundview.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

Lillian Harman: Please send to address given below one copy of "The Persecution and the Appreciation," for which find 20 cents. Sorry I can't make it $20. I was afraid the grand old hero would not survive another term in the hastile, but I am glad he disappointed me and added another monument to his glory.—J. A. Sturgis, Sharpsville, Pa.

Dear Mr. Harman: I inclose stamps, 10c; please send me the offer. I sympathize with you in the outrages perpetrated against you. Have seen a cut of your photo in Tomorrow. If you are as good a man as that indicates you are above the average. I want to see what you teach. I don't like the principles advocated by Tomorrow, although I think our marriage system needs overhauling. So few people realize beforehand what it means. Also, some careless.—James Kirkpatrick, Dillon, Mont.

GERARD, KAN., March 27.—Mrs. Lillian Harman: I am here a few days before leaving for Idaho, where I am to report the Moyer and Haywood trial for the Appeal to Reason. I happened to find here upon my table a copy of the "Appreciation" and I have taken pleasure in writing a brief notice of it for the next issue of the Appeal. This will give wide circulation to this most excellent little pamphlet and will result, I hope, in bringing you many orders for it. The occasion of which this pamphlet is such a splendid souvenir will be remembered with joy by all who were so fortunate as to be in attendance, and will be read of by many thousands of others who are in entire harmony with the spirit that prompted it and inspired its utterances. I am delighted to observe that your good father is recuperating his health. He has lived long enough, at least, to see some of the fruitions of his noble life work.—Eugene V. Debs.

To the Editor: Many years ago a young couple, thrown together by their limited church society, decided that they loved each other and married. In proper time a child was born—a weakling. The mother was a strong, healthy woman, and the father of normal appearance. Two years later another child was born, having a withered limb. The mother, in her disappointment, now noticed that at no time had her modest husband changed clothing in her presence, and, dismissing prudery, secretly watched him undress. Ah! that back! how strange it appeared! What could it be? She consulted the doctor. "Hereditary; incurable in your husband or his children for many generations." Years passed. Several strong and healthy children had been added to the family. One of the cripples resembled the mother; so did one of the healthy children; but of the others there was slight resemblance. Such was the incident that weakened my faith in "innocent love and divine providence" in the begetting of the human species long before I saw or heard of LUCIFER.

Would not the cripple who at one time said to me, "Sometimes I can hardly resist killing myself; I have nothing in life to live for," approve the choice and action of the mother, regardless of the belief or the "not-agree" of Mr. Hankey? This is the incident; draw your own conclusions.—Recluse.

Dear Lillian: I received the booklet, "The Persecution and the Appreciation," for which I inclose 20 cents. I am sorry, but don't know where I could distribute any copies to do good. I am almost a "shut-in" and cannot get around among the people as I used to do. Am very glad your good father is still enjoying better health and his friends, and working in his chosen line. Long may he live to see the result of his work along the line of eugenics, of which he has been leader even before it was named and had come into prominence. What great need there is of reform in the social or sexual relations of the human race! Now that the subject has moved into the limelight there must, there will be, through the united thought and desire for better conditions, a change for the better. When woman shall be free as man is free, and womanhood and manhood receive proper recognition and be safeguarded as above all price, as they are truly in the minds of the world's greatest thinkers, then conditions will change so there will be no more slave mothers bringing into life those who are and must be —under the terrible conditions that now exist—the unfit, the degenerate, the criminal class. There is great need of reform in all the economic centers of activity, but in no other is the need so urgent, so vital, as in the relation of the sexes, because of the far-reaching results in the lives of these helpless innocents, the unborn. You and your father are doing a good work in keeping the subject before the people, in keeping the Light-Bearer abroad, so that the subject for which it stands cannot be ignored or forgotten. May all success attend you and the cause for which you both have worked so long and so well. Yours always for the best.—Sarah Stone Eockhill, Alliance, O.

To the Editor: I was very much interested in reading the discussion in the last number of LUCIFER relative to economics and marriage. It scarcely seems possible to agree with Mr. Kerr when he says that "the economic question is only a temporary one, for public maintenance of children is fast becoming a question of practical politics." Leaving children altogether out of the question, there is always the individual to be considered, and so long as economic conditions are not equal there can rarely be such a thing as "free love"—which is, of course, the only kind of love there is. Take the case of the girl who works in the department store for, say, $8 a week. How much love is there involved when she marries? And can we blame her if she loves elsewhere after she is married? We are shocked at the "marriage of convenience" she is married! We are shocked at the "marriage of convenience" in France; conditions are little better here, except that with us the children sell themselves, there the parents take care of the matter. Or to put it in another way, a man who has made a mistake in marriage cannot confess the fact, for his wife is absolutely dependent upon him. So long as girls are taught no useful occupation and are given a comparatively poor chance to earn a livelihood, so long will it be ridiculous to talk about natural selection. The man will select the woman with a financial club every time, and that is all there is about it.

The economic question must always be fundamental, it seems to me, for this reason: that it is generally considered that the food supply determines the relative proportions of the sexes (Professor Thomas speaks of this in the first chapter of his recent book), and this, of course, will determine, again, the form of marriage institution. The fact that, as Mr. Kerr says, "civilization is fatal to exclusive love," does not prove that such love is not the standard, for civilization has separated the occupations of men and women, thus affecting their respective mental developments and making one a financial burden upon the other. This, by the way, was recommended by the Rev. William Quayle in a sermon last Sunday. He thinks that the sooner women stop holding positions and take a husband to support them, the better it is. And yet this man is paid, and probably paid well, for getting up in St. James' Methodist Episcopal Church and talking pernicious nonsense like this, and the newspapers print his precious stuff the day after! But if any women go and listen to the discourse, I wonder how they do it and retain their self-respect.—L. H., Dana.

THE PERSECUTION AND THE APPRECIATION.

A report of the reception to Moses Harman at Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, Jan. 1, 1907, is now ready for delivery. It is a booklet of sixty-four pages, containing speeches by Paul Tyner, Walter Henry MacPherson, Lucinda B. Chandler, Gertrude Breslau Hunt, Parker H. Sercombe, and Moses Harman; also letters from absent friends, newspaper reports, etc., and pictures of Lucinda B. Chandler, Kiichi Kaneko and Parker H. Sercombe. Two portraits of Mr. Harman are given; one, with grandson, taken in January, 1907, has never before been published. We hope this will be an effective document for wide distribution. Price, per dozen, $1.25; single copies, 20 cents.

We have sent out over 700 free copies of this pamphlet and expect to circulate many more in the same way. The expense of publication and circulation is quite heavy and we gladly accept cooperation in the work. Those who are interested are requested to send names of persons to whom they think copies should be sent. Inability to assist financially should not deter friends from sending such names to us.

NEW TRUTHS CAUSE PAIN.

Every new truth which has ever been propounded has, for a time, caused mischief; it has produced discomfort, and often unhappiness, sometimes by disturbing social or religious arrangements, and sometimes merely by the disruption of old and cherished associations of thought. It is only after a certain interval, and when the framework of affairs has adjusted itself to the new truth, that its good effects preponderate; and the preponderance continues to increase, until, at length, the truth causes nothing but good. But, at the outset, there is always harm. And if the truth is very great as well as very new, the harm is serious. Men are made uneasy; they flinch; they cannot bear the sudden light; a general restlessness supervenes; the face of society is disturbed, or perhaps convulsed; old interests and old beliefs have been destroyed before new ones have been created. These symptoms are the precursors of revolution; they have preceded all the great changes through which the world has passed.—Buckle's History of Civilization.

The concealment of truth is the only indecorum known to science. —Westermarck.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE FREE SPEECH LEAGUE invites correspondence, cooperation, and membership of all who claim rights, and dare maintain them.
Join us. Help us. Get our list of books. Read them—pass them on.
Liberty tracts by Ingersoll, Wakeman, Walker, Pentecost, Darrow, Post and Schroeder. Read "Our Vanishing Liberty of Press" (5c) and "Do You Want Free Speech?" (10c) and no fears.
WHY YOU SHOULD ACT WITH US.
FREE SPEECH LEAGUE, 120 Lexington avenue, New York.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

Parental Rights and Economic Wrongs.

BY VIRGINIA M. BUTTERFIELD.

The purpose of this book is to discuss the ethics of optional motherhood as the result of optional conception. It is meant to show both the short-sightedness and injustice of the policy by which any effort to control conception, in the interest of purposeful and responsible parenthood, race-improvement, and child-happiness, is classed with criminal abortion.

Motherhood is at present compulsory, since all effort to control conception is forbidden, and even all discussion of the possibility or righteousness of so doing is regarded as immoral. This is not only injurious to the race, working evil and unhappiness in a multiplicity of ways to every man, woman and child in the world, but is totally unnecessary as well.

Humanity has been so long accustomed to deny its own right of volition in the matter of parenthood, and also to consider sinful even the desire to exercise such right, that no radical improvement in conditions can take place until men and women recognize the legitimacy and morality of purposeful parenthood.—Author's Preface.

Bound in gray linen. 96 pages. Price, 50 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

You Need It.

There are but two classes of people, those who think and those who should. Whether you belong to one or the other, you need The Stellar Ray. It presents the best of higher thought in will power, astral science, occultism, etc.

OUR SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS.

Fifteen months for $1 (begin with the January number if you desire and if you let us know soon); foreign, 50c extra.

The magazine and our Pocket Dictionary of Astrological Terms (regular price for two, $1.50), both for $1.25 (foreign, $1.75).

We can furnish you with the lowest clubbing rates with any of the contemporary magazines.

The magazine free for one year with every Five-Dollar Horoscope cast by our Astral Science Department. This is run on the same high standard as the magazine. Write now and say you saw it in LUCIFER.

THE STELLAR RAY.
The Magazine for Thinkers.
Hodges Building, Detroit, Mich.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses.

BY E. C. WALKER.

Contents—Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Conformity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is She? What Will She Be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love; Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections Upon Reading William Platt's "Woman, Love and Life." Price 15c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

Life and Love and Death.

BY BOLTON HALL.

A part of the larger book "Even As You and I." 12mo, paper, 116 pages, 10 cents; by mail, 15 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25c each.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61, BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1090

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

An Essay on the Duty of Civil Disobedience.

BY HENRY D. THOREAU.

A reprint of this classic essay on the supremacy of the individual conscience. Antique paper; artistic covers, dark green on olivine. 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Natural Rights.

BY M. KUHN.

A little book so small that it is full—so full that it is big. "Natural Rights" should be read by every man and woman, young or old, married or single, capable of thinking. It throws a limelight on many things of intense interest. Just from the press. Small edition. Autograph copies, consecutively numbered, bound in paper, postpaid, 10c, silver or stamps. Order now. Address M. KUHN, North St. Paul, Minn.

Are You Interested

in the Independence of Women? Then send for Albert Chavannes' "Lizzie Melton," the self-reliant girl who, though fallen in the eyes of the world, won the esteem of the community by her dignity, courage and perseverance in well-doing. 15c a copy; two books for 25c. Send for catalogue to MRS. C. CHAVANNES, 308 Fourth avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.

Mother Earth.

Monthly Magazine devoted to Social Science and Literature. Published at 210 East Thirteenth street, New York City. Emma Goldman, publisher. Price, $1 per year; 10c per copy.

MOTHER EARTH'S PAMPHLETS.

The Masters of Life. By Maxim Gorky. Only translation of the original. Price, 10c.

The Criminal Anarchy Law on Suppressing the Advocacy of Crime. By Theodore Schroeder. Price, 5c. 10

The Occidental Mystic and Western Spiritualist.

A 36-page monthly, devoted to the consideration of spiritualism and the occult sciences.

Clean, bright and filled from cover to cover with original matter from able contributors. Issued on the 1st of each month. $1 a year; single copy, 10c.

ARTHUR S. HOWE, Editor and Publisher,
142 S. Broadway, Room 107, Los Angeles, Cal.

Correspondence Club.

Open to those who desire to improve, and to discuss subjects of interest with kindred minds. Editor of this paper says the secretary is worthy of confidence. For particulars, enclose stamp to C. A. KIRK, Sec., Box 733, Mitchell, S. D.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think: Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00
POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers—no rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,
For the Supreme and Superwoman and The New Civilization.
2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, MAY 9, E. M. 307 [C. E. 1907]. WHOLE NO 1091

NO CRIMINAL CLASS.

Brand Whitlock, mayor of Toledo, successor to Mayor Jones, "Golden Rule" Jones, has written an article on crime and punishment that deserves to be republished in every magazine and newspaper in the United States. It is entitled "What Good Does It Do?" It appears as the first article in Everybody's Magazine for May.

Mayor Whitlock denies most emphatically that there is any "criminal class," as such; says there is "only a punished class, a caught class." After showing the utter failure of punishment to reform; after showing in a most convincing manner, as many able writers and speakers have before done, the utter unreason, as well as the horrible brutality and injustice of our penal system, Mayor Whitlock concludes his article in these memorable words:

"Some day, perhaps, we shall learn that, properly, we can have nothing to do with punishment. No man is good enough or wise enough to judge or to punish another man; no human mind can sound the infinite and mysterious profundities of another human mind, weigh the influences of heredity, environment, physical and psychic forces and phenomena; we have no psychologist great enough for that. Only Omniscience can plumb those mysterious and awful depths. Man's attempts to do so are profanations. All that society has a right to do is to protect itself by restraining those of proved dangerous tendencies; it has no right to hurt them while doing so; and its duty is to do all it can to help the erring, wandering souls back into the right path. We have lately made such a beginning in our juvenile courts, the principle of which, let us hope, is to be the pervading principle of all criminal courts in the future, when we shall have learned that our grown-up offenders and delinquents are but big children, who, like so many of their more fortunate—that is, unaught—brethren, have lost the innocence, while retaining the ignorance, of childhood.' I should like to conclude with a quotation from Emerson, probably considered 'dangerous' by those in whose libraries it has so long, in its beautiful levant binding, remained unread:

"'But there will dawn ere long on our politics, on our modes of living, a nobler morning than that Arabian faith, in the sentiment of love. This is the one remedy for all ills, the panacea of nature. We must be lovers, and at once the impossible becomes possible. Our age and history, for 3,000 years, has not been the history of kindness, but of selfishness. Our distrust is very expensive. The money we spend for courts and prisons is very ill laid out. We make, by distrust, the thief, and burglar, and incendiary, and by our court and jail we keep him so. An acceptance of the sentiment of love throughout Christendom for a season would bring the felon and the outcast to our side in tears, with the devotion of his faculties to our service.'"

But so long as our present political systems are upheld by the voting serfs, just so long will our present cruel, barbaric and illogical treatment of so-called criminals continue. Our political leaders must have some means of rewarding the men who do their dirty work in managing elections, hence they must have penitentiaries filled with "convicts" that will require wardens, deputy wardens, cell-bosses, chaplains, prison guards, etc., and these positions, with good salaries and little work attached, come very handy as rewards for "party" services, instead of having to pay for such services out of the pockets of the successful political leaders.

Then it must not be forgotten that many men seek the job of governing and driving helpless prisoners in order to gratify their own love of power, their own worse than brutal instincts—the result of bad prenatal conditions often, conditions in which there was no love, but only indifference, aversion or hate between those who brought these power-loving men into life.

M. HARMAN.

SAYS PRISONS ARE FAILURES.

Methods employed by the police, judges and law courts in dealing with offenders in initial stages were denounced as inhuman, impractical and even criminal, by Judge R. S. Tuthill at a reception given in honor of Municipal Judge Cleland last week. Judge Tuthill declared that present methods of treating criminals are a failure. Punishment defeats its own end. The sending of a young offender to prison results in his becoming a habitual criminal. "In the twenty years of service as a judge in the courts of Chicago," the jurist began, "I have become thoroughly convinced that our system of treating criminals is worthless. More than that, it is actually harmful and only tends to increase crime and criminals. Our prisons are universities of crime. Instead of reforming a man, they throw him in contact with confirmed criminals, with the 'professors of practical criminology,' and when the prisoner is free he is usually a consummate master of the craft."

Judge Tuthill said that putting lawbreakers under parole in the charge of some responsible person is the only way to decrease crime and criminals. "Judge Cleland," the speaker continued, "found the true method of dealing with offenders of the law in the initial stages. He was the first to introduce this system, and it will always remain to his credit. But what is being done in this court should be done in all other courts. The law should act the part of friend and not of an oppressor. Do not send criminals to jail, but put them in charge of a probation officer. Give them a chance and you will see what a wonderful effect it will have upon them. No man is so hardened as not to be touched by a human appeal. All criminals are victims of conditions.

"In adopting this system of parole we are not alone in the field. Our sister republic, Switzerland, was first to recognize the truth that punishment defeats its own end, and started voluntary parole societies long ago. In a Swiss court every man, unless a habitual criminal, is given a chance to improve. And even if he is sent to jail he is visited daily by members of the probationary societies and as soon as they feel that his release would be beneficial to him the prison doors are opened and the man is given a chance to again become a respected member of the community."

"PIOUS FRAUDS."

The term "pious fraud," often used by advanced thinkers when attacking traditional religious belief, is of course repudiated by those yet holding to traditional religion as entirely unjustified, as only springing from hatred and as being a mean way of attacking religion. Is the term "pious fraud" unjustified? I think the term is fully justified in many cases, and will give a few striking examples from the Bible.

The second epistle of Peter in the New Testament pretends not only to have been written by Peter, the intimate disciple of Jesus, but it even says, referring to the story of the transfiguration of Jesus on the mount: "The voice: This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased, we ourselves heard come out of heaven, when we were with him in the holy mount." (Chap. i, 18.)

It has long been known that this epistle is entirely spurious. Even in the fourth century it was believed by some to be spurious, and these doubts have again and again turned up, till now no unprejudiced biblical scholar accepts it as authentic.

The general belief in its authenticity, and for which it was taken up into the canon, was very probably due, besides the mention of the name of Simon Peter in the address to the readers, to the before cited words in that epistle, by which the writer fully asserts himself to have been an eye witness of that miraculous event of the transfiguration related in the gospels.

Sincere believers in Christianity thus argued: "Would a man have been such a liar as to call himself an eye witness of that event if he had not been—a man who wrote an epistle of such religious earnestness and spirituality?" Sincere believers in the truth of Christianity instinctively felt that the writer of the epistle, if he had not been an eye witness, would have been a liar. Rather than accept such an immoral act on the part of the author of the epistle, the writing was accepted as authentic in spite of its many contradictions.

It is a well-known fact now that the first centuries were full of such literary productions ascribed to immediate disciples of Jesus and others of his contemporaries, which have deceived people even to our own time, and the so-called second epistle of Peter is one of them.

That this epistle is still accepted as authentic by the majority of Christians is only due to its fortunate admission into the canon and the reason that it is a writing of earnest admonitions only, an epistolary writing, instead of a narrative. In a narration of incidents proofs for unauthenticity could have been found much more easily, as any one knows is the case with regard to the apocryphal gospels which are outside of the New Testament canon. But let us take another example. The book of Daniel in the Old Testament expressly claims to have been written by a certain Daniel living in the time of the Babylonian exile. It is well known now that this book was written almost 400 years later, during the time of the Maccabees. This was even proven to be so by the neo-Platonist Porphyry as early as the third century, for which reason his books were later burned by order of the Emperor Theodosius, in order that his criticism of the book of Daniel should not become generally known. Since the beginning of the last century, however, the authenticity of the book has been given up more and more, and no unprejudiced Bible scholars accept it any longer. And yet that book has misled the most eminent men since it was written, because it exerted such an enormous influence in the formation of Christianity by being the first of the books of the Old Testament to give prominence to the idea of a kingdom coming from heaven through the way Christianity is based upon this book alone. If it had not been appearance of the "Son of Man" in the clouds. We may almost 'or this book and the reverence in which it was held in the time of Jesus on account of its supposedly genuine prophecies, Jesus would very probably never have been moved to his career. We may say that Jesus in believing in the divine character of this book was deluded by it as many others have been since his time. Even such eminently acute minds as Isaac Newton were so misled by the apparently genuine prophecies of the book, which predicted the most minute historical details four hundred years ahead, that he spent much time on this book and considered his calculations based thereon of more value than any of his scientific discoveries. And what an amount of useless work was spent by other men on that book, as well as on the book of Revelation, which is based upon it! And all this was because the unknown author of that book played his part so well in fabricating fictitious prophecies without the least foundation of truth.

Another example: We all know that Deuteronomy came out about 650 B. C., in the reign of the Jewish king Josiah (that is, the essential part of it), in order to influence King Josiah to begin that radical reform which made the temple in Jerusalem the only place of worship and abolished all other places of worship throughout the limits of the kingdom of Judah and those of the former kingdom of Israel. That book was given to King Josiah as a writing which had come down from Moses himself, who had forbidden any other place of worship but the one which Jehovah had chosen, and declared that all the evils had come upon the Hebrews because they had transgressed that command—Deuteronomy being filled with curses predicting in detail what ills would come as a consequence of disobeying this command of Jehovah through his servant Moses.

Until the time of the appearance of Deuteronomy even the most pious Hebrews and prophets had worshiped Jehovah without any scruples in other places outside Jerusalem. They never knew of any such command given by Moses as to worship only in one place and no other. Now with one stroke a matter was introduced which had never been known before. A book purporting to have been written by Moses was suddenly discovered and brought to light. If this wasn't pious fraud, what was it?

Another example: The fourth gospel of the New Testament purports to be a writing of John, a disciple of Jesus, and his most intimate one. Although it does not say this expressly, it is written in such an ingenious way that any reader receives the impression that that gospel had come from the most intimate personal connections with Jesus. This book, on account of its seemingly greater spirituality than the other gospels (though in fact it is very materialistic, as witness the resurrection of Lazarus, already in a state of decomposition) and on account of the very mysterious and mystical air surrounding it, has played its part so well that it has charmed all but the most cool and impartial critics. Only these have seen through its unhistorical garb, and the so-called gospel of John is more and more accepted as a most ingenious fiction on the person of Jesus, with perhaps very little historical fact underlying it.

Now, what are we to call such writings as I have mentioned and which every unprejudiced man now knows to be unauthentic? Can we say that the pretention of being written by men like Moses and Daniel, centuries ahead and prophesying things to happen many centuries later, or pretending to be eye witnesses, as the author of II Peter and the fourth gospel, is only an innocent device which the author has used to express his thoughts and is of no importance at all? Can we say that these unknown writers had to use some external machinery or frame by means of which and in which to set forth their ideas? Are we to think that the authors of these books thought that the garb of their books was of no importance at all, but only the religious and moral ideas uttered in them? Surely not.

It was not for this reason alone—i. e., to have a suitable frame in which to set their ideas, as novelists and poets do—that they chose their special garb, but they knew very well that just the pretense of being genuine prophecies and relating events from eye witnesses would have a most convincing influence upon the reader; that, in fact, this seeming genuineness, so ingeniously worked out, would be the most important thing to the reader.

And if this is so, what else can we call this proceeding but pious fraud? I, at least, do not know of any other term which would describe it more correctly and strikingly.

Most believers in these books believe in them because they sincerely consider them as authentic as they appear to be, and because their minds have not been critically trained. But as soon as they discover their unauthenticity, and are convinced of it after thorough study, their former sincere belief will change into the very natural attitude of righteous anger, because of having been deluded by only apparent truth, and that not only of an insignificant kind but of a kind from which, as long as it seemed to be fact, the most far-reaching and most important inferences were to be drawn.

If, then, the term "pious fraud" is used by advanced thinkers, let us be careful how we condemn them; let us consider that it is the righteous anger of honest, upright and truth-loving minds which lends them to use this expression. . . . .

The great majority of Christians believe in the Bible not in the first place on account of the religious and moral truths in it, but on account of the seemingly divine inspiration found in it. An uncritical mind, for instance, does not know that the whole Hebrew history as represented in the Old Testament as having taken place under the special divine guidance of God, and entirely different from the natural development of any other people, as well as the host of prophecies found in the Old Testament which later were fulfilled, were only a makeup of the Jewish priests after the exile. I am here referring especially to those many prophecies occurring in the historical books, the Pentateuch, etc.—for instance, the prediction of the Macedonian empire already in the time of Moses. (Num. xxiv, 24.) If the origin of these historical books, as the science of biblical criticism teaches it, would be known to the great majority of Christians, there would be nothing but the unanimous outcry of "pious fraud," and this outcry would be fully justified as things are. . . .

The ancient Jewish mind does not seem to have had the least scruple about manufacturing fictitious prophecies and history. And it was equally so with the early Christian writers. Fiction in the cause of religion, pretending to be true history and fact, seemed to them perfectly justifiable. This trait is also reflected to a smaller degree in another way in the New Testament. It is well known that the New Testament writings are filled to the brim with the most unhistorical and unnatural twistings of passages of the Old Testament to suit any idea that is intended to be expressed. This rabbinical art, which to us now is nothing but pure sophistry, was not even disdained by Jesus. The saying of God to Moses: "I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," is cited by him as a proof for personal immortality, although any one knows that nothing of the kind is implied in that passage. But to the times of Jesus and the first Christian centuries such things seemed perfectly natural and right. The modern mind has evolved to the point of a greater scrupulousness in regard to straightforward methods of teaching religious truth, and this without doubt is due to the influence of science upon religion, for science seeks nothing but pure and naked truth and permits not the least prevarication.

The term "pious fraud" is an outflow of this modern, more truthful and scrupulous spirit. This spirit does not use the term indiscriminately for any myth or legend of ancient times which has developed gradually and naturally, but it uses it only when intentionally a false garb has been used for the furtherance of religious purposes, by which consequences have followed which have proved dangerous for the cause of truth.—The Rev. A. Kampmeier, in the Open Court (Chicago).

"THE EGO AND HIS OWN."

Under this title Benj. R. Tucker has published an English translation by Steven T. Byington of Max Stirner's "Der Einzige und sein Eigentum." Stirner, who was born in Bayreuth in 1806 and died in Berlin in 1856, is almost unknown to American readers. Mr. Tucker, in his preface to the book, says:

"The memory of Max Stirner has been virtually extinct for an entire generation. But in the last two decades there has been a remarkable revival of interest, both in the book and in its author. It began in this country with a discussion in the pages of the Anarchist periodical, Liberty, in which Stirner's thought was clearly expounded and vigorously championed by Dr. James L. Walker, who adopted for this discussion the pseudonym "Tak Kak." At that time Dr. Walker was the chief editorial writer for the Galveston News. Some years later he became a practicing physician in Mexico, where he died in 1904. A series of essays which he began in an Anarchist periodical, Egoism, and which he lived to complete, was published after his death in a small volume, 'The Philosophy of Egoism.' It is a very able and convincing exposition of Stirner's teachings, and almost the only one that exists in the English language. But the chief instrument in the revival of Stirnerism was and is the German poet, John Henry Mackay. Very early in his career he met Stirner's name in Lange's 'History of Materialism,' and was moved thereby to read his book. The work made such an impression on him that he resolved to devote a portion of his life to the rediscovery and rehabilitation of the lost and forgotten genius. Through years of toil and correspondence and travel, and triumphing over tremendous obstacles, he carried his task to completion, and his biography of Stirner appeared in Berlin in 1898. It is a tribute to the thoroughness of Mackay's work that since its publication not one important fact about Stirner has been discovered by anybody. . . . 'Der Einzige,' previously obtainable only in an expensive form, was included in Philipp Reclam's 'Universal-Bibliothek,' and this cheap edition has enjoyed a wide and ever-increasing circulation. During the last dozen years the book has been translated twice into French, once into Italian, once into Russian, and possibly into other languages. The Scandinavian critic, Brandes, has written on Stirner. A large and appreciative volume, entitled 'L'Individualisme Anarchiste: Max Stirner,' from the pen of Prof. Victor Basch, of the University of Rennes, has appeared in Paris. Another large and sympathetic volume, 'Max Stirner,' written by Dr. Anselm Ruest, has been published very recently in Berlin. Dr. Paul Eltzbacher, in his work, 'Der Anarchismus,' gives a chapter to Stirner, making him one of the seven typical Anarchists, beginning with William Godwin and ending with Tolstoi, of whom his book treats. There is hardly a notable magazine or review on the continent that has not given at least one leading article to the subject of Stirner."

Mr. J. L. Walker's Introduction displays a masterful grasp of Stirner's central philosophy, as the following quotations attest:

"Fifty years sooner or later can make little difference in the case of a book so revolutionary as this. It saw the light when a so-called revolutionary movement was preparing in men's minds, which agitation was, however, only a disturbance due to desire to participate in government, and to govern and to be governed, in a manner different to that which prevails. The 'revolutionists' of 1848 were bewitched with an idea. They were not at all the masters of ideas. Most of those who since that time have prided themselves upon being revolutionists have been and are likewise but the bondmen of an idea—that of the different lodgment of authority.

"The temptation is, of course, present to attempt an explanation of the central thought of this work; but such an effort appears to be unnecessary to one who has the volume in his hand. The author's care in illustrating his meaning shows that he realized how prone the possessed man is to misunderstand whatever is not moulded according to fashions in thinking. The author's learning was considerable, his command of words and ideas may never be excelled by another, and he judged it needful to develop his argument in manifold ways. . . . .

"Note how comparatively indifferent a matter it is with Stirner that one is an ego, but how all-important it is that one be a self-conscious ego—a self-conscious, self-willed person. Those not self-conscious and self-willed are constantly acting from self-interested motives, but clothing these in various garbs. Watch those people closely in the light of Stirner's teaching, and they seem to be hypocrites, they have so many good moral and religious plans of which self-interest is at the end and bottom; but they, we may believe, do not know that this is more than a coincidence.

"In Stirner we have the philosophical foundation for political liberty. His interest in the practical development of egoism to the dissolution of the State and the union of free men is clear and pronounced, and harmonizes perfectly with the economic philosophy of Josiah Warren. Allowing for difference of temperament and language, there is a substantial agreement between Stirner and Proudhon. Each would be free, and sees in every increase of the number of free people and their intelligence an auxiliary force against the oppressor. But, on the other hand, will any one for a moment seriously contend that Nietzsche and Proudhon march together in general aim and tendency—that they have anything in common except the daring to profane the shrine and sepulchre of superstition? Nietzsche has been much spoken of as a disciple of Stirner, and, owing to favorable callings from Nietzsche's writings, it has occurred that one of his books has been supposed to contain more sense than it really does—so long as one had read only the extracts. . . .

"Stirner loved liberty for himself, and loved to see any and all men and women taking liberty, and he had no lust of power. Democracy to him was sham liberty, egoism the genuine liberty. Nietzsche, on the contrary, pours out his contempt upon democracy because it is not aristocratic. He is predatory to the point of demanding that those who must succumb to feline rapacity shall be taught to submit with resignation. When he speaks of 'Anarchistic dogs' scouring the streets of great civilized cities, it is true the context shows that he means the Communists; but his worship of Napoleon, his bathos of anxiety for the rise of an aristocracy that shall rule Europe for thousands of years, his idea of treating women in the oriental fashion, show that Nietzsche has struck out in a very old path—doing the apotheosis of tyranny. We individual egoistic Anarchists, however, may say to the Nietzsche school, so as not to be misunderstood: We do not ask of the Napoleons to have pity, nor of the predatory barons to do justice. They will find it convenient for their own welfare to make terms with men who have learned of Stirner what a man can be who worships nothing, bears allegiance to nothing. To Nietzsche's rhodomontade of eagles in baronial form, born to prey on industrial lambs, we rather tauntingly oppose the ironical question: Where are your claws? What if the 'eagles' are found to be plain barnyard fowls on which more silly fowls have fastened steel spurs to hack the victims, who, however, have the power to disarm the sham 'eagles' between two suns?

"Stirner shows that men make their tyrants as they make their gods, and his purpose is to unmake tyrants. Nietzsche dearly loves a tyrant. . . .

"Stirner's attitude toward woman is not special. She is an individual if she can be, not handicapped by anything he says, feels, thinks, or plans. This was more fully exemplified in his life than even in this book; but there is not a line in the book to put or keep woman in an inferior position to man, neither is there anything of caste or aristocracy in the book. . . .

"On the practical side of the question of egoism versus self-surrender and for a trial of egoism in politics, this may be said: the belief that men not moved by a sense of duty will be unkind or unjust to others is but an indirect confession that those who hold that belief are greatly interested in having others live for them rather than for themselves. But I do not ask or expect so much. I am content if others individually live for themselves, and thus cease in so many ways to act in opposition to my living for myself—to our living for ourselves. . . .

"Several passages in this most remarkable book show the author as a man full of sympathy. When we reflect upon his deliberately expressed opinions and sentiments—his spurning of the sense of moral obligation as the last form of superstition—may we not be warranted in thinking that the total disappearance of the sentimental supposition of duty liberates a quantity of nervous energy for the purest generosity and clarifies the intellect for the more discriminating choice of objects of merit?"

"The Ego and His Own" is a book of 325 pages, including an index by Mr. Byington. Its price is $1.50 and $1.75, according to binding, and may be ordered of the publisher, Benj. R. Tucker, P. O. Box 1312, New York City.

It is noteworthy, nevertheless, that the freest countries in the world have the most divorces. In countries where a woman can earn her own living she will not consent to live her whole life with an unfaithful or tyrannous husband. The growing economic independence of woman is just as great a cause of divorce as the decline of a belief in marriage as an irrevocable sacrament.—Chicago Tribune (editorial).

When we have a real desire for knowledge we shall learn how to love, and how to go on loving throughout life.—Dora Forster.

The savage bows down to idols of wood and stone; the civilized man to idols of flesh and blood.—G. B. Shaw.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Six months .....50 cents Three months.....25 cents
One year .....$1.00 Single copies ..... 5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

GOSSIP FROM LOS ANGELES.

"My days, my weeks, my months, my years,
Fly rapid as the rolling spheres"—

Thus sings the poet, and though not a poet nor the son of a poet I can echo this sentiment with appreciative earnestness. Three months ago today I landed in Los Angeles, expecting to stay not exceeding two months, then to move on to San Diego; thence northward to San Francisco, Portland, Tacoma and Seattle. Now the prospect of getting away from this city and from southern California seems as uncertain as ever, if not more so. The organization and welfare of the Los Angeles branch of the National Eugenic Association has been and still is my chief concern here, but not my whole concern. By the courtesy of Dr. Windsor, the most famous of living phrenologists and one of the chief exponents of the Genetic school of philosophy, as first taught by Samuel T. Fowler, of Philadelphia, I have joined his Los Angeles class and have been a regular attendant thereof for some time past. So well has the Genetic philosophy been received here that Dr. Windsor now thinks of spending the whole of the month of May in this city, and perhaps longer.

So closely allied is Genetics with Eugenics that Dr. Windsor has been one of our principal speakers on the Eugenic platform for a month or more. Last Wednesday evening he spoke more than one hour before our club on the need of freedom of speech and of the press in connection with the study of all social problems and especially those most intimately connected with reproduction of the race. At our next meeting he is billed to speak on the "Need of Intelligent Fatherhood."

At our last meeting, in answer to urgent requests I read the two articles entitled "The Fatherhood Question," by T. U. A., and "More Thoughts on Sexology," by Sarah C. Campbell, the publication of which articles constituted the alleged cause of my recent imprisonment at Joliet, Ill., and Leavenworth, Kan. The other speakers at that meeting were Prof. Edgar L. Larkin, of Lowe Observatory, and Dr. Adah S. H. Patterson, who is acting president of the Los Angeles Eugenic Society, with Prof. Larkin honorary president. The utterances of all these speakers were warmly applauded by the large audience, so large that the platform and aisles of the hall were crowded with attentive and eager listeners.

By invitation of Dr. Whiting, president of the Los Angeles Osteopathic College, I am expected to address the students of that large and flourishing institution on Tuesday afternoon of this week. Then I have agreed to visit Glen Ivy Hot Springs, near Corona, Cal., and spend some time at that place, by invitation of one of the proprietors, who promises to pay all expenses of the trip to the springs and return to Los Angeles.

After that trip I am by promise bound to visit San Fernando, a town about twenty miles north of this city; also Long Beach and Hermosa Beach, to the westward, besides several more points within a radius of twenty-five miles of this the greatest city of southern California, and by some people considered scarcely second in population and commercial importance to San Francisco.

As a winter health resort and as a meeting place for national conventions of all sorts, Los Angeles easily takes the first place of all the cities of the United States, as I think. Just now great preparations are being made to entertain the Shriners, with illuminations and civic honors somewhat similar, it would seem, to the scenes witnessed annually at New Orleans at the time of Mardi Gras.

Then immediately following the week of the Shriners will come the "Mothers' Congress," a national organization concerning which I hope to have something more to say later. Just now I must stop this string of gossip and look after other matters. M. H.

LOIS WAISBROOKER'S LECTURE ON "EUGENICS."

By Lillie D. White.

The meeting of the Social Science League of Chicago on Sunday evening, April 28, was one of unusual interest. Lois Waisbrooker gave a lecture on "Eugenics, or Human-Culture," which was received with hearty appreciation. She opposes the position of those students and organizers of eugenic societies who believe that the human race can be improved by legislation or "a strict censorship of marriage laws." She has little respect for the plans and decisions of scientists, doctors, phrenologists, skilled mentalists, or teachers who presume to be able to decide on the fitness of lovers to become parents. She believes that even the mother herself may cause more evil than good by directing her thought or conduct along any line or plane having for its object a special influence on her child. To do or refrain from doing anything with the sole purpose of affecting the child in some way will often, if not always, bring about the opposite result.

The woman who for her own sake seeks the best development of her health and strength and activity of mind and body possesses a good basis for motherhood. The mother who refuses to submit to her husband's demands, who willingly assumes her responsibilities, who loves her coming child at every stage of its growth, may feel that she has done her part and can safely leave the rest to nature. And nature in doing her work resents the guidance of men, however learned and well-meaning, who presume to interfere.

The lecture in itself was most interesting and instructive and thoroughly enjoyed by all. But what called out the admiration and reverence of the hearers with something of a touch of awe and sadness was the personality of the speaker. She is almost eighty-three years old and has been quite ill this winter, besides having been injured by a fall some months ago. She appears weak and frail in body, but her mind is as active and vigorous as ever and her voice was remarkable in its strength and clearness. She spoke for an hour, not once failing to be heard distinctly in every part of the hall, which was well filled.

Mrs. Waisbrooker will leave to the world the splendid legacy of her valuable and forceful contributions to the literature of sexology. In her own life she gives us a rare example of energy, determination and courage. Her friends feel that she deserves the best blessings and comforts of life, and regret that in her declining years she is unable to live in comfort and carry on the work which is her pleasure. Her present address is 653 Walnut street, Chicago, Ill. Her only income is from the sale of her books and whatever contributions her friends and admirers wish to bestow. She wishes to publish her lecture on "Eugenics, or Human-Culture," and whoever feels inclined to help her will be more than repaid by the thought of helping along the progress of truth and knowledge.

"Let the history of our practice of book-burning serve to help us to keep our minds open with regard to anomalies which may still exist among us, descended from as suspicious an origin, and as little supported by reason."—Farrer.

"Dissent, after having long been an unquestionable crime, has ended by becoming almost a cornerstone of the glory of our civilization. * * *"—Patterson.

THE SEX QUESTION AND SOCIALISM.

By E. B. Kerr.

Dear LUCIFER: In No. 1089 Helen Untermann accuses me of ignoring the economic side of the sex question. I do not; on the contrary, I have often discussed it in LUCIFER and elsewhere. But I differ from Mrs. Untermann in my conclusions. She thinks that without Socialism nothing can be done to make women economically independent. I think that even under the present system women are gradually becoming economically independent, because they are being admitted to an ever-increasing number of occupations in which they can earn their living. Moreover, the Neomalthusian movement is forcing countries like England and France to provide public meals and nurseries for children, and to discuss the question of payment of mothers, and no doubt the same tendency will soon appear in America. Thus I consider that the economic side of the sex question is being gradually settled under our eyes.

Let me say, however, that even under present economic conditions a much happier sex system is possible. I know many persons who have settled the sex question as perfectly as they could under any economic system, and the number of such is increasing every day. These persons do not differ from their conventional neighbors in their economic circumstances. I believe that their experiments are of great value to mankind, and I believe that what hundreds have done and thousands are doing, millions can do.

Even if LUCIFER discussed nothing but purely sexual problems, I think it would be engaged in a very important work. What would Mrs. Untermann think of anybody who wrote to a medical journal and said that doctors were wasting their time in discussing disease and sanitation, because most patients were too poor to follow their advice, and that what was needed was to turn all medical journals into Socialist papers? I think Mrs. Untermann would see the absurdity of such a contention. Yet her remarks in LUCIFER are just as unreasonable. There are certain biological and psychological laws relating to sex which remain unchanged under all economic systems. There are certain laws of heredity which govern the breeding of the race under all conditions, and certain sexual needs which exist in all states of society. What we want is to study the laws of sex by observation, experiment and inference, and then modify our economic system in such a way as to produce sexual health.

Mrs. Untermann says that I "always emphasize the physical portion of sex." I do not; it is Mrs. Untermann who does that. I suppose Mrs. Untermann has read the story of the Garden of Eden and the forbidden fruit. If the fruit had not been forbidden Eve would probably never have looked at it, but, unfortunately, God emphasized it so that it was impossible not to think about it. Maybe Mrs. Untermann has heard of Blue Beard, who gave his wives the keys of all the rooms and allowed them to enter all but one, but this so emphasized that room in the minds of all the women that they had no rest until they had entered it. Did Mrs. Untermann ever read in the Bible that "stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant"? The man who wrote that knew something about emphasis. No, it is not I who emphasize the physical portion of sex. The persons who do that are those who try to make something unique and peculiar of that portion; who say that variety is bad in that, though good in all other things; who call a person who sticks to one in that matter "loyal" and "true," although they would call anyone an idiot who did any other thing with only one person. Such are the persons who emphasize the physical portion of sex. The result is the same as with Blue Beard's wives. The world is sex-mad; the only thing it can think of is the physical portion of sex. Every friendship between a man and a woman is dominated by their intense consciousness of the physical portion of sex. Either they feel a curiosity and desire on the physical plane, or they feel suspicion and reserve for fear that something might happen or that somebody might say something. The other day I heard an elderly lady of wide experience say that platonic friendship was impossible. So it is, and it will be as long as people like Mrs. Untermann continue to emphasize the physical portion of sex. But when we have a race of people who calmly accept the law of variety as a universal law of biology and psychology, which admits of no exceptions; who realize that the physical portion of sex has nothing whatever to do with the truth or loyalty of anybody; who consider the physical manifestation of sex as merely one among many manifestations, calling for no special attention at all; then for the first time the physical portion of sex will sink to its natural level and will no longer dominate the minds of men, and there will be many love affairs in which neither party will ever think about the physical portion of sex at all.

Mrs. Untermann admits that "there are men and women whose physical and mental make-up compels them to have more than one mate," but she says that this is due to the "dissipating tendencies of the historical development through which mankind has passed." Mrs. Untermann must have observed that there are also persons whose physical and mental make-up compels them to love more than one tune, to read more than one book, to enjoy more than one view, to love change of diet, change of air, and goodness knows what else. Do these weaknesses also result from the dissipating tendencies of historical development? Are we to suppose that under Socialism all such frailties will be unknown?

THE EARLY CHRISTIAN WOMAN.

Miss Hildegarde Hawthorne, who is not the least in need of the reflected glory which shines upon her from illustrious literary ancestors, writes charming book reviews for the Times. She is liberal and up-to-date and sweet withal, says Bertha W. Howe, in the Truth Seeker. A few weeks ago her subject was a recent book by a man with many affixes to his name, James Donaldson, M. A., LL. D. The book is "Woman: Her Position in Ancient Greece and Rome and among the Early Christians." At the end of a delightful review of that part of the book which deals with a time preceding the beginning of the Christian era, in which the magic names of Aspasia of Miletus, the Lesbian poetess Sappho, Portia, and others attract the imagination, she takes up Dr. Donaldson's discussion of woman after the advent of Christianity:

"It is popularly supposed that the advent of Christianity worked a mighty change for the better in the status of women. Dr. Donaldson does not agree with this view. During the first three centuries of the Christian era he finds her position lower and the notions regarding her more degraded than previously. The growing strength of asceticism bore a large part in this result. The exclusion of women from any participation in teaching or serving religion—unless it were as a martyr in the Roman Coliseum—worked to the same end. Woman's beauty came to be regarded as in itself sinful. The healthy pagan attitude toward marriage and child-bearing was anathema to these newcomers in the world's arena.

"'Marriage even for the sake of children was a carnal indulgence, and such thinkers could not help thinking that the arrangements of the Creator were not wholly satisfactory. They did not dare to condemn marriage, but they held that it was much better not to marry at all—that the man or woman who did not marry was a nobler and more exalted being than the man or woman who did.'

"This St. Anthony fear of the female sex could have but one result. A contempt for women, a misprision of the family sense. A hectic feeling supervened. Children were a proof of weak self-indulgence, if not actual immorality. Woman became, in the words of Tertullian:

"'An Eve. The sentence of God on this sex of yours lives in this age; the guilt must of necessity live too. You are the devil's gateway; you are the unsealer of the forbidden tree; you are the first deserter of the divine law; you are she who persuaded him whom the devil was not valiant enough to attack. You destroyed so easily God's image. On account of your desert, that is death, even the Son of man had to die.'

"These are hard words and bespeak a hard condition. Poor woman had to begin all over again. Once more the weary path must be traversed, once more the shackles must be worn through, once more she must endeavor to make of her jailer and master her helper and friend. Nearly two thousand years have passed and she is well on her way again. This book, with its succinct portrayal of what the Greek and Roman accomplished, has great interest. They did not shun the emotions nor functions of womanhood. They were healthy and beautiful, they bore healthy and beautiful children, they filled their minds with the divine words of philosophy and poetry. It was as women they excelled, and they left a pattern behind which is still an inspiration. We have our own task of fulfillment, and no one can accomplish it for us, either by act of parliament or gallantry. It was an ardent generosity and love of beauty that made Sappho and her Grecian sisters what they were. It was her nobility and courage that gave the Roman woman her freedom. Not by small means nor narrow hearts are great deeds achieved. This is said to be woman's age. May it, two thousand years hence, have as fine a story to tell, and find as sympathetic a teller as this story of long dead women has found in Dr. Donaldson!"

"For my part I am certain that God hath given us reason to discover between truth and falsehood, and he that makes not this use of it, but believes things he knows not why, I say it is chance that he believes the truth and not by choice, and I cannot but fear that God will not accept this sacrifice of fools."—Chillingsworth.

A taste for books is the pleasure and glory of my life. I would not exchange it for the riches of the Indies.—Gibbon.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers to this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

To the Editor: Recently I received a copy of LUCIFER and inclose 25 cents for short subscription. I do not know just what the aim of LUCIFER is regarding marriage institutions, but I noticed several religious sentiments that I can endorse. I believe the superstition of Christianity is the greatest boulder in the way of morality and intelligence to-day. What monarchy and Confucianism have done for China, Rooseveltism and Christianity are doing for America. I have just been sending a protest to our local paper regarding the tendency of Christians to impart their superstitions on our public school children. They would be quick to protest if by any chance a school board should employ a Mohammedan, and he should proceed to teach the Koran as the word of God, and have the school sing hymns setting forth the beauties of the Mohammedan religion. Believing you are working for a higher civilization, I am, very truly yours.—Julia C. Coon, Bartow, Fla.

To the Editor: The issue of April 11 is the best number I've seen. If you're going to keep it up I must subscribe, and do herewith. Widen the circle of your influence, double and treble your subscribers. You can by such thoughtful discussion of the sex question from differing viewpoints. Mrs. Untermann thinks and writes with ability and has fairness of spirit; so also Gladys Lamb and yourself. Mr. Kerr is more positive in his views. Such a fine quartet can keep the ball going for some time. There's Laura Smith Wood, whose Whitmanesque poems on motherhood show a very precious gift of insight and expression. Many today are looking for light. Make of the Light-Bearer more of an open forum, taking care that the speakers have something to say.

If "the well-known book of Ruedebusch" is the best on the subject of sex I want it and am ready to pay a reasonable price for a copy in fair condition, new or second-hand. Can you not get hold of a copy for me?—William A. Fisher, Boston, Mass.

Lillian Harman: I write you for the 64-page pamphlet entitled "The Persecution and the Appreciation." Find enclosed 20 cents to pay for same. I am a Socialist and reader of the Appeal to Reason, where I saw notice of your grand old father's release from his malicious persecution. His incarceration was a most infernal outrage on his personal liberties. Your father is a grand, liberty-loving patriot and far in advance of any of his persecutors. They should ever be heartily ashamed of their treatment of their superior, Moses Harman. Tell your father that I did what I could to secure his release from that prison pen at Joliet. I circulated a petition to that Ted Ruzvlt for his pardon and got 106 signatures, all good and true. But the "trust buster," having dried up the milk of human kindness, could not condescend to help us in our humanitarian work. I did not vote for Teddie and will not have that sin to answer for. Just think of his treatment of Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone, the three martyrs to liberty and freedom like Moses Harman. But pardon me for this digression—I want your 64-page pamphlet. Send it on and much oblige. Yours, etc.—William M. Lee, Terre Haute, Ind.

To the Editor: No doubt the readers of LUCIFER have made themselves acquainted with the proceedings of that "farce comedy drama" recently enacted in a New York law court, entitled "The Thaw Trial." It was intended that one Harry K. Thaw be tried for murder, but the law, seeing that the defendant was a millionaire, and not wanting to tread on the dignity nor the rights of American money, changed the indictment, and proceeded to try the culprit's wife for virtue and morals. The law has made Evelyn Nesbit Thaw the real defendant in the case and not Harry K. Thaw, as was intended. The whole proceeding has been nothing less than a humorous farce. Harry K. Thaw tells us that he shot and killed Stanford White because he had "ruined his wife and robbed her of her honor." Thaw also tells us the killing of White was an act of Providence. Then I suggest that "Providence"—whoever he is—be immediately arrested and brought to trial. Murder is murder, no matter who commits it. The next part of the farce is when this "Christian nation" makes believe to be shocked at the confession and revelation of acts which it well knows are committed every day in the year and which are commended and defended and sanctioned by their own foundation of morals, the Bible, and their own cruel, merciless God. Our stupid unsocial customs, conventionalities and manners; our heartless, cruel industrial, social and economic system of slavery; our false modesty and morals; our societies for the promotion of sex ignorance (under the guise of the "prevention of vice societies") and prevention of knowledge, are the direct cause of Stanford White tragedies and Thaw trials. Stanford White and Evelyn Nesbit were no better nor worse than the rest of us. We are all human and of the same flesh and blood. We are all liable to error and mistakes. Yes, even the judge and jury and attorneys in the Thaw trial case. We are all victims of the same conditions, surroundings and environment. Evelyn Nesbit and Stanford White might say to the American people, "Those of you that are without guilt, let 'em cast the first stone." If we are to do away with mental and sexual perverts, if we are to do away with prostitution, debauchery and crime, we must do away with conditions that produce such. We must have a free press, free speech, economic and industrial and social freedom, free access to all knowledge; nothing short of this will suffice.—James Meyers, Jardine, Most.

To the Editor: In simplicity lies all truth. Simple axioms are world-builders, seeds of life sown in the soil of human hearts. From the "Love one another," uttered by the loving Christ, the spiritual world of our planet received its first impulse. "Eppur se muove," said Galileo, and the mental world was electrified. Now comes Moses Harman, with his "Right to be born well," and the physical world is quickened. From this trinity is formed the individual, and in the harmonious vibrations of these three worlds is centered immortality. The tuning-fork of our being is purity. So, then, the first requirement for a child to be born well is purity in the authors of his being, an all-round purity of soul, of mind, of body, so that the cosmic force finds free play through their organism in its entirety. In the direction of purity should the effort of the true, intelligent and earnest reformer be bent. If man will not accept it of his own free will he must be compelled to it by removing from his life all that is antagonistic to its attainment. Purge the world, cleanse it through every channel and every pore; destroy all obstructions; alter and revitalize its sluggish fluids, instead of clogging its system with the poisons of liquor, tobacco and debauchery, its concomitant; then, and then only, can it be made possible for the child to be born well. Let the word free love be changed to pure love, and as example is really the only teacher, let us begin with our own lives. All hail to the child of Purity.—Flora McPhillips, Carmel, Cal.

To the Editor: As the champion of variety, Brother Kerr, seems to meet with but little opposition, permit me to throw a few thoughts his way. We are indebted to Franklin for the saying that we can no more think alike than we can look alike. To this truism I will add: or feel alike. There are men who are natural born varietists, for they have but little conception of love that goes deeper than physical attraction; and many women are fitted for just such mates, for they, too, are undeveloped in their love natures. To all such only one way is open—to live in accord with their nature and the condition reached in the process of evolution. But the man or woman who has found in his or her mate all that love can give or soul can crave cannot become a varietist, for the good and sufficient reason that no desire exists to impel. When and where true soul love exists between a man and woman—I use the term soul to express the deepest feelings which we are capable of experiencing—there is no more desire for sex relations with another party than there is to consume two full meals at one sitting, to seek the presence of a red-hot stove in July, or to do anything else that would be contrary to comfort. Nothing is more evident to me than the fact that no hard and fast rule can be made to fit all mankind in anything, and sex relations are no exception. There will always be varietists, without much doubt, and there will likewise be those to whom variety will present no charm. Comparatively few, under conditions that compel marriage for convenience, a home or livelihood, that induce it for position, wealth or influence, find happy and harmonious mateship. But there are those who do, and when by nature both are monogamists they have got all their cup of joy and pleasure can hold. Take the case of Andrew Jackson, who, when his wife suddenly died, though a man of iron will and courage that never faltered in time of danger, became a changed man in a day and was never the same afterwards. Does any one suppose that the idea of variety would have found a welcome in his brain, or hers, when living?

No; they were mated; were harmonious and satisfied. They touched the limit of joy; knew the greatest depth of love. Several years ago a man's wife died in this city and he was confined to his bed at the same time with nothing considered serious. When the full realization of his bereavement struck him he said: "Do not be in a hurry about the funeral; my end is near," and the next day his death occurred. It is unnecessary to remark that such love was not of the variety kind. There are many men and women so perfectly mated—some are not married, oh, horrors!—that they find in each other's companionship full, complete and lasting joys, and it will require an abler exponent of variety than Brother Kerr to convince them they need a change. To those who have never done so I would suggest the reading of "Primitive Love and Love Stories," by Finck, giving special attention to what he says of romantic and conjugal love. I know of no book dealing with human sex love that equals it, and the author is not a varietist.—Chauncy Severance, Los Angeles, Cal.

To the Editor: Occasionally we are called upon to reach forth in happy anticipation toward some new publication that is being launched upon the sea of public opinion. Cheerfully we proceed to give nourishment to the puny infant; we are lenient toward its feeble outcries and its deficiencies, always hoping for an expression of some little good from it. Sometimes we are repaid a la the snake that rewards us after its fashion.

We anticipated glowing things from the Woman's National Daily. When it editorially counseled us to read the Bible, pointing out to us what it thought good therein, we tolerated the presumption, thereby turning the other cheek. We are beginning to grow indifferent and the great things are not transpiring, and still every imposition that is presented us dopes has been submissively endured—not that we were enamored of the platitudes in its columns, but expressly to lend it a helping hand, to tide it over toward greater strength for good to womankind.

In the edition for April 4 there appeared an editorial under the caption of "Anarchy and Education." How any sane woman can read this article, which so unreasonably attacks two eminent women, and still persist in tolerating this flabby paper, with its hay-fever fiction, its impossible fashion plates, and its namby-pamby paragraphs, is more than a Cagliostro can tell. What must be the rank and file who endure such vituperations? As Pope says, "What must be the priest where the monkey is a god?"

The editor heard a false alarm. Some one said that Emma Goldman was to deliver a lecture or a series of lectures to the students of Chicago University, at which he goes frantic and says: "Emma Goldman does not preach peace and contentment to her hearers; she harangues them in the interest of lawlessness, as her proud title, 'The Queen of the Anarchists,' proclaims. She strives to inculcate the doctrine of hatred, not the idea of love and forbearance. Her theory is that every man should have his hand against every other man. She has gone to greater lengths than any other woman ever dared go in this country against the established order of things, with the possible exception of the notoriously ignorant and vicious Lucy Parsons. She is a dangerous woman, in that she is not like the rest of her class, without a certain amount of intelligence, and has by attrition if not through the regular channels of education attached a veneer of education that makes a considerable number of unthinking people look upon her as a smart woman," etc.

Wouldn't this man make women stand around if he could! No man need presume to intimate what a woman may think, nor try to control her mental condition, for our first command is that we must grow, and we progress in accordance with our environments. Are not the conditions that made Emma Goldman and Lucy Parsons to espouse the cause they did to be condemned, rather than the women themselves? A Socialist is not to be condemned. The pity is rather that conditions are as they are, thus producing such a horrid crop of Socialists and Anarchists! In sickness we don't say such and such symptoms are to be condemned, but we recognize them, we take the hint, and through these symptoms we reach the seat of disorder and treat accordingly. Emma Goldman and Lucy Parsons are only symptoms of the social disorder of our great body politic, and it were worth our while to take the hint and treat accordingly. It is my greatest desire that no woman will contribute financial or any other aid to an editor who is so medieval that he has just found something good in the Bible for us, and whose great delight seems to be to slander women. Let us no longer flatter him into thinking that his paper will creep into our dreary lives like a gleam of celestial sunshine.—Anna Stockinger, Versailles, Ind.

"UNDESIRABLE CITIZENS."

President Roosevelt's denunciation of Moyer and Haywood, the Idaho prisoners, as "undesirable citizens," recalls the fact that Mr. Roosevelt once regarded Governor Altgeld as an "undesirable citizen." And so did the pro-slavery mob of Boston regard William Lloyd Garrison. Garrison's offending was to the pro-slavery interests of his time similar to the offending of men like the Idaho prisoners in Roosevelt's time. The question of murder is not involved in their case. They have not been convicted of murder, and presumptively they are innocent. But the point of view is involved in both cases. In Garrison's day men were in slavery, and Garrison demanded their freedom. Whether Garrison was a desirable citizen or not depended upon the point of view. To slaveholders, whose property in human chattels he menaced, he was an "undesirable citizen." But was he so to the slave? In our day great masses of men are forced by subtler methods to yield a lion's share of the products of their labor to the owners of legal privileges. These privileges are akin to the legal privileges of the old slave owners; they enable the privileged to live in the sweat of other men's faces. Against this subtler slavery the Idaho prisoners have struggled as Garrison did against chattel slavery. Are they therefore "undesirable citizens"? It depends upon the point of view. To the beneficiaries of these subtler privileges they are doubtless as "undesirable citizens" as were Garrison and his confreres to the slave oligarchy. But what of the toiling victims of their privileges? And for which does Mr. Roosevelt speak? Which point of view is his? When he goes out of his way to throw into the balance the influence of his great office against these men on trial for their lives upon accusation of a crime of which he has no special reason to believe them guilty, and of which they are presumptively innocent, does he speak for slave class or for master class? for the poor who are despoiled or for rich despoiler? for producer or parasite? for the sons of Martha or the confederates of Guggenheim?—The Public.

THE PERSECUTION AND THE APPRECIATION.

A report of the reception to Moses Harman at Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, Jan. 3, 1907, is now ready for delivery. It is a booklet of sixty-four pages, containing speeches by Paul Tyner, Walter Henry MacPherson, Lucinda B. Chandler, Gertrude Breslau Hunt, Parker H. Sercombe, and Moses Harman; also letters from absent friends, newspaper reports, etc., and pictures of Lucinda B. Chandler, Kiichi Kaneko and Parker H. Sercombe. Two portraits of Mr. Harman are given; one, with grandson, taken in January, 1907, has never before been published. We hope this will be an effective document for wide distribution. Price, per dozen, $1.25; single copies, 20 cents.

We have sent out over 700 free copies of this pamphlet and expect to circulate many more in the same way. The expense of publication and circulation is quite heavy and we gladly accept coöperation in the work. Those who are interested are requested to send names of persons to whom they think copies should be sent. Inability to assist financially should not deter friends from sending such names to us.

> Then was not guilty shame. Dishonest shame
> Of nature's works, honor dishonorable,
> Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind
> With shows instead, mere shows of seeming pure,
> And banished from man's life his happiest life,
> Simplicity and spotless innocence!
>
> —Milton.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE FREE SPEECH LEAGUE invites correspondence, coöperation, and membership of all who claim rights, and dare maintain them.

Join us. Help us. Get our list of books. Read them—pass them on. Liberty tracts by Ingersoll, Wakeman, Walker, Pentecost, Darrow, Post and Schroeder. Read "Our Vanishing Liberty of Press" (5c) and "Do You Want Free Speech?" (10c) and so learn WHY YOU SHOULD ACT WITH US.

FREE SPEECH LEAGUE, 120 Lexington avenue, New York.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 412 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 232 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

Parental Rights and Economic Wrongs.

BY VIRGINIA M. BUTTERFIELD.

The purpose of this book is to discuss the ethics of optional motherhood as the result of optional conception. It is meant to show both the short-sightedness and injustice of the policy by which any effort to control conception, in the interest of purposeful and responsible parenthood, race-improvement, and child-happiness, is classed with criminal abortion.

Motherhood is at present compulsory, since all effort to control conception is forbidden, and even all discussion of the possibility or righteousness of so doing is regarded as immoral. This is not only injurious to the race, working evil and unhappiness in a multiplicity of ways to every man, woman and child in the world, but is totally unnecessary as well.

Humanity has been so long accustomed to deny its own right of volition in the matter of parenthood, and also to consider sinful even the desire to exercise such right, that no radical improvement in conditions can take place until men and women recognize the legitimacy and morality of purposeful parenthood.—Author's Preface.

Bound in gray linen. 96 pages. Price, 50 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

You Need It.

There are but two classes of people, those who think and those who should. Whether you belong to one or the other, you need The Stellar Ray. It presents the best of higher thought in will power, astral science, occultism, etc.

OUR SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS.

Fifteen months for $1 (begin with the January number if you desire and if you let us know soon); foreign, 50c extra.

The magazine and our Pocket Dictionary of Astrological Terms (regular price for two, $1.50), both for $1.25 (foreign, $1.75).

We can furnish you with the lowest clubbing rates with any of the contemporary magazines.

The magazine free for one year with every Five-Dollar Horoscope cast by our Astral Science Department. This is run on the same high standard as the magazine. Write now and say you saw it in LUCIFER.

THE STELLAR RAY,
The Magazine for Thinkers.
Hodges Building. Detroit, Mich.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tuns. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 20c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses.

BY E. C. WALKER.

Contents—Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What Is She? What Will She Be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinions of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections Upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love and Life." Price 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

An Essay on the Duty of Civil Disobedience.

BY HENRY D. THOREAU.

A reprint of this classic essay on the supremacy of the individual conscience. Antique paper; artistic covers, dark green on olivine. 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25c each.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Weitstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61, BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1091

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

THOSE INTERESTED in the Independence of Woman should read Albert Chavannes' "Lizzie Mahon," the girl who, though condemned by the world, kept her rightful place in the community. Also read "In Brighter Climes; or, Life Under New Conditions." The earth book, or both for 25c. Send for catalogue to MRS. C. CHAVANNES, 308 Fourth avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.

WANTED—A BRIGHT WOMAN, with or without money, as partner in a Turkish bath and sanitarium business, in a large eastern city, by a middle-aged man of good habits and business ability, owning a suitable building and possessing unusual facilities and knowledge for pushing the same to success. Object, matrimony. Must be intelligent, refined, a blonde, between 25 and 35, desiring a congenial companion, business a blonde, between 25 and 35, desiring a congenial companion, preferred. This is an unusually good opening for a progressive physician, osteopath, or one who believes in the prevention as well as the cure of disease by natural methods, without drugs. Address, giving full description of self, with photo in first letter, T. B., care 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Natural Rights.

BY M. KUHN.

A little book so small that it is full—so full that it is big. "Natural Rights" should be read by every man and woman, young or old, married or single, capable of thinking. It throws a limelight on many things of intense interest. Just from the press. Small edition. Autograph copies, consecutively numbered, bound in paper, postpaid, 10c, silver or stamps. Order now. Address

M. KUHN, North St. Paul, Minn.

Mother Earth.

Monthly Magazine devoted to Social Science and Literature. Published at 210 East Thirteenth street, New York City. Emma Goldman, publisher. Price, $1 per year; 10c per copy.

MOTHER EARTH'S PAMPHLETS.

The Mastery of Life. By Maxim Gorky. Only translation of the original. Price, 10c.

The Criminal Anarchy Law on Suppressing the Advocacy of Crime. By Theodore Schroeder. Price, 5c. 90

The Occidental Mystic and Western Spiritualist.

A 36-page monthly, devoted to the consideration of spiritualism and the occult sciences.

Clean, bright and filled from cover to cover with original matter from able contributors. Issued on the 1st of each month. $1 a year; single copy, 10c.

ARTHUR S. HOWE, Editor and Publisher,
142 S. Broadway, Room 107, Los Angeles, Cal.

Correspondence Club.

Open to those who desire to improve, and to discuss subjects of interest with kindred minds. Editor of this paper says the secretary is worthy of confidence. For particulars, enclose stamp to C. A. KIME, Sec., Box 723, Mitchell, S. D.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,
For the Supreme and Superwoman and The New Civilization,
2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, MAY 23, E. M. 397 [C. E. 1907]. WHOLE NO. 1092

A LITTLE LAW AND GOSPEL.

According to Ann.

Sometimes they tell us that religions live while there is good in them. No doubt, no doubt; and furthermore, the ghosts remain in standing among country folk until school houses put them out of business there; a parasite will grow upon a tree—as long as there is any good in the tree—until you pull the bad growth off; a plant will grow up white and spindling in the dark until the wall is torn away and light flows in. Doesn't prove, does it, that there is anything inherently to be admired in hobgoblins, in army worms, or clergymen?

The Christian religion sometimes serves to keep the surface of society presentable, so far as it prevents, through fear, the breaking out of symptoms of ill health; thus we often say that the patient is doing nicely, while the truth is the measles have struck in.

The majority of physicians of this school are not well read enough to diagnose disease; they often say that sturdy men should be in bed, or actually come round with bell and book to read the funeral service to the well; or when they come across a damp, unwholesome spot that breeds malaria of mind, they are usually too intent on fees to offend the owner of the land by calling for the health department. They vaccinate their patients with a decoction of awful selfishness which makes a man rejoice to think that he is headed straight for heaven while "sinners" fry in hell; with conceit, intolerance, superstition and indifference to the only time that we are sure of—which is right now, this very moment, by the clock. Where these practitioners are fattest and most numerous their clients are invariably the leanest and the most unkempt.

This system of medicine contains no good prescription that is not put up in less adulterated form after a dozen other codes. In vain they tell us that it is the only honest cure for everything, and vilify, burn and ostracize as quacks all those who do not recognize their diplomas and their sacred pellet-cases. Good sirs, our reading and our observation teach us there is something wrong about a remedy which does not cure, and which is so advertised is to make well people think themselves in danger of an everlasting death. Away with drugs and leave us free at last to try the nature and the science cure.

Once I went into the Art Institute and wandered off into the statuary wing. Very warm and sunny it was there in the corridor; out of the great windows one saw the sky so blue, and a marble goddess smiled at me with all the amiability you can conceive. Perhaps at length, then, one had gotten back to Greece?

Presently a man came from one direction and a woman from another, and they chanced to meet in front of the kind deity. They looked at her, observed the slenderness of her attire, and then they looked at one another, and they laughed. It was not a nice laugh, and it woke me up. No, certainly one was not in Greece, nor yet in France or Italy, but here in the land of Anthony, of drapery, and Thaw.

I did not think this vulgar little incident illustrative of the innate badness of the human mind; what else, pray tell, can you expect of folk who read a "holy" book which tells them point-blank that the human figure is a shameful thing?

A clergyman dropped into my den the other day, and beholding a Royeroft calendar upon the desk, a postcard with Brother Elbert's likeness on the wall, and a package of Philistines among my books, "Ah," said the little man, "you are one of those Elbert Hubbard persons, then!" "Certainly," confessed Ann, with some promptitude, "and, sir, are you not among the number of the faithful?" "Good gracious, no!" responded Clericus, "I think that Elbert Hubbard is a profane and vulgar man."

Now, the wise person attempteth not to argue with a clergyman, knowing full well that if he had the ability to reason he would not be engaged in weekly exhortations of the beloved; but see with what engaging freedom this black-coated one made comment on the things that pleased another's taste. Now, what do you suppose he would have said had I expressed my convictions with equal frankness, thus: "Well, sir, I think your Bible the very quintessence of vulgarity; and as for your churches, I seldom sit a service through in one without a wish to grow profane myself." Clericus would have gone off in high dudgeon, I expect; but us for liberals, they are meek, and kind, and suffer long, and half incline to thank you that you do not bring out thumbscrews and the faggot on the spot.

Come to think about it, though, I once, twice, and maybe more, have seen "damn" written in the Philistines; but I maintain that that is not a circumstance when compared with a book that not only uses it with an n, but proposes actually to do it to a good three-quarters of the human race!

Not long ago I heard a man say he didn't like the idea of Socialism, because it was going to recast everybody in a common mold. Goodness gracious, my dear sir, wasn't Robert Burns fed on the same porridge that fell to the lot of the other youngsters in his father's house? Didn't they all live under the same roof? Given about the same initiation into the mysteries of the three R's and other things, were they not? How many of them took to writing poetry?

The Eames-Story divorce reminds us again that there is only one method to get divorces in some states. Now, these two folk, it seems, although they appreciated each other's good qualities and wished each other excellently well, were none the less most uncongenial actors on the stage of matrimony. The prima donna grew nervous and could not get through a role with credit if she knew her husband was behind the scenes; duets outside the theater were out of question, too. Almost looked as though the Lord had made a mess of things again, but he and the wise legislators had kindly left one loophole out of the entanglement. Result: pleasant newspaper scandal, pictures, divorce, and all serene again. Mercy on us, how would virtue ever triumph if we didn't make the "holy sacrament" of marriage as binding as it is in York State, Anthony?

The modest Anglo-Saxon cheek must have been continually aglow of late over the newspaper reports from Spain. Such frank discussions of the expected advent of the little heir, such open comments on the health and daily doings of the queen, were scarce in keeping with the ideas of Mr. Comstock, one would think. But, after all, these are the doings of royalty, and so quite different, are they not, my dear American friend snob?

An enterprising little woman who sells books ran in to see a police sergeant a few weeks ago; she wished permission to lay aside her petticoats—of all things!—and go about her business clad in knickerbockers, like a man. She actually conceived that skirts were in the way, forever tripping one in going up the stairs, collecting tobacco juice and apple cores in coming down. Perhaps she thought of how a bright young woman was mangled in an elevator over in the Tribune building but last year, trapped and held down to a sickening death by petticoats; or perhaps she just didn't take kindly to the garment anyhow. At any rate, the request met with a proper refusal by the be-trowsered one behind the desk. Ann, however, does wonder greatly why she asked if she could put the knickerbockers on. Pray, does she think a woman bound to heed the laws she did not make? A little backbone, ladies, please, and if you think the pantaloon a lovely or convenient garb, go straight ahead and put it on. But just imagine Cicero in pantaloons!

Whence comes this idea, anyhow, that women should be wrapped about with flapping skirts? I will tell you what I think about it. I think that it proceedeth (1) from the sour, unwholesome asceticism of these Christians, who say that half the people in the world (not their half, of course, but just the other half) are products of the evil one, and who so valiantly are wont to flee the devil that they may subdue him; (2) from the good old thought that a woman is a piece of private property, to be well and carefully concealed, lest you might take it in your head you wanted her yourself. Else, were modesty the only reason for the skirt, why do we not pass laws prescribing them for men,—making them, say, of separate colors or peculiar cuts if we should otherwise have trouble in telling Jane from John?

Wonder why we are so prone to pity children with no lawful second name? Are not a good half the women in this country without any name of their own at the date of this present writing? As for Ann, she professes she would rather be merely Ann than Mrs. Ich und Gott in Germany, or Mrs. Hoch der Kaiser in the White House.

If parenthood is the greatest and the noblest thing in life, how many children claimed the last name of the founder of your religion, dear clergyman?

The senate of this state is after fortune-tellers and astrologers, and passed a measure the other day prohibiting them from taking fees. Anybody got a bill up to check the swindling system of divination into the mysteries of the "next world," and the fake magic creeds and books to avert the unlucky star that sentenced you to everlasting brimstone at your birth? Off with the black robe, then, Brother Quayle, and cease to play the oracle as to what is "in the mind of the Lord." You know no more about it than does Ann; and furthermore we are convinced that many a poor hod-carrier or worker in a mill has earned a better right to tack a "Reverend" before his name!

"Either the prison or the asylum is the proper place for people who can't stop thinking and writing about sex," opined the editor of the Chicago Journal once upon a time. How pleasant is it now to turn back to ponder on the wisdom of this thought, after a perusal of the remarks of Judge McEwen the other day, in contravention of Mr. Stead's conclusion that women were not respected over here. "We do respect 'em," yelled the Judge; "that is, we respect 'em when we think of 'em as mothers of the race." In other words, this gentleman can never for one moment get the idea of sex out of his head; he never thinks of anything about a woman but her sex. Wonder how many women, when they meet a man, begin to size him up as a potential father of the race? 'Ware, Judge, the Journal thinks you ought to be consumption-catching at this moment down at Joliet.

The Judge is not the only man, however, by a good long ways, who stands in danger of the nine-foot cell. That crowd of loafers over on the corner do not seem to me to look at other men while merry broncos scurry off the lake; but at a bicycle meet, what was there ever strange about the ankles that you saw beneath a 36-inch skirt?

The civil service commission, too, it might be added, can't stop thinking about sex; so long as there are men upon the roll, they certify them without regard to any women standing higher on the list; and when a petticoat does get a job, good Uncle Sam remembers sex again and sees that salary is duly cut. My, my, I thought they all went through the same exam., and did exactly the same kind of work!

Yes, further, see how every paper in this town was lately marveling that a clever lawyer out in Evanston should be promoted to the exalted office of a—justice of the peace! How would you fill up the mighty gap if Theodore decreed divorce court news improper for the public mind? Sex? my good friend editor, it is the greatest thing that makes the newspaper go 'round.

The Journal pastepot will now dismiss us with the benediction!

SUDS FROM THE TUB OF A CYNIC.

By James Arnold.

"Free love" is the wrong name for the right thing.

"Decerementialized mating and unmating at the will of the maters" is the true meaning of free love, and the coinage of a brief and incisive phrase expressive thereof would add to the richness of speech.

I am a "free lover" myself, but not therefore a miscellaneous sexualist.

When I say I believe in free speech it does not mean that I wish to speak all languages of several of them at once, but simply that I wish to talk in my own way, beginning and ceasing when I like, without intending to bore or be rude to the listener. It is easy to apply the logic of free speech to the logic of free love.

"Caught in the act," says some one, "of doing a good turn to our fellow man once in a while, we brag about it and call it by the high-sounding name of altruism, as if there really is such a thing as absolute sacrifices for others without the simultaneous gratification of our ego!" What a fine thing if the egos of all of us were built after the plan of Harman's!

The society of some people makes us happy for a time and then ceases to make us so. Now, honestly, do you think you ought to be compelled to remain with one whose society makes you unhappy? Really, don't you believe in free association?

Do you solemnly promise to be the friend of this person forever, to cling to him though he become your bitterest enemy, regardless either of your own happiness or his? No, you do not, but you might if either church or state demanded it of you, and denounce "free friendship" as you now denounce "free love!"

If, upon seeing a handsome woman, you were to exclaim, "What a beautiful animal!" you would give offense, notwithstanding she is just what you say she is—a beautiful animal. Words, however, are understood in the conventional and not in a literal sense, and so I deny that I am a free lover the same as I do not refer to handsome women as beautiful animals.

My dear old mother was one of the sweetest bipeds I ever knew, the gentlest and most loving of all mammalia! I write this sentence to show my objection to the phrase "free love." The phrase tells you exactly what I am sexually, but offensively, and therefore injuriously, and I do not propose to be hurt by words any more than by orthodox marriage.

I think it were well to speak truth to the mob like we make love to woman—slowly, euphemistically, and in the way she wishes to have it made. Apollo Belvidere and Socrates combined could make no progress thus: "Say, kid, I'm stuck; come on, let's hook up!" And yet absolutely what is the difference between that and: "Darling, I adore you; will you be mine?"

If new truths cause pain it is because we administer them without anesthetics. There is nothing the brain can think that cannot be said pleasantly if you know how to speak as well as think.

Of course, no matter how artistically, refinedly or poetically you put a truth, its enemies will frequently persecute, imprison and even murder you, but then not so quickly and readily as when you do it in a coarse and vulgar way.

If the mind of Moses Harman were as obscene as Abraham Lincoln's he would have rotted in prison long ago. Take away Harman's immaculate mental and verbal cleanliness and the flood of Comstockian nastiness would engulf him forever in the bat of an eye. As it is, the worst it can do is to bespatter him once in a while.

If men cannot bear the "sudden light" of truth, why, turn the light on slowly. You don't have to "buckle" on much grey matter to think that out.

It is unpleasant to see a friend unjustly imprisoned, but prisons have a part to play in the world as well as palaces.

Why did 4,000 human beings sit open-mouthed to hear Dowie say he was Elijah the Three-eyed? For the same reason that 4,000 famished dogs will follow one dog with a bone. They thought, although foolishly, that Dowie might drop something that was good for them, and not because the most of them believed anything that Dowie said.

Dowie sold superstition the same as a street-spieler sells brick-dust for eye-salve; and the reason that truth is hard to sell is because so many people want something for nothing—a miracle that even Truth Almighty is incapable of performing.

Humanity, for the most part, avails itself of the life work of men like Harman greedily and without thanks, like the heirs of the rich in the division of fortunes.

How old is Meditating Ann?

Dowie established a church the same as he might have sold green goods; not because any one believed what he said, but because each one thought he might make some other fellow believe that he believed Dowie. But how about the people who gave him all they had? you ask. Why, they are the suckers who give up a little good money for a whole lot of bad money—weak-minded rogues more robbed than robbing!

There is no graft in truth, any more than there is darkness in light, for truth drives all graft before it like the sun dispersing the shadows of night. But, of course, the man who burns the lamp of truth must pay for the oil himself, and the feeble rays he attempts to shed will for the most part be obscured by the clouds of human indolence, malice and greed. In spite of it all, however, it is the nature of light to shine.

I am married, ceremoniously mated, but for the same reason that I wear trousers instead of skirts. I follow the fashion in some things, and in others I do not. For instance, it isn't fashionable for married men to write against matrimony, the thing I am now doing in my cynical tuboods. And as to what they think of me who do not believe in marriage I care as much as I do for the opinions of others who think I ought not to write against marriage.

I will write for a thing until I tire, and then write against it until I get ready to write for it again; and if you, my brother or sister, suppress me as a free writer, what do you think I will do to you as a "free lover"?

What! Wilt thou ostracize me because I speak for freedom today, and tomorrow speak against it? Wilt thou imprison me because I make love to a woman today and make hate tomorrow! If so, I will not tell thee that thou oughtest not to do it, but I will say that thou dost not do as I do.

Once married to truth, thou shalt not divorce! I wonder if you are talking to me. I will write a lie if I like and leave it to you to believe it or not, as you like. I do not force mendacity upon you and I am not going to permit you to force truth upon me. We are equal and for the maintenance of our equality I will fight you with your own weapons, if fight I must.

I do not tell you to be consistent with me, but I do tell you that if you are inconsistent with me I shall be the same with you. If you think you can deceive me, go ahead; I have unbounded faith in the survival of the fittest and that with the might of the triumphant intellect will always be found the right!

THE CASE OF ETTA MORRILL.

By Maud A. Thorndyke.

Graduated from grammar school in Franklin, N. H., at 14 years of age, into the hopper of a needle factory at Contoocookville, N. H., at 15 years, Etta Morrill is today where our social and industrial systems are largely responsible in placing hundreds of our choicest flowers of the human type, i. e., in the condition of expectant motherhood without the "protection" society demands in the form of a little golden chain called a wedding ring. This same society does not demand that motherhood be "protected." It feigns to "protect" itself by two alternatives, both of which make woman subservient to man—either that the woman be "sold" to one master, via the auction block of the priest, or that she and her child be ostracized—which is synonymous with selling to many masters, nine times in ten.

The factories are calling our daughters from every part of the country to come and assist in supporting their fathers, mothers and younger brothers and sisters in the struggle for bread. Thousands of mothers are forced to place their daughters on the altar of Mammon at the age they most need a mother's wise counsel—for every human child is possessed of a love-nature that seeks its mate to coöperate in expressing its highest, which is the reproduction of self. But if that child be ignorant of the wisest use of nature's resources, or in trustful simplicity obeys nature's behest in a manner not prescribed by "society," then the "protection" which should be accorded all motherhood is withheld, and not only that, but is trampled in the mire by visionary "moralists."

When 16-year-old Etta Morrill met 17-year-old Francis P. Law their attraction was mutual. It was not evil thoughts that filled their minds, nor evil designs that caused them to express nature's law. But it was evil, evolved from many generations of teaching, called thinking—but which in reality is not thinking, but merely accepting an established custom—that caused Francis P. Law to desert his child sweetheart at the time she most needed his love and support—this present time, when she is passing from the bud of girlhood into the full-blown flower of motherhood, the motherhood of his child.

Etta Morrill, awakening from "love's young dream," thinks first of her unborn babe and the position it must take in the world under our present false systems.

Our social system, that divides motherhood into classes, the one class chained to one acknowledged master by a tiny golden manacle on the finger, a master who may have any number of "slaves" (from which we get our word "wife"), but who "stands pat" for the motherhood of one woman—if she wear the sign; . . . and the other class. Though she may have entered the Temple of Motherhood on the wings of Love—hence nature's highest, most truly legitimate expression—she is ostracized from the great rank and file of her own kind, and her child miscalled "illegitimate" because born in the freedom of love instead of the shackles of serfdom.

Our industrial system, that has robbed our fathers and brothers of their former position of "house-hands" and forced our mothers and daughters into the arena as bread-winners.

Our economic system, that economizes in nothing but virtue, that grinds out millionaires and paupers in the same grist—placing the millionaires in fat bundles on the shelf and hurling the wretched paupers in miserable heaps on the damp, filthy floor.

Our political system, that costs the statesman and replaces the office with a politician in his armor of graft.

Our educational system, that crams our children with misinformation on all important issues of life, that spends less of our public funds for competent teachers than is used for pulling wires in official capacity.

Our religious system, that places a Chinese shoe on our brains, that we may hire bandbox priests to do our thinking for us and keep woman from her rightful heritage of self.

And under these systems, with all their intricate ramifications, we must protect our offspring as best we may; and to "start right" we must have the seal of the state on a piece of paper, "beautifully decorated for framing," announcing to all "whom it may concern" that we have made promises regarding things we know little or nothing about, and by thus perjuring ourselves more or less we are pronounced decent for parenthood and our numerous progeny legitimate.

No law or code that is not founded upon principle can hope to stand immune from attack, and principle in its simple meaning is in accord with natural law. The hardest laws imposed upon us today are those that are the outgrowth of established customs, the hardest of which is the enormous disparity displayed between man and woman violating the same law, as regards society. The stamp of approval is emblazoned upon the forehead of man in letters all may read; while his co-partner in the act is ostracized and hopelessly branded forever. This was the mental picture photographed upon the brain of the girl as she stood before the camera, Society-Established Custom, and realized her only sin consisted in violating one of those customs. She had not bartered her birthright for a title nor sold her honor for gold, but she had given her love in exchange for love; not like hundreds of her sister girls who are driven by cold and hunger, in our era of "overproduction," to "get thee a gentleman friend," nor like hundreds of others held in the firm grasp of their employers' whim to feast his lust upon their young lives, but a promature and in consequence unwise interpretation of the best use of nature's resources. Had she had the benefit of home life, the counsel of a wise mother, the use of her love-nature might have been turned into other channels until such time as the laws of society prescribe.

We can never attain unto righteousness until we emancipate woman. Freedom is not license. We are living under a system of license, and our criminal courts and divorce records prove conclusively that it is not a good system. Repeal our license laws, free woman, place motherhood, pure and simple, upon a pedestal preeminent among all others, and but a few generations shall pass away before we will have elevated the moral standard of the human family until it will begin to rank with the so-called brute world in the regulation of natural sex laws. Man is the only animal that has ever violated them, and woman is the only female that is held a slave. Hundreds and thousands of good women know this, but accept for a certainty the impossibility of the emancipation of their sex; still others realize there's something vastly wrong, but seek a remedy for the effect instead of going to the root and finding out the cause.

Then there are others—the ones who do more harm to themselves and to man himself than all other classes of women put together—the women and young girls who uphold men in their attitude toward the girls they have made social outcasts. To the earnest student of our social disease, to the thoughtful mind on all that pertains to human welfare, this phase of woman-nature is the most deplorable because the most ignorant, and one that brings most sorrow into their own lives nine times in ten; for if they entrust their own happiness to one of these men, he has already acquired the habit of lightly treating woman and is very liable not to change. So we find Canaan, N. H., no exception to the rule when it comes to an analysis of the so-called social evil and the mental ability of the people to probe the cause and treat the effect in an enlightened and humane manner. But we find young women condoning the actions of young Law in his attitude of desertion toward little Etta Morrill; we find them accepting his attentions and occupying his time, that should be given in considerate attention to her, in her appeal to his manhood in behalf of their unborn child; for as essential as is the deed to a farm after you've paid for it in this era of landlord monopoly, so is the deed to a man's name before you can bear him a legitimate child. And so we see young Law flattered by the smiling attention of "good" young women, emboldened by the jests of men old enough for serious thought, bolstering his attitude in refusing to protect from social ostracism the unborn child of Etta Morrill, while fully acknowledging its fatherhood.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Six months .....50 cents Three months.....25 cents
One year .....$1.00 Single copies ..... 5 cents

Hereafter LUCIFER will not be sent to subscribers after expiration of subscription except by special request. Please compare number on your wrapper with whole number of paper, and if your subscription is about to expire notify us if you wish to continue to receive LUCIFER.

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

LUCIFER'S METEMPSYCHOSIS.

Pythagoras of Samos, who died 500 years before the beginning of the Christian era, taught the doctrine of metempsychosis, or the transmigration of souls, a doctrine similar in many respects to that of reincarnation, taught by the Buddhists and the theosophists. It is a significant fact that the leading theosophical magazine, published by Madame Blavatsky, was started under the name of Lucifer. This name, as has often been stated in these columns, literally means the light-bearer. It was applied by the ancients to Venus, when Venus was the morning star, to signify that it was the herald of dawn.

Through a misinterpretation of a passage in the book of Isaiah in the Hebrew Bible the name afterwards was taken to signify the mythical devil Satan, and the error has been spread so widely by ignorant theologians that with thousands of persons the beautiful Latin name has no other than an evil significance.

Because of the wide prevalence of this error in interpreting the name LUCIFER many good friends of this paper have from time to time suggested that its name be changed, their argument being that it would accomplish more good for the cause of race culture if it had a name which was not repellant to so many persons. Those arguments have received the most careful consideration, but, after making all allowance for their force, the editor felt that to change the name would be a concession to ignorance and that, especially, to change it while under fire of persecution would appear to be a concession to his persecutors. The name was adhered to because it seemed to be the most significant one which could be taken by a paper whose object was to spread the light of knowledge. Had a more appropriate name been suggested it probably would have been adopted.

Such a name now has been suggested and LUCIFER's reincarnation or metempsychosis has now been definitely decided upon. The name chosen in place of Lucifer is "THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS." The name "eugenics" was invented by the great biologist Francis Galton, who also invented the word "stirpiculture." Its literal significance is the science of properly begetting—or of race culture through the best conditions for reproduction.

LUCIFER for more than a quarter of a century has insisted that the greatest of all rights is the right to be born well. That right is just what the science of eugenics is designed to promote. As LUCIFER was the first periodical in America to devote itself to what is now called the science of eugenics, it seems appropriate that it now should be called "THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS."

The change of name is no abandonment of the idea for which LUCIFER has stood. In fact the paper still will continue to be a "light-bearer," but, as its new name suggests, it will direct the light particularly to the important study of sexual hygiene. This is an age of specialists, and although LUCIFER always has been an unfaltering advocate of the right of children to be born well its name had a much broader significance. Any paper published for educational purposes might appropriately be called "Lucifer, the Light-Bearer," but inasmuch as this paper has a special field in which it seeks to direct light a name denoting its specific purpose seems more appropriate.

While the change of name is no concession to ignorance, nor is it an evidence of retreat under fire, the new name is one which happily has no stigma of evil attached to it by the ignorant. It is a name which is easily explained and which has only one significance.

That this change of name is not by any means a suddenly conceived idea is well known to many of LUCIFER's most earnest friends and most generous helpers. While in California three years ago, and for months after his return to Chicago, a radical change of name was very seriously contemplated by the editor, and only the attitude of the postoffice department towards the paper prevented the change or radical modification of the old name at that time, and now that a tidal wave of earnest inquiry into the subject upon which LUCIFER has been the pioneer journal is making itself felt in every English-speaking country, it would seem that the time has at length arrived to put into execution the long-contemplated change.

CHANGE OF FORM AND TIME OF ISSUE.

With the change of name it is believed that now is the time to make other changes that have been long under serious consideration. The advantages of the monthly magazine over the weekly or fortnightly form and period of issue are so numerous that it is scarcely worth while to enumerate them here. So far as now recalled all who have given voice to their opinion have agreed that the monthly magazine would be an improvement upon LUCIFER's present and past form and period of issue.

To give time for making these changes and to enable our workers everywhere to send in a good list of new subscribers for the rejuvenated, the reincarnated LUCIFER, it is thought best that the first copy of THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS should be dated July of this current year.

In conclusion it is perhaps needless to say that the measure of success to be achieved by THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS will depend upon the support, the cordial, the energetic, the spontaneous support with which these proposed changes are met by the women and men who for so many, many years have made it possible for LUCIFER to live at all. If these helpers so will, this measure of success will be great; great and glorious beyond anything as yet conceived by those who know what it means to antagonize popular prejudices concerning the most vitally important line of education for young and old, education that tells how to create human beings with sound minds in sound bodies—how to practicalize the right to be born well if born at all.

MOSES HARMAN.

518 West Fifth Street, Los Angeles, Calif.
Sunday, May 12, E. M. 307.

"DO IT NOW."

According to the postal regulations, when a publication changes name or period of issue the publisher must make a new application for entry at second-class rates. For this reason we need to hear from all of our subscribers. Those whose subscriptions are paid in advance should send cards saying that they desire THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS sent to them in fulfillment of unexpired subscriptions to LUCIFER. Those whose subscriptions have expired or are about to expire should send in renewal, or a statement that they wish to receive the new journal and will pay for it at some future time. It is of the greatest importance that every one of our subscribers and friends should heed this request.

I hope to be able to make definite announcement concerning size and other details in next issue. There are many details that have to be settled, and as Los Angeles and Chicago are so far apart it will of course take much longer to discuss and decide all questions of detail than it would if the editor were at home.

And don't forget that it is of vital importance that we have a written order from every subscriber.

Do it now.

L. H.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Los Angeles, Cal., Saturday Morning, May 11.

While San Francisco and other cities of the American Union are having stormy times over the old, old problem of the equitable division of proceeds of labor, as between the laborer himself and the owner of the tools, the raw materials and the "franchises" or privileges granted by "the people" to corporate capital—while blood has flowed in the streets of San Francisco and business of all kinds has been very seriously disturbed by the strife of the striking carmen and their sympathizers on the one hand and the owners of the cars and the tracks on the other—in strong contrast with this unhappy state of affairs elsewhere Los Angeles has for a week been enjoying a feast of good-fellowship, a carnival called the "Fiesta de la Flores," which, translated into Anglo-Saxon, means the "Feast of Flowers."

This feast of flowers is, if I mistake not, an annually recurring jubilee, in which everybody is supposed to take part, whether citizen or stranger. Special interest attaches to the fiesta this year because of the presence here of many thousands of "Shriners," members of what is known as the "Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine." The origin of this order is thus given by a prominent city daily:

"In the days of fiery fanaticism, when the sword settled more mooted points of theology than did the pen, when the first ripple of Islamism spread from the burning deserts of Arabia to become a tidal wave of faith which submerged half the world, to be flung back in a spray of blood from the iron front of the Frankish warriors at the battle of Tours—in these first days, when to doubt was to die, a few broad-minded men in the cradle of Mohammedanism at Mecca joined in secret to perpetuate the cause of tolerance, to promote the worship of the One God, inculcate virtue and punish crime. Thus, it is recorded, was organized the first Temple of the Order of the Mystic Shrine.

"Battles for faith in the name of God are won now by other missionaries than those who went forth clad in steel over one thousand years ago, the nations of those days no longer exist, and the world has changed. But the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine is still a power in the world, and thousands of the nobles of the order are gathering in Los Angeles to attend the Imperial Council of the order, as it exists in the Western Hemisphere.

"The twenty-fifth year of the Hegira, or flight of Mohammed, which corresponds to A. D. 644, is noted as the birth of the order, and was promoted by Kalif Alee, the son-in-law of the Prophet. With a few men of influence and culture, who deplored the reading of Arabia by political and religious factions, when law and the courts were of little account and the heavy hand ruled, Alee organized the first tribunal.

"Originally the intent of this tribunal was to remedy wrongs, protect the widow and the orphan and to punish with swift, mysterious death the wretch who had no fear of the law as it then existed.

"The order spread with the conquest of the hosts of Islam. It was carried to Egypt by Ibraheem, the son of Alee, and there became an independent order, known as the Egyptian Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

"Membership in the order, wherever established, has been along tolerant lines. Christian, Israelite or Moslem, all were eligible, the sincere belief in God, Jehovah or Allah, the One God, under whatever name worshiped, being the one necessity of faith."

My chief interest in the "Nobles of the Mystic Shrine" is due to the fact that, as I see it, like the "Congress of Religions" at the World's Fair in Chicago, the organization of "lodges" or branches of Mohammedan Free Masonry—none but Masons can belong to the "Shriners"—in so-called Christian lands will have a tendency towards peace and human brotherhood and in case of renewal of war between the followers of Mohammed and those of the Nazarene the existence of such orders as this will tend to make Sherman's "hell" a little less hellish.

I remember an instance that occurred during the "war between the states," in '61-'65. During one of the frequent "raids" in Missouri the home of an uncle—prominent as a Mason—was being robbed of everything a "rebel" soldier coveted and could carry off. In the absence of her husband my aunt made the Masonic "hailing sign of distress." At once the command was passed along the line from the captain of the raiders to stop the pillage and to return to the owner every article already taken, which order was instantly obeyed, the rough troopers apologizing for their mistake and offering every reparation in their power for the fright and turmoil they had caused.

★ ★ ★

As a gala week I have never seen its equal anywhere. The entire "City of the Angels," so far as I could see it, seemed a mass of flowers and bunting of every gaudy hue. At night the buildings, private as well as public, were lit up in a manner that simply defies description. The electric "floats" drawn through the principal streets far surpassed in brilliancy and ingenuity of construction everything in that line displayed at the World's Fair in Chicago or at St. Louis, so far as I now recall. The parades, including music by the many bands, were magnificent and altogether new to most people because of the Asiatic dress and banners of the "Shriners," not one of whom, it may safely be assumed, was a Moslem by birth or nationality, or a believer in the creed of Mohammed, though wearing the "fez," or Moslem cap, and when on parade wearing the style of garments, the baggy trousers and burnouses of true Mohammedans.

★ ★ ★

Monday Morning, May 13.

But now comes tragedy close on the heels of comedy. The joyous fiesta week ended in frightful loss of life of these same festive Shriners. Saturday, 2 o'clock p. m., saw a most frightful wreck of a train on the "Coast line." From the Times (Los Angeles) of yesterday I clip the following description of the horrible event:

"SANTA BARBARA, CAL., May 11.—When the special train carrying 250 Shriners reached Honda it left the track and in an instant twenty-six were killed and forty injured. The gala week was in that moment ended in pitiful tragedy. At the time of the crash thirty-two men and women were seated in the diner. This car was hurled upon the locomotive. It was split in twain and filled with scalding steam. All its occupants were killed or badly injured, save only two or three.

"These passengers had left Santa Barbara less than an hour. They had taken the train fresh from a trip to the Old Mission. Happy and keenly hungry, they hurried to the diner. Every seat was filled and many stood in the vestibule between this car and the next sleeper. They had seen California. They were feasting their eyes on the last of its beauties. Beside them lay the sea, blue and flecked with white foam where the wind swept it. Ahead of them lay home. Then came the crash.

"The locomotive left the rails and turned turtle. The baggage cars telescoped. Into this wreckage leaped the diner, and, falling, it shattered into fragments. The two following sleepers telescoped. The rest of the train stayed on the track.

"From the wreckage men crawled slowly, painfully. Behind them followed the hot steam. Some of them stopped in the hideous place to help the maimed, and of these some were caught by the white, scalding clouds.

"They had traveled to California, these passengers, in one happy family. In one family they had enjoyed themselves to the utmost, and in one family they suffered and died. The moment death hurts overwhelmed them they worked together and did for one another like brothers and sisters of one blood."

Oh, the pity of it all!

Special dispatch this morning from Santa Barbara puts the number of dead at thirty-two, with thirteen seriously, if not fatally, injured, and more than thirty others suffering from cuts and bruises.

The cause of the terrible disaster is said to have been a partially open switch where a switch should have been tightly closed. Doubtless it is the old, old story: "Nobody to blame"—at least no blame will be fixed upon the railroad company for poor construction or insufficient number of properly paid watchmen to see that everything is in good order when a trainload of human beings is expected to pass over the line at a rate of speed that would cause terrible slaughter in case everything should not be just right.

And ever the question recurs: Will there ever be an end to such needless sacrifices of human life so long as human life is the cheap commodity it now is?

As some of us see it, the "vested rights" of corporate monopolies will always prevent proper care of human life—in mines, in factories, on railway trains, on ocean and river steamers, in theaters and other public buildings—just so long as human mothers consent to be mere breeders of men. So long as women listen to rulers in church and state, such as Cardinal Gibbons and Theodore Roosevelt, just so long will human life be reckoned of much less value than interest-bearing stocks and bonds.

★ ★ ★

To LUCIFER's friends and readers who have been expecting its editor to materialize at other points on the Pacific coast and who may wonder at his long stay at one place, I would briefly say there are several causes for such delay:

First—The many, many attractions of this Mecca of southern California, its climate, its opportunities for meeting people from all parts of the world and hearing what the world's agitators have to say on all lines of modern thought. All propogandists flock to this city with their various "gospels" for the speedy salvation of the world, feeling sure that here above all places—in heaven, earth or hades—is the place to make converts.

Second—The hospitality with which LUCIFER's work has been received at this city and its environs. Two weeks ago I addressed by invitation, the professors and students of the Pacific Osteopathic College, located half-way between Los Angeles and Pasadena, on "What Matrimony and the Honeymoon Mean to Woman and Her Prospective Children." Though not in good condition for public speaking my talk was well received, and after the close of the meeting I was introduced to a considerable number of the professors, who spoke with warm appreciation of the work I am trying to do, and expressed a wish to hear me again, at some future time.

One week ago tonight I had the pleasure of addressing about forty women—no men admitted—at Naturopathic Hall, in this city, on the above-named subject, and although by no means in best condition for talking, my address was well received, several of my auditors making short speeches commendatory of this line of work. One of these, Miss Witte, formerly of Fulton, Kan., made a strong appeal to her sister women to do what they can to secure the repeal of the laws that prevent free discussion of sexologic and eugenic questions. Mrs. May E. Bensen, whose work in keeping alive the 'Light-Bearer Club" formed in Los Angeles three years ago was more untiring than that of any other person, made an excellent talk on the need of classes for the study of eugenics in every part of the city. She proposes to form such classes and give lesson to women and girls, having had considerable experience as a teacher in the public schools and having seen the great need of such instruction while in that vocation. A beginning was made at this meeting for the formation of such classes.

And still another cause of my long stay in Los Angeles is the fact that I am taking lessons from Dr. William Windsor in Phrenology and the Genetic philosophy, as first taught by Samuel T. Fowler, half-brother of O. S. and L. N. Fowler. Dr. Windsor is meeting with wonderful success in his classes, as well as in his free lectures; also in private delineations of character. It is now probable that he will remain here the greater part of the summer. Prominent among his helpers is the president of the Los Angeles Eugenic Society, Dr. Adah S. H. Patterson, who has given several lectures on "Matrimony," in connection with Dr. Windsor's classes.

Again the train is standing on the track, waiting to bear this letter to Chicago, and lest it be too late I close for this time. With best wishes and hopes, yours for more light, M. HARMAN.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO CENSOR PRESS.

GIRARD, KAN., May 17.—The Socialist press has become powerful enough at last, it seems, to attract the capitalist fighting.

The Appeal to Reason has just been indicted in the federal court for the alleged circulation of "scurrilous, defamatory and threatening" matter. Fred D. Warren, the managing editor, has been arrested and taken into custody to answer to the indictment.

At Fort Scott in the preliminary hearing he was placed under bond and held for trial, which has been set for November. Ex-Chief Justice Frank Doster, of the supreme bench of Kansas, has been retained as chief counsel for the defense.

It is strongly hinted that the object of the prosecution and the power behind it is to so load down the Appeal with lawsuits, court costs, fees and expenses of all kinds as to drive it out of business.

It is further intimated that this indictment of the Appeal is but the beginning of a censorship that is to be assumed by the powers that be for the purpose of checking the growth of the Socialist press and keeping it within harmless bounds.

The capitalist papers out here are making a great deal over this indictment and probable prosecution. The maximum penalty for the offense alleged against the Appeal is five years in prison and a fine of $5,000. Our capitalist friends are gleefully predicting that both will be imposed to the limit. We shall see. Certain it is that we shall fight from start to finish. We do not in the least doubt that the ultimate effect of this insidious attack will be to increase the power of the Socialist press and strengthen the revolutionary movement.—Special dispatch by Eugene V. Debs to the Chicago Daily Socialist.

IN MEMORIAM: EDWARD BLISS FOOTE.

Dr. Edward Bond Foote has issued a handsomely printed memorial to his father. It will be highly prized by the good doctor's many friends and admirers. Six portraits of Dr. Foote are given, also portraits of his sons. The title page is as follows:

"In memory of Edward Bliss Foote, M. D., a 'beloved physician' of the new, scientific, human, social, 'agnostic' faith, who closed the Book of Personal Life on October 5, in the year 1906 of the Christian and common era, 306 of the Era of Science and Man.

"The funeral address, delivered at 120 Lexington avenue, New York, on October 7, by Thaddeus Burr Wakeman. A letter to the legatees. The records of Colonel Ingersoll and Mrs. Stanton. Newspaper notices, resolutions, letters from coadjuters and friends.

"'True greatness, first of all, is a thing of the heart. It is all alive with robust and generous sympathies. It is neither behind its age, nor too far before it. It is up with its age, and ahead of it only just so far as to be able to lead its march. It cannot slumber, for activity is a necessity of its existence. It is no reservoir, but a fountain.'—Roswell D. Hitchcock.

"Published for free distribution by Edward Bond Foote, 120 Lexington avenue, New York."

THE PERSECUTION AND THE APPRECIATION.

A report of the reception to Moses Harman at Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, Jan. 1, 1907, is now ready for delivery. It is a booklet of sixty-four pages, containing speeches by Paul Tyner, Walter Henry MacPherson, Lucinda B. Chandler, Gertrude Breslau Hunt, Parker H. Sercombe, and Moses Harman; also letters from absent friends, newspaper reports, etc., and pictures of Lucinda B. Chandler, Kiichi Kaneko and Parker H. Sercombe. Two portraits of Mr. Harman are given; one, with grandson, taken in January, 1907, has never before been published. We hope this will be an effective document for wide distribution. Price, per dozen, $1.25; single copies, 20 cents.

We have sent out over 700 free copies of this pamphlet and expect to circulate many more in the same way. The expense of publication and circulation is quite heavy and we gladly accept coöperation in the work. Those who are interested are requested to send names of persons to whom they think copies should be sent. Inability to assist financially should not deter friends from sending such names to us.

"Those who are averse to have their own opinions examined are manifestly actuated more by attachment to their own tenets than to truth. They arrogate for themselves a privilege which they deny to their neighbor, and they suggest the suspicious Inquiry—Is there any concealed interest in the background that causes discussion to be dreaded and opposed?"—Thos. Cooper (1830).

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and alight at St. John's place, slighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

To the Editor: While thanking Mrs. White for her excellent notice of the meeting of the Social Science League, on the night of April 24, permit me to say she made a slight mistake as to my age. I am only three months in my 82d year.—Lois Washbrooker.

Dear LUCIFER: In No. 1000 Louisa H. Dana differs from my opinion that, if women were paid by the state for the maintenance of their children, and for their time spent in maternity, the economic part of the sex problem would be solved. She says that, even if children are left out of account, the wages of women are so low that they are forced to marry in order to get supported. She instances the pitiable case of a woman earning only $8 a week in a department store, and wonders how such a woman could have any freedom in love.

In Chicago, as elsewhere, the great majority of women who marry have to be content with a man of their own class. Women who work in stores are usually members of the laboring class, in most cases of the unskilled laboring class. It is into that class that most of such women have to marry. Now, what are the wages of men who are unskilled laborers? I do not know what they are in Chicago, but I do know that all over the Pacific coast such men are paid $2 a day, or $12 a week. As it is well known that wages are higher on the Pacific coast than in Chicago, I cannot for the life of me see how such men can get more than $9 or $10 a week in Chicago. If the store girl does not marry an unskilled laborer, but wants to be a little more respectable, she will probably marry a clerk, but times have changed very much in Chicago if the average clerk gets more than $10 or $11 a week.

We can therefore safely say that the most an $8 woman can reasonably expect is to marry a $10 man. In most cases a married woman has to give up her work and keep house, and get what she can out of the man's $10. It certainly seems to me that a woman is better off with $8 to herself than sharing $10 with a man. If women were free and got paid by the state for all their children, I should say that an $8 woman was a perfect idiot to marry a $10 man.—E. R. Kerr.

My Dear Lillian Harman: "The Persecution and the Appreciation" pamphlet received and I hasten to inclose $1.25 to pay for one dozen of the many copies you intend giving away free. I will send you the name of a man, also name of a grand woman, who will appreciate the matter contained in this work; the one sent me I will "keep going," the other nine may apply on list you are working on.

Though a new member to LUCIFER's household the principle for which the work stands has had my recognition since I was old enough to understand the fundamentals underlying the reproduction of self upon the highest plane. I refrained from writing you and your father at a time when you were overwhowered with letters from friends better known to you both than I am, but Moses Harman had the admiration and sympathy of my companion, Doctor Thorndyke, and myself; admiration for being brave enough to refuse to live less honest, hence less noble, than his highest sense of manhood demands of him, for himself; and sympathy that, in consequence of that honesty, he must stand the persecution of ignorance. Our united love to this grand man, and may he kiss the lips of health in beautiful California till "bound-back to Good."

Baby George Harman O'Brien has grown "splendidly" since his picture, taken in January, 1906, as shown in picture, frontispiece of book, just received, and I am positive the picture of Moses Harman in latest one is good, but oh! the smile on his face in the former picture (I have photograph, you will remember); he will never have a better one than that, I am sure.

I am also sending you in this letter a paper I prepared for publication and sent to Hearst's Boston American, knowing full well the "particulars" would appear in some crude form, as the "affair" had taken "official" form, and such a "dainty tid-bit" could not be overlooked in a "great newspaper." I was then a guest of the Hotel Rand, in Canaan, N. H., and was in position to gain full truth, and did so, doing justice to the girl. As I told one of my friends, "I drew my girdle a notch tighter, that I might not breathe too 'freely' while preparing an article for a daily newspaper." I drew an outline of my article while interviewing Etta and her mother, and filled in, in the one writing, and sent to Boston American that night, so had no copy. I was not where I could watch the papers to see that it was not published, and have only just had it returned to me, saying their corps of writers was quite complete, and "after your contribution being in the office for some time we return it, thanking you for its tender." What they did print I do not know, but a short notice of Law's arrest and final marriage, I suppose, as usual with such misinformation of news. If LUCIFER can use it, giving its readers the benefit of knowing it was prepared for a "willy-nilly" paper, with or without names of participating parties and place (Mrs. Morrill knew I was writing for publication), I would like to have you publish it.

I inclose 10 cents also for the "special" you advertise, as I never had the "Anniversary" number. I will use all other numbers for "missionary" work, as I do all of my regulars. I now have but two LUCIFER's in the house; rest on "other folks' tables." I hope they may do much good, for the human family needs much enlightening on the use and abuse of the sex relations, the channel through which must come the race.

You did well for LUCIFER, Lillian, during your father's absence in the past, and I feel much still depends on your labors, but it is a labor of love as well as work, so I am certain success is yours.—Maud A. Theradyke, Concord, N. H.

Dear Lillian Harman: Having moved again I will have to again trouble you to change my LUCIFER's address from Fort McPherson, Ga., to Chattanooga, Tenn. Seems I never will find a suitable home till I get to heaven. But I have found approximate country and climate and now wish to find a colony of affinities, so when you get ready to move LUCIFER and go to the beautiful mountains to teach liberty, then bring a colony of advanced thinkers and come down my way.

I send 70 cents—50 cents more of LUCIFER (after my present subscription expires) and 20 cents to pay for the back numbers of LUCIFER you sent me to distribute, but which I kept. I kept them as souvenirs, as historic documents. And one photo in the issue of Oct. 11, I believe, I fell in love with, and the beautiful granddaughter of Mr. Harman now adorns—figuratively—my cabin. If "a tree is known by its fruits" Mr. Harman certainly has no apology to make to the public. Let some of the prudes compare it they dare. And if history repeats itself, was it not Moses who led the ignorant Israelites into the land of Canaan?

If I had been treated as Mr. Harman, then nitro-glycerine would be altogether too gentle a thing for a fighting mad Anarchist. I would want something far stronger. And, by the way, I have discovered it and will help Mr. Harman to get revenge. Its name is Reason, and it will surely put their old religion into oblivion. Modern reason will puncture their "old system" so full of holes that not even a little hot air will remain. I said that over a year ago, but could not demonstrate what I had realized. But now I can demonstrate it, and though it will only be learned gradually by the general public, yet it will be learned quite rapidly. Numbers of advanced thinkers are realizing this fact. Few people, and no dictionaries I have noted, know the meaning of liberty or justice, yet these are nature's own principles, and can be demonstrated by physical science. But what sticks in my craw is that the people who know the most of liberty seem to get most punishment for teaching this most valuable truth, while those slave-drivers and tyrants who need to learn it the most seem at present exempt from tyranny. However, by the immovable law of nature, they will "get theirs" all right. People who refuse to learn through reason will have to learn through bitter experience. Evolute we must; do we refuse to be led, then we surely will be driven.

Poor Dr. Sonnenstine is still a victim of persecution and lies in a Colorado prison.

I am a Doctor of Natural Law, so my legal advice is superior to any person's who deals in man-law. And, by the way, I have a lot of booklets—"Use Natural Law"—left and will donate one hundred to any advanced publication or society that can use them. I sold them at 15 cents a copy and any one can get ideas to that amount of worth. This work was composed a year and a half ago, under adverse circumstances and hastily. Yet with all its faults it does outline the new social system better than any pamphlet I have yet found. But I fear it "muck rakes" too much for LUCIFER. Wishing you success, good cheer, etc.—H. E. Sanders, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Oh happiness! our being's end and aim!—Pope.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

CALAMAS DAY DINNER IN CHICAGO.

The Whitman Fellowship announces a dinner to be given at 6:30 FRIDAY EVENING, MAY 31, at the Washington Restaurant, corner Wabash avenue and Adams street, Chicago. Friends desiring to be present are requested to notify the Secretary (Dr. Morris Lyrchesheim, 39 State street, Chicago). Dinner, 75 cents. It is suggested that each participant come prepared to quote or read his or her favorite passage from "Leaves of Grass."

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE FREE SPEECH LEAGUE invites correspondence, coöperation, and membership of all who claim rights, and dare maintain them.
Join us. Help us. Get our list of books. Read them—pass them on.
Liberty tracts by Ingersoll, Wakeman, Walker, Pentecost, Darrow, Post and Schroeder. Read "Our Vanishing Liberty of Press" (5c) and "Do You Want Free Speech?" (10c) and so learn
WHY YOU SHOULD ACT WITH US.
FREE SPEECH LEAGUE, 120 Lexington avenue, New York.

THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF ANTHROPOLOGY holds regular meetings every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Corinthian Hall, seventeenth floor Masonic Temple. Free discussion. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE LEAGUE holds public meetings every Sunday night at 8 o'clock in Room 413 Masonic Temple. Free discussion after each lecture. LUCIFER on sale at meetings.

THE LOS ANGELES (CAL.) LIBERAL CLUB meets every Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at Blanchard Hall, 233 South Broadway. Seats free. The public is cordially invited.

Parental Rights and Economic Wrongs.

BY VIRGINIA M. BUTTERFIELD.

The purpose of this book is to discuss the ethics of optional motherhood as the result of optional conception. It is meant to show both the short-sightedness and injustice of the policy by which any effort to control conception, in the interest of purposeful and responsible parenthood, race-improvement, and child-happiness, is classed with criminal abortion.

Motherhood is at present compulsory, since all effort to control conception is forbidden, and even all discussion of the possibility or righteousness of so doing is regarded as immoral. This is not only injurious to the race, working evil and unhappiness in a multiplicity of ways to every man, woman and child in the world, but is totally unnecessary as well.

Humanity has been so long accustomed to deny its own right of volition in the matter of parenthood, and also to consider sinful even the desire to exercise such right, that no radical improvement in conditions can take place until men and women recognize the legitimacy and necessity of purposeful parenthood.—Author's Preface.

Bound in gray linen. 96 pages. Price, 50 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

You Need It.

There are but two classes of people, those who think and those who should. Whether you belong to one or the other, you need The Stellar Ray. It presents the best of higher thought in will power, astral science, occultism, etc.

OUR SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS.

Fifteen months for $1 (begin with the January number if you desire and if you let us know soon); foreign, 50c extra.

The magazine and our Pocket Dictionary of Astrological Terms (regular price for two, $1.50), both for $1.25 (foreign, $1.75).

We can furnish you with the lowest clubbing rates with any of the contemporary magazines.

The magazine free for one year with every Five-Dollar Horoscope cast by our Astral Science Department. This is run on the same high standard as the magazine. Write now and say you saw it in LUCIFER.

THE STELLAR RAY.
The Magazine for Thinkers.
Hodges Building, Detroit, Mich.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn; in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strassburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 20c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses.

BY E. C. WALKER.

Contents—Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Community of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Wretches; The New Woman: What is She? What Will She Be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections Upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love and Life." Price 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

An Essay on the Duty of Civil Disobedience.

BY HENRY D. THOREAU.

A reprint of this classic essay on the supremacy of the individual conscience. Antique paper; artistic covers, dark green on olivine. 10c.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Photographs of Moses Harman.

The latest photographs of the editor of LUCIFER, taken alone, and also photographs taken with his infant grandson, are for sale at this office. Price, 25c each.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61, BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.

1092

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

THOSE INTERESTED in the Independence of Woman should read Albert Chavannes' "Little Melton," the girl who, though condemned by the world, kept her rightful place in the community. Also read "In Brighter Climes; or, Life Under New Conditions." 15c each book, or both for 25c. Send for catalogue to MRS. C. CHAVANNES, 308 Fourth avenue, Knoxville, Tenn.

WANTED—A BRIGHT WOMAN, with or without money, as partner in a Turkish bath and sanitarium business, in a large eastern city, by a middle-aged man of good habits and business ability, owning a suitable site and possessing unusual facilities and knowledge for pushing the business; a blonde, between 25 and 35, desiring a congenial companion, preferred. This is an unusually good opening for a progressive physician, osteopath, or one who believes in the prevention as well as the cure of disease by natural methods, without drugs. Address, giving full description of self, with photo in first letter, T. B., care 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Proudhon and His "Bank of the People."

BY CHARLES A. DANA.

This is a defense of the great French anarchist, showing the evils of a specie currency, and that interest on capital can and ought to be abolished by a system of Free and Mutual Banking. A series of newspaper articles written by the after-time editor of The New York Sun, he having been a Brook Farm experimenter in early life. Price, 10 cents.

MOSES HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

Mother Earth.

Monthly Magazine devoted to Social Science and Literature. Published at 210 East Thirteenth street, New York City. Emma Goldman, publisher. Price, $1 per year; 10c per copy.

MOTHER EARTH'S PAMPHLETS.

The Masters of Life. By Maxim Gorky. Only translation of the original. Price, 10c.

The Criminal Anarchy Law an Suppressing the Advocacy of Crime. By Theodore Schroeder. Price, 5c. 90

The Occidental Mystic and Western Spiritualist.

A 36-page monthly, devoted to the consideration of spiritualism and the occult sciences.

Clean, bright and filled from cover to cover with original matter from able contributors. Issued on the 1st of each month. $1 a year; single copy, 10c.

ARTHUR S. HOWE, Editor and Publisher,
142 S. Broadway, Room 107, Los Angeles, Cal.

Correspondence Club.

Open to those who desire to improve, and to discuss subjects of interest with kindred minds. Editor of this paper says the secretary is worthy of confidence. For particulars, enclose stamp to C. A. KIRK, Sec., Box 733, Mitchell, S. D.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to fortify yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Dr. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.

M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

READY FOR THE PRESS

CHICAGO CAVE DWELLERS

Not for Preachers

320 Pages, Cloth, $1.00 POST PAID

A Story of the Underworld and the Overworld

By Parker H. Sercombe, Editor To-Morrow Magazine, Chicago.

Only a limited edition of this remarkable book will be printed. Each copy will be signed by Sercombe Himself and automatically numbered from 1 up. First orders in will get the low numbers in rotation except No. 1, which goes to Mrs. Sercombe.

Address

TO-MORROW MAGAZINE,

For the Supermen and Superwomen of The New Civilization,

2238 Calumet Ave., Chicago, Ill.

10 CENTS THE COPY. $1 A YEAR.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

ENTERED AT THE CHICAGO POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER.

PRICE FIVE CENTS. CHICAGO, JUNE 6, E. M. 307 [C. E. 1907]. WHOLE NO. 1093

FREE SPEECH.

All conviction should be valiant;
Tell thy truth, if truth it be,
Never seek to stem its current;
Thoughts, like rivers, find the sea;
It will fit the widening circle
Of Eternal Verity.

Speak thy thought if thou believ'st it,
Let it jostle whom it may,
E'en although the foolish scorn it,
Or the obstinate gainsay;
Every seed that grows tomorrow
Lies beneath the clod today.

If our sires, the noble hearted,
Pioneers of things to come,
Had, like some, been weak and timid,
Traitors to themselves, and dumb,
Where would be our present knowledge?
Where the hoped Millennium?

Where would be triumphant Science,
Searching with her fearless eyes,
Through the infinite creation,
For the soul that underlies—
Soul of Beauty, soul of Goodness,
Wisdom of the earth and skies?

Where would be all great inventions,
Each from bygone fancies born,
Issued first in doubt and darkness,
Launched 'mid apathy and scorn?
How could noontime ever light us
But for dawning of the morn?

Where would be our free opinions,
Where the right to speak at all,
If our sires, like some mistrustful,
Had been deaf to duty's call,
And concealed the thoughts within them,
Lying down for fear to fall?

Though an honest thought, outspoken,
Lead thee into chains or death—
What is life compared with virtue?
Shalt thou not survive their breath!
Hark! the future age invites thee!
Listen! tremble, shut it saith!

It demands thy thought in justice,
Debt, not tribute of the free;
Have not ages long departed
Groaned, and toiled, and bled for thee?
If the Past have lent thee wisdom,
Pay it to Futurity.

—Charles Mackay.

RTHE ARE SOUL OF AN HONEST MAN.

By James Armstrong.

We are living in a world in which nothing thrives so vigorously as rascality. By rascality I mean every word, look, gesture and action which has for its object the deception of others for the purpose of robbing them. It is for this reason that I regard ecclesiasticism as robbery reduced to a science, and the votaries of every religion as hypocrites pretending to believe things which they not only do not believe but which they can not believe.

The average human mind is not so foolish as it seems to be or as we for the most part think it is. The world has had millions of philosophers besides the few who have written books—millions of thinkers who were wise enough to worship when it was disastrous to scoff, and keen-witted enough to conform when it was disastrous to dissent. Ask any one if he believes in the fairy tales of his childhood and he will tell you no; ask him why and he will look at you in a wondering way as if he thought you regarded him as a fool. But ask the same person if he believes in Christianity, a system of superstition whose doctrines and miracles are even more absurd than the wildest extravaganzas of fairy lore, and he will say yes, and much more emphatically than he has just said no.

In a world in which nothing happens by accident there is a reason for this. Men's religious beliefs, both pretended and real, have a cause. Pious rascality and genuine devotion do not proceed out of nothing. They are capable of scientifically exact explanation, and the person who does not think so is as chaotic intellectually as he who believes that in the beginning God created the heavens and earth. Genuine piety, whenever it exists, is always found in minds of low development, just as pretended piety is always found in minds of high development. The sincere Christian is a full-grown child who believes in the Santa Claus called God who is going to fill his stockings with harps and crowns and life everlasting in "the sweet bye and bye!" The make-believe Christian is simply a rascal who chooses to live off the sweat of others rather than sweat of his own.

The public men of every age have for the most part pretended to believe in the prevailing superstition. Cicero, one of the greatest of Romans, was a high priest of paganism, for such was the road to the political preferment to which he aspired. Cicero, however, did not believe in the superstition whose robes he wore and mummery he mouthed, for it was he who said that he did not understand how two priests could pass each other without smiling! Long before Cicero was born, Lucretius had written his poem on "The Nature of Things;" and even before Lucretius, the wisest of the Greeks had torn the current religion to shreds; in spite of which, however, Jupiter and Venus were worshiped for thousands of years by people who knew they did not exist.

Wherein, then, is to be found the marvelous vitality of all superstition? Is omnipresent and omnipotent Rascality! In the general tendency of every one to live at the expense of some one else, accomplishment of which is secured by nothing so easily and so certainly as religion. All actual or would-be thieves are solemn, and their victims solemnly submit, in the vain hope that they, too, will get some of the spoils, the form of thievery becoming outlawed or extinct only when a majority of mankind realize there is nothing in it for them. Thus primitive man is historically revealed as a solemn cannibal, which he outgrew to become a pious plunderer and in our own times a Christian slave-driver. In fact, everything the human race has done was done religiously, except discover truth!

There is no possible crime that has not been deified and worshiped as a god. Even highway robbery had its god in Hercules, and the votaries of lust thronged the temples of Venus and Aphrodite. Greece, in the golden age of its glory, had thousands of temples dedicated to prostitution, and when her soldiers went forth to murder their millions they did so in the name of Bellona and Mars. Look at such peoples as the Aztecs and their bloodthirsty divinities, victims of which were as eager to die on their altars as their priests were to sacrifice them. Look at the Juggannath cars of India and the child-eating crocodiles of their sacred rivers, the burning of wives alive with the bodies of their dead husbands, to say nothing of the millions of others whom Superstition actually devoured in countless ways!

Not, however, have all these things, monstrously diabolical though they are, happened because the masses of men did not know they are, happened because the masses of men did not know—to say—not to think—it was foolish. Rascality, indeed, teaches us to say as well as to think that cause to serve but its own, teaches us to say as well as to think that the votaries of superstition are the victims of their own duplicity. The evidence is abundant and the proof simple.

Take your own daily life and examine it a little. Some one calls you a liar, sincerely disgusting you perhaps as that which you really are. But whether you are liar or not, the prevailing superstition concerning personal honor and dignity compels you to strike or kill. It even compels you to assail a physical giant who you know in advance is likely to kill you. Thus an insult will force cowards

"Who inward searched have livers white as milk" to conduct themselves, and frequently to their own loss of limb or life, as if "They were the beard of Hercules or frowning Mars."

Public opinion thus makes many a weakling strut like a giant and bluster and blow as a make-believe fighter, while in his heart he knows he deserves all the insults that have been offered him; and is scared out of his wits at having to resent them. And so Rascality, insulted Rascality, pretends to respect and reverence public opinion in barrooms and streets—the identical Rascality that makes so much noise with its Glory to God in the church and Hurrah for the Flag on the rostrum!

Again, you have seen hundreds of convicts at work under less than a dozen guards. All of them could not be shot if they attempted to escape, but since any one of them may be shot they work on submissively, each awaiting occasion when a break for liberty may be made with little or no personal danger. At times there is a rare spirit who will break for liberty under any and all circumstances, his rarity as a rule promptly effecting his extermination. As in the convict camp, so in the church camp. Nearly all of its mental prisoners—for prisoners they are as truly as galley slaves chained to the oar—would break for Rationalism if every one were certain he would not be hurt or exterminated in so doing. And like convicts, when some one begins to talk of escape there are many to warn the guards—the clergy—of his plot—heresy—that they, too cowardly to try to escape, may make prison-life easier for themselves!

Such is the source of the marvelous vitality of superstition, multitudinous and irrepressible Rascality, which is after all the bulwark of all tyrannies, ecclesiastical or political, ancient, mediæval and modern despotisms, regardless of whether they manifest themselves as conquering armies, Christian inquisitions, Russian czardoms or American plutocracies. Such social monstrosities do not flourish and have never flourished because the masses believe in them or have believed in them, but because their victims pretend to believe in them as well as pretend to believe that their fellow pretenders are not pretenders; and so Rascality, omnipresent and irrepressible Rascality, most virulent in its religious phase, like a world-embracing pestilence, rages unchecked and uncheckable!

How often, O Reader! have you heard and continue to hear the ominous Sh——! Hypocritical wind whistling through rascally teeth, accompanied by shoulder-shrugs, dilation of eyes and furtive glancings about, and the Truth you were about to utter slinks away into the Soul-depths whence it came! Thus thrive all Lies, little and big, and thus fattens all Superstition until grown so great it falls of its own weight, to be swept utterly and forever away by sudden volcanic Truth-upheavals from universal Soul-depths—inevitable cataclysmic annihilation of whole systems of Lies! A lie, big or little, has a life to live, and it will not be abandoned to perish until it ceases to yield tithes, Peter's pence or revenue of some kind; and so Truth, like poverty-stricken bastardy left on door-steps, must struggle against nameless difficulties to make its way in the world, nor will men doff their hats until its victorious banner is seen flying over the field of Error.

THE IDEAL OF LOVE.

By E. B. Kerr.

In No. 1091 Channing Severance says: "We are indebted to Franklin for the saying that we can no more think alike than we can look alike. To this truism I will add: or feel alike." Like most "truisms," this is only half true. In a large proportion of cases all sane men do think exactly alike. All are agreed that two and two make four, and all who can understand the subject think alike about the truths of Euclid. Likewise in a large proportion of matters all feel alike. All feel thirsty for lack of water, all feel hungry for want of food, and all feel cold when the temperature is low. Now, there is an important matter on which all persons who have ever lived have felt alike—viz., that variety is pleasant. In every country in the world there is a popular proverb to that effect. The Romans said, "Variatio delectat" (variety delights); the English say, "Variety is the spice of life"; the Scotch say, "Changes are lightsome"; and so on. Moreover, there is a point on which all men except a few ascetics think alike—viz., that in every matter except one variety is healthy and invigorating. All are agreed that in diet, climate, scenery, occupation, study, and an endless number of other subjects, variety is beneficial in the highest degree; but the great majority of mankind say that the one subject of love is an exception to all rules, and that what is good in all other things is not good in love. The varietists say that this is an utterly absurd superstition, which is not supported by a vestige of proof, and they believe that when they have exploded this superstition all men and women will think and feel alike about the joys and blessings of variety in love.

Mr. Severance says: "There are men who are natural born varietists, for they have but little conception of love that goes deeper than physical attraction; and many women are fitted for just such mates." That is to say, that in Mr. Severance's opinion the desire for variety is entirely inspired by physical beauty, and arises only in those persons who are attracted by hardly anything except physical beauty. Mrs. Untermann has the same idea. I am sorry to say that both Mrs. Untermann and Mr. Severance are painfully limited in their knowledge of the psychology of love. If they were right, the love of variety would be found mainly in persons of low development, whereas the greatest minds of the world have been the greatest varietists. The greatest varietist whose biography has been written was Goethe, and all Germans consider him the greatest intellect their country ever produced. Emerson says of Goethe, "The old eternal genius who built the world has confided himself more to this man than to any other." Yet Goethe's whole life, from boyhood to old age, is filled with an endless succession of love affairs. If I am not mistaken, Mr. Severance is a great admirer of Voltaire and Franklin; did he never hear of their varietism? Could Shelley feel nothing but physical attraction for a woman? Let Mr. Severance read two poems, called "To Mary in Heaven" and "Highland Mary," and then ask himself if Robert Burns, one of the greatest varietists that ever lived, had "but little conception of love that goes deeper than physical attraction." What I have said applies to women also. The greatest women have been the greatest varietists. Sappho, Aspasia, Queen Elizabeth, the two Catherines of Russia, Madame de Staël, George Sand, and many other great women, have left a varietist record that many a man might envy. It is a noteworthy fact that these women chose for lovers men who were eminent in mind rather than beautiful in body. In the long list of George Sand's lovers we find such men as Chopin, Alfred de Musset, and Prosper Mérimée. Does Mr. Severance imagine that these were the handsomest men in France?

Mr. Severance says: "The man or woman who has found in his or her mate all that love can give or soul can crave cannot become a varietist, for the good and sufficient reason that no desire exists to compass." The question is, was there ever such a man or woman? If there was, he or she was a miserable creature. Imagine a man being taken into the fairest garden of the earth and told that all the flowers are his to enjoy. Immediately inside the gate he finds a tulip, plucks it, and stands fixed gazing on it. When told to walk on and see the other flowers he says: "Yes, no doubt they are beautiful; but I have found in this tulip all that love can give or soul can crave, and so desire exists in me ever to see any other flower." What would any true lover of flowers think of such a man? Would he not say that he had a very small soul, and that gardens were not made for such men? But what shall we say of a man who is born into a world filled with beautiful and charming women, of every variety of beauty, of every different type of thought and taste, some musical, some artistic, some deeply intellectual, some earnest in propaganda, some grave, some gay, and differing from one another in infinite shades of all these excellences; what shall we say of a man who at the age of twenty-one discovers in one of these women "all that love can give or soul can crave," and has henceforth no desire for any other? I think we must say that such a man is a poor creature. Happily, there is no such man. If any man told me that he felt no attraction to any woman but his wife, I should say that he was either a liar, a eunuch, a very sick man, or one who had not been married many hours; and at that point I am willing to leave the matter to the other male readers of LUCIFER. As for women, Gladys Lamb says that "none are exclusive in thought," and I have no doubt she is right.

Mr. Severance says: "Take the case of Andrew Jackson, who, when his wife suddenly died, though a man of iron will and courage that never faltered in time of danger, became a changed man in a day and was never the same afterwards. Does any one suppose that the idea of variety would have found a welcome in his brain, or lers, when living?" Yes, I suppose so. What makes me suppose so is that I have met a number of married couples almost if not quite as much attached to one another as the Jacksons, and in almost every case both the man and woman have been varietists. I can safely say that in three-fourths of the happy marriages I have known this has been the case. There are many such cases in America, and if Mr. Severance asks me where such happy couples are to be found, I will tell him that he will find such without going outside of Los Angeles. I do not know enough about the Jacksons to say how far they were varietists in practice, but I have no doubt that they were at least varietists in thought, and that they both got a great deal of pleasure from the society of other persons of the opposite sex.

I am well aware, however, that there are many persons who find exclusiveness fairly tolerable, and it is mainly to such persons that I address myself. Oscar Wilde truly said that the great merit of an agitator is that he goes among some perfectly contented class of people and makes them discontented. It is that alone that makes progress possible. My great aim is to awaken discontent among those who are happy in exclusiveness. I want to make them ashamed of such mean and narrow happiness, and to arouse them to the desire for something better.

TUBSUDS AND LOGIC.

By Leon Belfort.

I have observed that when a writer uses the word "logic" he thinks he is profound—or wishes others to think so. So when Brother Armstrong (LUCIFER 1092) speaks of applying the "logic of free speech to the logic of free love," I at once sit up and take notice.

Being a woman, I am not much of a logician, but I am trying to work it out. "Logic is logic," they say, so it should work both ways, and be as true for me as for Brother Armstrong. What I wish to get at is the meaning of "free speech," applying Brother Armstrong's logic.

I have reached the following conclusions: To believe in "free speech" it is not necessary to be a miscellaneous linguist. In fact, it is rather reprehensible to be a miscellaneous linguist. A wise person and a prudent would always see to it when advocating free speech that no one for a moment supposes him to be a miscellaneous linguist.

At the same time, he need not claim that he is irrevocably wedded to one language. That would certainly be a narrow position. One might get utterly tired of speaking English, and might give it up and take up French or German. But one must be sure to give up the English entirely before speaking the other language. It would not do to allow any one to suppose that an educated and refined man could use two languages at once, to say nothing of three or four or more! No, he must stick to the first language until he is utterly tired of it, and then he must never go back to it. Latin, of course, he has first rid himself entirely of any other language he may have taken up.

Bearing in mind these little restrictions, one may "talk in one's own way, beginning and ending when one likes, without intending to here or be rude to the listener." But doesn't Brother Armstrong think it a trifle unwise to use so broad a term as "free speech"? Might it not be found offensive to some supersensitive linguist? Might it not be subject to misunderstanding? Would it not be wise to find some less blunt and plain-spoken phrase to convey the meaning? "Free" is an adjective that has been used in unsavory connections; for instance, in the expression "free love;" also in connection with woman, "free woman;" it is growing less and less understood and appreciated, in this country at least; could not Brother Armstrong suggest something more poetic, more euphemistical? Freedom, of all things, should be always "administered with an anesthetic!"

But possibly, my logic is illogical, after all my trying. It may be that a splash of tubsuds has blinded my sight. Or it is just possible—though I hardly dare suggest such a thing—and yet—are you very sure, Brother Armstrong, that you haven't some of that cynical tubsuds in your own eyes?

SUDS FROM THE TUB OF A CYNIC.

By James Armstrong.

Speaking of 'taters, what do you think of Ann the Medi-tater? Perhaps she is Irish—Ann O'Tater. If she isn't she ought to be, for she certainly is a Cork-er!

It is the function of men like Harman to make the world better in spite of itself. They are the human elements of good without which the elements of evil would soon make life impossible. Such men have seldom or never been crowned or lauded, while their services are taken without thanks and their memories defamed as if they had been kings, presidents or captains of industry! Such universally is the fate of those who pursue the Ideal; and yet I believe they are happier far than those whose delight is to fatten on the swill of Hypocrisy from the trough of Public Approval.

The newspaper that thinks it creates public opinion is like a mirror which might think it created the sun. Journalism creates nothing, but reflects everything—even the truth when it "must!"

No one is ashamed of naked beauty, but simply afraid not to pretend to be ashamed; and thus Art, like everything else, meets the greatest resistance in omnipresent and omnipotent Hypocrisy.

Truth need not expect to do much business in the world until it is able to carry a payroll, in which respect Truth and Error are exactly alike—the most of people will work for it so long as there is "anything in it."

The only way to kill a lie is to bankrupt it, and the only way to bankrupt it is for the majority to boycott it; and thus I fear Mendacity will be a long time getting into the hands of a receiver.

All parasites are liars, and must be, for no one can confess that he is doing to others what he is unwilling for them to do to him. Thus I am suspicious of those who have so much to say about their love of truth. The fact that one is not a social parasite is nothing to blow about.

I do not believe women are conservative because they are conservative. I think that for the most part they are too timid to be radical, in which respect they are like about an equal number of radical men who are honest because they haven't the courage to be crooked. men who are honest because they haven't the courage to be crooked.

The average woman accepts matrimony the same as she takes to the corset and high-heel shoes. She will dispense with all three when they are no longer fashionable. You may deny this, my friends, but I understand—it is fashionable to deny such things.

While you're yet alive I drink a double health to thee, Moses Harman!

When a truth appears it doffs its cap and apologizes for its presence, for it is like a beggar who has nothing to give but advice. A lie comes in like a spendthrift scattering coins; a swaggering, blustering boor, but withal lauded, laureled, glorified! Moral: Don't be surprised if a fellow takes to your money better than he does to your ideas.

THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS looks better, sounds better, is better. And I believe it will raise more hell among the orthodox than LUCIFER!

The miserable love company, not because they are glad to see others suffering with them, but because they suffer less when there is none to mock their sufferings. It is always a most painful thing to see others rejoicing in the fact that they are not as miserable as we are. Thus I would say that misery loves sympathy, something it cannot get except from those who "suffer with" it.

It would not be a bad thing, I think, to pronounce "marriage" as if it were written "mar-age."

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

All of the Old Guard and most of the younger generation of free-minded people have heard of "Aunt Elmina." She has been an inspiration to thousands who are trying to break through the prison bars of tradition and conventionalism to a saner, better view of life. The writer well remembers his experience twelve years ago, when, having broken with orthodoxy, he was still surrounded by an orthodox environment and made to feel all the bitterness of society's disapproval of an "infidel!" It was at this time that he began a correspondence with Aunt Elmina, whose kindness, appreciation and sympathy across the miles of space intervening supplied a need by correspondence that otherwise would have remained unsatisfied. And her kindness did not end with writing helpful letters herself, but she took pains to put him in touch with other emancipated minds, so that the feeling of loneliness and isolation was in a large degree removed. From my own experience I have always felt that every liberal paper and magazine should encourage correspondence among its readers, many of whom are isolated and need the stimulus that comes from the "fellowship of kindred minds." (Such a club is conducted by C. A. Kirk, Box 733, Mitchell, S. D. Send stamp for particulars.)

Elmina Drake Slenker was born of Quaker parents at Lagrange, N. Y., December 23, 1827, so that she is now in her eightieth year. She still uses the Quaker "thee" in conversation and correspondence. As has been the case with many infidels, her father was a preacher, Thomas Drake, but he soon became a "doubting Thomas" concerning the Christian belief. Elmina grew up in the liberal school, prepared to accept the truth wherever found, and early in life made the acquaintance of such liberals as Abby Kelley Foster, Henry C. Wright, Parker Pillsbury and Ernestine L. Rose. She was the eldest of six girls and grew up in an atmosphere of debate. One by one she adopted and advocated temperance, free soil, water cure, phrenology, anti-slavery, equal rights and liberalism. At the age of fourteen she began taking notes of passages of Scripture that struck her as being objectionable, improbable, impossible or ridiculous, and in 1836 these were worked up into a series of articles for the Boston Investigator and afterwards put into book form by the publisher.

At twenty-six Elmina began thinking about taking a partner for life, and, putting in practice her theory of woman's equality, she advertised in the Water-Cure Journal for a husband. The notice called for one who had a soul above mere dollars and a heart willing to love and be loved. Over sixty replies came to her advertisement, and from them she selected that of Mr. Slenker, whom she soon afterward married. The marriage also differed from the ordinary in that their simple contract to take each other as man and wife was read in the presence of a few friends and signed by them as witnesses. There was no promise made to love, honor and obey, because they deemed it expedient not to promise what they might not be able to perform.

After her marriage Elmina made it her main object in life to advance the cause of free thought. This she calls her life work and every leisure moment not given to household duties has been spent in talking, writing and distributing books, papers and liberal tracts. There is probably not a woman in the country or the world more thoroughly emancipated than Aunt Elmina. She has always been in advance of her time, and, being a woman, this is all the more remarkable, because hero-worship and idealism are thoroughly ingrained in the nature of most women. Being the mothers of the race, nature or evolution has given them the greatest admiration for the strong and robust type of man—that being the type, other things being equal, most likely to beget and provide for his progeny. So they are prone to make a religion of that which primarily arose in the need of a strong fighting man to protect them and their children from natural enemies.

Elmina rose superior to this reverential instinct if she ever possessed it. She it was who first proclaimed the doctrine of female superiority. "Nature," she says, "always works, if we may so term it, to produce a female. Protoplasm itself may be called female, because it is the mother of all organized life. All through the vegetable and animal world we see life working for the perfection of the female—that the female is the acme of all organization."

Now she is old and has outlived her income and is dependent on friends for everything. The church people pension those who grow old in their service, and it is only common fellowship that would urge liberals to do as much. Those feeling prompted to a kind act can reach Aunt Elmina by addressing Snowville, Va.—W. C. Cope, in To-Morrow.

AN APPEAL TO THE BENEVOLENT.

By J. Francis Ruggles.

Every old-time reader of progressive LUCIFER has perused with pleasure the brilliantly enlightening contributions of the veteran literal worker, Mrs. Elmina Drake Slenker, of Snowville, Pulaski County, Virginia, who for two generations tirelessly kept her pen a-writing, and, Samaritan-like, expended a lifetime in taking up dime and dollar collections for the aid of suffering humanity.

Possessing only plain Quaker honesty and an unsuspecting nature, she has fallen a victim to the duplicity and rapacity of those who should have been friends, so that now, when the shadows of old age and debility are fast falling around, she finds herself in dire financial distress. From her modest home she has sacrificed even her literary treasures, carpets and anything that would bring means to keep the hungry wolf from her door. Some Truthseekers responded nobly to its editor's generous call, and each reader of LUCIFER should regard it both a duty and an honor to alacrionsly render aid to this aged benefactor, for none are more worthy of such remembrance. So, let's all send her some token, if no more than a cheer-up letter with stamp for response, as correspondence has been "Aunt" Elmina's delight.

Alas, alas, that ever love was sin!—Chaucer.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THE PIONEER ADVOCATE OF EUGENICS IN AMERICA.

MOSES HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED FORTNIGHTLY AT 500 FULTON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
TELEPHONE: ASHLAND 1727.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE:
E. C. WALKER, 244 WEST 143D STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Six months .....50 cents Three months.....25 cents
One year .....$1.00 Single copies ..... 5 cents

Money orders and drafts should be made payable to Moses Harman. Please do not send personal checks, as a discount is charged by the banks for collection.

Letters for LUCIFER should be addressed to Moses Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

LUCIFER: ITS MEANING AND PURPOSE.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privileges.

If you have something to sell or a "want" to make known, try an advertisement in THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS. We hope to make it a huge success, and the first number will be especially good as an advertising medium. Let us know what you have and want and we will send terms.

TO YOU.

DID YOU DO IT?

In No. 1092 I asked every subscriber to LUCIFER who wishes to receive it in its new form to send us an order to that effect. Many responses have been received; but there still remains a considerable number from whom we have not heard. I hope that on the twentieth of June we will have an order from every one of our subscribers. We must make new application for entry at second-class rates, and the larger the list of subscribers we have, the better it will be for the journal.

DOES THIS MEAN YOU?

If those whose subscriptions have expired or are about to expire will remit for renewal at the same time, it will be a great favor to us. It is almost impossible to find time to send out statements of account, but if your subscription number (given after your name on wrapper) is less than 1093, the number of this issue, your subscription is overdue. And we need the money!

COST, PRICE, AND SIZE.

Each issue of the magazine will cost nearly quadruple the price we have had to pay for each issue of LUCIFER. The price per year will remain one dollar. We hope and believe that through a larger circulation and increased advertising we shall be able to defray the extra expense. We shall try to improve the paper in every possible way. It will contain forty-eight pages, 6x9½ inches. We hope to be able to increase the number of pages soon, and will do so as soon as practicable.

HOW YOU CAN INCREASE THE CIRCULATION.

For 75 cents we will send four copies for three months. In its new form our journal should be acceptable to public libraries and reading rooms, and much good may be accomplished by presenting subscriptions to such places. Even in its present form LUCIFER is accepted by libraries, some of which—including the John Crerar Library of Chicago, and the Columbia University Library of New York—have been self-paid subscribers for several years. Can you not find use for the four extra copies for three months? If you order subscriptions sent to other addresses be sure to obtain the consent of the addressee. We want to issue a large edition of the July number, and ask our friends to send in orders as early as possible. In lots of ten or over, we will supply them at 5 cents each; 25 cents for three; 10 cents a single copy.

A very considerable interest in LUCIFER'S work has been manifest in the year just past, and I believe the time is now propitious to do more effective work than has ever before been accomplished. This little paper has been truly a beacon light to many of us. Let us now work together that it may continue its mission as a light bearer in the old but ever new field of race improvement.

What say you?

LILLIAN HARMAN.

PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

Now that it has been, after much deliberation, decided to change the name LUCIFER to THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS, the next thing is to map out a definite plan of campaign for the rejuvenated, the reincarnated journal.

One chief objection to the old name was and is that it did not, does not, indicate with sufficient clearness the particular line of work to which its energies were to be devoted. A very serious objection, as all must admit.

This is an age of specialties. Division of labor is the motto, the watchword, of the day, and he who would make his mark upon the world's progress must concentrate!

Ella Wheeler was right when she wrote the little poem beginning, "The age is too diffusive; time and force are frittered out and leave no satisfaction," ending with those memorable words:

> "There's lack of greatness in this generation—
> And why? Because no more man centers on one thought!
> We know this truth and yet we heed it not:
> The secret of success is concentration!"

In all lines of human endeavor men are now learning the lesson of concentration, and hence we see a multitude of journals devoted to single departments of human effort, such as agriculture, live-stock raising, poultry raising, bee-keeping, fruit raising, floriculture, etc., etc., not to mention the still greater multitude of journals devoted to politics, to religion, to economics, to medicine, to dietetics, to charitable projects, to physics, to metaphysics and "Lord knows" what all; but hitherto there has been no journal devoted wholly or even chiefly to eugenics, to the subject of right generation of human beings, so far as I know, except LUCIFER the Light Bearer. And even this little journal has divided its forces between eugenics and the work of blazing a path for freedom of speech and of press for all men and women to use, no matter what their line of thought may be.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found a poem entitled "Free Speech," which voices in strongly worded sentences one of the most important divisions of LUCIFER'S work.

Not that no other journals have taken up the fight for eugenics and for freedom to discuss eugenics. Honorable mention should be made of The Word, a very unconventional monthly edited and published by Ezra H. Heywood, of Princeton, Mass.; also of Foundation Principles, edited and published by Lois Waisbrooker; also of The Adult, by George Bedborough, of London, England. Each and all of these did valiant and effective work for the cause of Right Borning, and for the right of self-ownership for woman, and for freedom to discuss these rights; but the fates seem to have been against these three noble and courageous journals and therefore one after the other they gave up the ghost and joined the majority of ventures in the field of radical journalism, leaving LUCIFER all alone, so far as I now recall, to fight the battles of "liberty and more light" upon this the most vitally important of all lines of human education.

And now that a new departure has been determined upon by the publishers of LUCIFER it is well, as I think, that a carefully prepared plan of campaign be presented to old and new friends of LUCIFER and its work, and their earnest and efficient cooperation solicited for and with this plan.

For this issue of LUCIFER I respectfully submit the following from a "List of Subjects for Study in Eugenics," which list was sent to me by Mrs. Curtis, secretary of the San Francisco Eugenic Society:

"To investigate, and report on heredity in the human family.

"To emphasize the value of superior blood and the menace to all of inferior blood.

"Prenatal conditions.

"Environments.

"Proper mating of parents.

"Why is the subject of Eugenics the most scientific and majestic problem of the day?

"What is the result of institutional marriage?

"Has every woman an inherent right to decide when she shall bring forth a child, and who shall be its father?

"What are the great sexual needs of this age?

"What has caused the romantic and sentimental wave that has commenced to operate in the past year? And what are its effects?

"What percentage of married couples continue to love each other after five years of married life—by civil law?

"What tends more to the higher intellect, greater success and better health of the coming race?

"What do we mean by arrested embryonic development?"

While no one, probably, will claim that this list of subjects is the best that can be formulated, it contains many good and useful suggestions, as I think.

Other suggestions of a practical nature are hereby earnestly solicited from LUCIFER'S old-time friends and helpers; also from any one who may now be interested in the success of the old young pioneer journal in the much-neglected, yet all important, work of Right Generation.

M. HARMAN.

SEND US NAMES OF PROGRESSIVE PERSONS.

Please send us names of thinking people, especially broad-minded educators. We wish to send the first number of THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS to as many such persons as possible. If you can contribute toward the expense of mailing, such assistance will be welcome. But send the names, anyway. And let us have them as soon as possible.

BRIEF MENTION.

LOS ANGELES, Tuesday, May 28, 1907.

Prominent among recent sensations in the "Angelic" City is the advent of Emma Goldman, editor of Mother Earth, and noted everywhere as the woman who gives the police more anxiety and trouble than any other lecturer since the demise of Herr Most, editor of Freiheit. Miss Goldman has delivered five lectures here since Thursday last, to crowded houses. At her first and last lecture it is said that hundreds were turned away for lack of even standing room.

Though the police have been on the watch, apparently, for some excuse to interfere with these meetings, no attempt at suppression has yet been made.

Financially Miss Goldman's visit to Los Angeles appears to have been a great success—also in getting subscriptions to her little magazine, and in distributing other Anarchistic literature.

Having previous engagements of my own I have not attended all these lectures, but found all that I heard very entertaining and instructive and by no means so revolutionary or startling to conservatives as the newspapers are in the habit of reporting.

Miss Goldman is organizing a club for the study of social and political problems, to be called the Los Angeles Social Science Club—if I mistake not. She will remain a few days longer—so I understand.

The Los Angeles Eugenic Society still holds weekly meetings at Naturopathic Hall, South Hill street. At last meeting Mrs. C. P. Wallace delivered a thrillingly interesting discourse of an hour or more in length, on "Child Marriage in India." Tonight Dr. Henry S. Tanner, the "world-renowned faster," will address the club on "Some Eugenic Facts." Next meeting—a week from tonight—I am expected to talk on the subject of "Abuse of Child Wives in the United States and in Europe"—in which I expect to show that, no matter how young or how old the woman may be when she marries, she is never expected, in Christian lands, to reach her majority; never expected to be or allowed to be a self-owning individual.

I have scrupulously attended every meeting of the Los Angeles Eugenic Club hitherto, but tonight I shall probably spend part of the time at least hearing Dr. Windsor demolish the Copernican system of astronomy, including the nebular hypothesis, the old theories regarding the cause of the tides, of solar light and heat, etc. Dr. Windsor teaches the magnetic and electric theories of Samuel T. Fowler in regard to astronomy and cosmic energy. He has leased his present quarters on Fourth street, just opposite the Angelus Hotel, for three years, and expects to make this city his headquarters in future, instead of Boston.

I recommend all in search of health to the Naturopathic Cure, 337½ South Hill street, Los Angeles. The location is high and easy of access to the business part of the city. The equipment is every way admirable. Write to Dr. Fuller.

If present calculations do not miscarry I shall probably leave Los Angeles and its environs soon after June 15 and go to San Diego; thence, after a brief stay, to San Jose and San Francisco. My address at San Diego will be in care of Albion L. Washburn, 1509 Second street.

M. HARMAN.

POINTERS.

Among the many pointers showing that the leaven of radical thought on eugenic lines is working—slowly but surely working in the great mass of mankind, demanding that motherhood shall receive greater appreciation and a greater share of justice from man-made laws and customs, and that the unborn have rights that the living are bound to respect—among these many pointers I select a few from the daily papers and weekly and monthly publications in the city of Los Angeles.

In the May number of the magazine called Fellowship, edited by Benjamin Fay Mills, assisted by Mary Russell Mills, Bolton Hall, N. O. Nelson, and others more or less famous, under the head, "Child Culture," by Harriet T. Gerson, appears this paragraph:

"We can agree with Moses Harman and his followers, that the first requisite is to be born well. The eugenic societies lay great stress on that. It is said that in the months just preceding Robert Ingersoll's birth, his mother read Tom Paine. Some would say her mental attitude affected the unborn babe; others would say she was so influenced by this new soul that she was constrained to think along certain lines. All we can say is that we do not know, but it is always safe to live in the best atmosphere we can. Consciously preparing for parenthood, and meaning to surround the new life with the best conditions in our power, our first thought should be to develop a healthy little animal. Much thought and scientific study has been given to the raising of fine horses, cows and pigs, the best progenitors, the proper feeding, the most careful handling. Trainers of high-bred colts are enjoined to give gentle treatment and are forbidden even rough speaking to the young animals. How does this compare with the ordinary nursery regime? We are beginning to recognize that the rearing of human beings requires careful study also, and more attention is constantly being given to the physical development. This is fundamental, for, without a firm foundation, how can anything permanent be built up?"

Harriet T. Gerson is entitled to my thanks for writing and the publisher has my thanks for giving the light of print to her good article.

The leading article in this number of Fellowship is by the editor-in-chief and is entitled "Message to Mothers." Seeing a lecture on this subject, by Mr. Mills, advertised for Sunday, May 1, I went to hear him and had the pleasure of getting through the ear the identical discourse that had already been published as first article in the magazine aforesaid. Mr. Mills is a very entertaining speaker, whether he talks extemporaneously or with the aid of print.

In his "Message to Mothers" the cause of the phenomenal success of Benjamin Fay Mills is very apparent, as I think. While giving his people much that is in line with the best and most progressive thought of the age, much that is Emersonian and even Whitmanesque, he is very careful, by adroit suggestion, to convince his hearers that, however radical and progressive he may be on many lines, he is a stanch supporter of orthodox marriage—the monogamic, the life-long union of one woman to one man. The following paragraph is significant:

"The great lesson of perfect motherhood requires as preliminary the complete trust in the husband. The marvelous surrender of a noble woman to her less refined husband is a perpetual wonder to me. He is more free, by the nature of his constitution, but she gives all; and the home, worthy to be a type of heaven, is born from a pure wife's ideal, developed by a mother's trial and perfected by the complete offering of a noble woman's self. Both husband and wife may fail in their ideals and their actualization, but usually I think the wife is distinguished by a nobler and more nearly selfless devotion than the husband."

In the whole discourse there is not the slightest hint, that I can see, that the wife would ever be justified in breaking away from her "less refined husband" even when her whole being revolts from that intimate association with him that is necessary to "motherhood" whether "perfect" or imperfect. So far as language reveals his thought, Mr. Mills would teach absolute submission from the wife to the husband, notwithstanding the fact that she is "distinguished by a nobler and more nearly selfless devotion than the husband."

Speaking of the child, he quotes—

> "Whoever is begotten of pure love
> And comes desired and welcomed into life,
> Is of immaculate conception,"—

but always the suggestion seems to be that if the child is not begotten of pure love the fault lies with the mother herself; that it is her duty to love her husband whether he proves himself worthy of her love or not, or whether from any cause the bond of "pure love" is lacking to the wedded pair.

If I have misinterpreted the head of the Los Angeles Fellowship I shall be glad to be set right, for I find myself in full sympathy with much of his work and with that of his remarkably bright and amiable companion, Mary Russell Mills, whose article on "The New Woman" in the same number of Fellowship I read with a great deal of interest.

"LITTLE ACCIDENTS."

Under this head Editor Brook, of the Times staff (Los Angeles), in his weekly talks on "Care of the Body," uses this noteworthy language:

"A dispatch from New Orleans announced that orders for 300 babies have been placed with the New York Foundling and Orphan Asylum by Louisiana families, and are being filled as rapidly as possible.

"These same people would hesitate to place orders for hogs, or horses, or chickens, without seeing them and knowing something of their lineage. This, however, is on a par with a system that devotes much thought and money to the breeding of cattle, and makes all children—legal and otherwise—'little accidents.'

"Perhaps when we cease to place odium upon the innocent result of an illicit union, foundling asylums will become more numerous in America, and abortions less frequent. Meantime, while in France they build foundling asylums, in America we practice abortion to an extent that is undreamt of in any other country, civilized or uncivilized. Which is the better plan?"

In another paragraph Mr. Brook quotes from the book "Diseases of Society and Degeneracy," by Dr. O. Frank Lydston, as follows:

"Illegitimacy is a menace to the home and to fundamental property rights. It shakes the moral code to its very foundations, yet the laws bearing upon it, both written and unwritten, are the cruelest ever devised by man, because of the helplessness of the principal victim, the unborn child. Worse than the brand of Cain is the brand of 'bastard,' a word that should be stricken out of to right the wrong to unborn innocence and yet avoid the evils of illegitimacy."

Commenting on this utterance of Dr. Lydston, the editor of "Care of the Body" says: "There is, however, a way, and that way is not to visit the sins of the fathers upon the children."

These clippings—the press dispatch from New Orleans, the quotation from the medical doctor, and the comments on both by the Los Angeles editor—are very significant, very prophetic, as I see it, of a radical overturning of old-time standards of morality and virtue in the most important of human relations, the sexual, the reproductive.

Dr. Lydston rightly says that "illegitimacy shakes the moral code to its very foundations." That is to say, illegitimacy, as interpreted by church and state authorities, is a menace to the artificial home and to artificial property rights, and "shakes the moral code"—the artificial code, the anti-natural moral code—to its foundations.

By the "moral code," as used by Dr. Lydston and by the priests of statute and canon laws, is of course meant that no child every language. How pitiful the thought that there is no way can be "legitimate" that comes into life without their permission, no matter how nearly perfect in mind and body that child may be. If a woman, a prospective mother, has conscientious scruples against promising the use of her body sexually to any man for life, no matter how good that man may be and no matter how much she may now love him,—if a woman feels towards her lover as did Alice Cary when she wrote,

"The past is not mine, I am too proud to borrow,
You must grow to new heights if I love you tomorrow,"— and if (as she well knows) she can have no assurance that her lover will grow to new heights after the fateful knot has been tied, and if therefore she refuses to make any promises of love, honor and fidelity to any man, and yet if she claims her natural right, her inalienable right to motherhood, and if she practicalizes that right,—then by the canons of state-church morality that woman is an illegitimate mother and her child is an illegitimate child, and both must be driven from the society of respectable, legitimate men, women and children.

Yes, the "laws bearing upon illegitimacy, written and unwritten, are the cruelest ever devised by man," and yet Dr. Lydston helplessly accepts these cruelest laws and their terrible consequences, because he sees no other way to "avoid the evils of illegitimacy." That is, he sees no other way of perpetuating the present artificial, anti-natural patriarchate in the home, nor the present artificial, iniquitous, unjust and barbaric laws in regard to the titles, the division and entail of property, nor of perpetuating the present artificial, unnatural and unjust privileges of rulers in church and state, and of their parasitic favorites.

Yes, the Lydstons and their confreres in all the respectable walks and professions in our present-day society are eminently logical in their determination to uphold present laws and customs in regard to marriage, legitimacy and property rights. If Motherhood in Freedom should once become respectable the very foundations of our present enrollment of mankind into classes—rich and poor, rulers and ruled, good and bad, saints and sinners, criminals and non-criminals—would speedily disappear, and the "new heaven and new earth in which dwelleth righteousness" would soon be here.

If I mistake not, the Mosaic law said "A bastard shall not come into the congregation of the Lord." The same law said, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." The laws against witchcraft have become a dead letter, and most nations are now thoroughly ashamed and repentant that they ever believed in witchcraft, or punished witches, and so also, let us hope, the time is not far distant when all nations claiming to be civilized will be thoroughly ashamed and repentant that they ever ostracized and otherwise punished illegitimacy, whether of children or their mothers.

M. H.

ASK YOUR NEWSDEALER FOR EUGENICS.

If every one who is interested in the success of our magazine will call for it at the news stands a circulation through the news companies will be established. In LUCIFER's present form it seemed useless to attempt to secure a news stand trade, but the magazine should sell if offered, and it will be offered if the news agents are convinced that there is a demand for it. A few thousand calls for it will supply that conviction. We need the news stand trade in order to secure advertising, and when we get the advertising we will be enabled to enlarge and otherwise improve the magazine. See the point? And will you ask your newsdealer for THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS? You need not "do it now," but don't fail to do so on or about the twentieth of June!

OBSCENITY AND WITCHCRAFT—TWIN SUPERSTITIONS.

Has it ever occurred to you that the witchcraft superstition was almost identical in its essence with the present superstitious belief in the reality of the "obscene" as a thing outside the mind? Think it over.

Fanatical men and pious judges, otherwise intelligent, have affirmed the reality of both, and, on the assumption of their inerrancy in this, have assumed to punish their fellow-men. It is computed from historical records that 9,000,000 persons were put to death for witchcraft after 1484. The opponents of witch-belief were denounced just as the disbelievers in the "obscene" are now denounced. Yet witches ceased to be when men no longer believed in them. Think it over and see if the "obscene" will not also disappear when men cease to believe in it.

In 1661 the learned Sir Mathew Hale, "a person than whom no one was more backward to condemn a witch without full evidence," used this language: "That there are such angels [as witches] it is without question." Then he made a convincing argument from Holy Writ, and added: "It is also confirmed to us by daily experience of the power and energy of these evil spirits in witches and by them." (See "Annals of Witchcraft," by Drake, preface, page xi.)

A century later the learned Sir William Blackstone, since then the mentor of every English and American lawyer, joined with the witch-burners in bearing testimony to the existence of these spook-humans, just as our own courts today join with the obscenity-burners to affirm that obscenity is in a book and not in the reading minds, and that therefore the publisher and not the reader shall go to jail for being "obscene."

Blackstone said: "To deny the possibility, nay, actual existence, of witchcraft and sorcery is at once flatly to contradict the revealed word of God in various passages of both the Old and New Testament, and the thing itself is a truth to which every nation in the world hath in its turn borne testimony, either by example, seemingly well tested, or by prohibitory laws, which at least suppose the possibility of commerce with evil spirits." (Blackstone's Commentaries, page 59. Edition of 1850.)

And yet, when men ceased to believe in witches ceased to be; and so when men shall cease to believe in the "obscene" they will also cease to find that. Obscenity and witches exist only in the minds and emotions of those who believe in them, and neither dogmatic judicial dictum nor righteous vituperation can ever give to either of them any objective existence.

In the "good old days," when a few, wiser than the rest, doubted the reality of witches, if not themselves killed as being bewitched, they were cowed into silence by an avalanche of vituperation, such as "infidel," "atheist," or "emissary of Satan," "the enemy of God," "the anti-Christ," and some witch-finder would get on his trail to discover evidence of this heretic's compact with the devil.

How this is duplicated in the attitude of the nasty-minded portion of the public toward those who disbelieve in the objectivity of "obscenity"! Whether obscenity is a sense-perceived quality of a book, or resides exclusively in the reading mind, is a question of science, and as such a legitimate matter of debate. Try to prove its non-existence by the scientific method, and the literary scavengers, instead of answering your arguments by showing the fallacy of its logic or error of fact, show their want of culture, just as did the witch-burners. They tell you that you are "either an ignoramus or so ethereal that there is no suitable place on earth for you," except in jail. They further hurl at you such illuminating epithetic arguments as "immoral," "smut-dealing," "moral cancer-planter," etc. It is a regrettable fact that the miscalled "moral" majority is still too ignorant to know that such question-begging epithets when unsupported are not argument, and its members are too obsessed with sensual images to be open to any proof against their resultant "obscene" superstition.

Think it over and see if, when you cease to believe in the existence of "obscenity," you must not also cease to find it. If that be true, then it exists only in the minds and the emotions of those who believe in the superstition. Connect your mind with a sewer and empty therein all the ideational and emotional associations which the miscalled "pure" people have forced into your thoughts. Having done this, you may be prepared to believe that "unto the pure all things are pure, but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure, but even their mind and conscience is defiled." (Titus, i, 15.) Not till thus cleansed can you join in these words: "I know and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus that there is nothing unclean of itself, but to him that esteemeth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." (Romans xiv, 14.)

When you have cleansed your own mind of the "obscene" superstition, proclaim a real purity on the highways and byways, until other minds are likewise cleansed, and then our obscenity laws will soon die a natural death, and healthy-mindedness will have a chance to control the normal functioning of a healthy body.

Once let the public become sufficiently clean-minded to allow every adult access to all that is to be known about the physiology, psychology, hygiene and ethics of sex, and in two generations we will have a new humanity, with more health and joy, fewer wrecked nerves, and almost no divorces. All morbid curiosity will then be dispelled, and thus the dealer in bawdy art and literature will be bankrupted. Our sanitariums and hospitals and insane asylums in that day will be uninhabited by those hundreds of thousands of inmates who are now there because of compulsory ignorance of their own sex nature. All these present evils are the outgrowth of that enforced sexual ignorance resulting from our legalized prudery, brought about by our general acquiescence in the "obscene" superstition, forced upon us by the vehement insistence of our oversexed, prurient prudes. Let all clean-minded persons unite to abolish this twin to the witchcraft superstition and secure the annulment of all present laws against "obscene" literature. Thus you can best further the interest of humanity by promoting a sane and scientific physical and moral culture.—Theodore Schroeder, Attorney for the Free Speech League, in Physical Culture.

IS RADICALISM EFFECTIVE?

By Leon Partridge.

It often happens to the reform agitator to doubt the effectiveness of her or his labor. Peculiarly true is this in the case of the social radical. To this one, as he looks for evidence of his work, there often comes discouragement as he sees how few have taken up his ideas in entirety, and, forgetting the wide variations in the mental powers that exist among mankind, he asks: "Is my work effective?"

All human beings are not equal, and what seems willful blindness to the radical agitator is more often lack of brain power. Remembering this, the agitator must rather look for partial and at first hesitant increase of wisdom than a jump from Christian savagery to radical civilization. Taken from this viewpoint, have the labors of our pioneers been effective or not?

Within the past twenty years the writer has seen results achieved. Two decades ago the divorcee and the prostitute were held in nearly equal estimation, the socialist and communitarian were generally held to be enemies of civilization, and the agnostic—well, he was beyond all human pardon, a noxious beast. And no words can describe the abhorrence generally felt toward the sex radical or "free lover."

Now see the other side of the shield. Socialism is advancing with steady pace; the agnostic conception of the universe has all but become general; divorce is only frowned on by the most reactionary and a divorced woman has as good a social foothold as any. More yet, there has arisen a spirit of inquiry and liberal judgment on sex matters. Ten years ago, even, such things were very little discussed. Now the ideas of "race improvement" and "natural sex-life" are to a great degree openly talked and studied.

It cannot be denied that the sex radical is as yet not generally understood. But, except among extreme reactionaries and very ignorant old people, the general attitude is one of "none of my business." True, a large majority hold the principle a wrong one and even most of those who in theory agree think it a dubious proposition, but the gain is still a very great one. Most of all is this true in the younger generation, which may be said to accept the idea of trial union generally, and, while not dropping the marriage idea, hold marriage to be an alliance of equals.

The causes of this gain for radicalism, so great in the last five years, are far too many for mention herein, except one. This is the method of propaganda used by the present and rising generations of radicals: the "I was brought up to it, I find it best" attitude. The old guard shocked, the new radicals give as much as can be understood and avoid intrusiveness. This of itself tends for increasing gain for our ideals.

There is still hard work and trial ahead. State Socialism holds the menace of a drastic conservative-majority attack. The master class may a second time assassinate a president and deport or slaughter us. By timidity and failure either to live up to radical ideals or give us a new generation of free people, our rising generation may lose all now gained. But the fact remains that so far radicalism has borne glorious fruit in face of all opposition. And it is up to us of today—we in our youth—to carry on this glorious work. Let's get busy.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Full name and address of writers in this department can generally be obtained on application to the editor.

We are always glad to receive calls from friends visiting the city. Take the Lake street elevated, stop at Ashland avenue, walk one block east, then one block north. Or take Fulton street electric car west and stop at St. John's place, alighting in front of our house. The Lake street electric and Paulina street cars also pass within a block of our residence.

To the Editor:—Please send me THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS in lieu of my unexpired subscription to LUCIFER. I congratulate you upon the change. The new name is dignified and suggests a serious purpose, where the other invited the impression that it was merely a crank's means of aggravating somebody and not to be taken seriously. I am pleased with every element of the change.—Theodore Schroeder, New York.

To the Editor:—Please notify the postmaster-general at Washington, the postmaster at Chicago, the postmaster at Milford, President Roosevelt, and all others who are interested in my reading matter, that I want THE AMERICAN JOURNAL OF EUGENICS, and that to me it seems quite essential that I have it. If necessary you may inform them that I am old enough to be a grandmother, and that I have been interested in this special line of thought since my youth; that I am considered of sound mind and capable of reading such literature without detriment to my home, my children or my grandchildren. Of course you will pay the postage when you mail the magazine, which makes it unnecessary for me to guarantee the railroad company that they will lose nothing in transportation. I rejoice that I live in free America!—M. Florence Johnson, Rear 42 Central street, Milford, Mass.

To the Editor:—Your proposed change of form, name and issuance of your (our) valuable publication, as spoken of in last LUCIFER, strikes me as most timely. I have heretofore been opposed to a change of name, but the present proposition of a monthly magazine strikes me as a wise move and I think will prove a success. I will donate to the cause (my widow's mite) one dozen each of "Discussion of the Social Question," "Life and Health," and "Memorial Address of Thomas Paine," with cut of author.

Eugenics is a good name. It sounds scientific. I am glad it was coined. It makes so much difference, you know, the sort of word one uses to convey an idea. The world is moving in the direction of a broader liberty and deeper knowledge on the subject of race propagation and child culture. Let the good work go on until mankind outgrows its present ignorance and consequent suffering.

I was pained beyond expression at my inability, on account of illness, to be present at your home-coming, but was pleased to learn of the glorious result. I am now well and eager as ever in the struggle for human liberty and happiness. Wishing you, and all workers for a better race, abundant success, I remain, sincerely yours.—Juliet H. Severance, M. D., Chicago.

To the Editor:—Kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to make a short reply to Anna Stockinger, in LUCIFER of May 9, in regard to the Woman's National Daily. Yes, my sister, we are disappointed that it does not come up to the advanced thought of our time in the lines you have specified. And also I note that E. G. Lewis thinks race suicide, divorce, marriage, and the noble science of eugenics should "only be discussed in the privacy of the home." So we must wait for the Daily to evolute in these lines. But there are other lines of work that are important, and that that paper stands for. I wish every reader of LUCIFER would read the editorials in May 16 and 18 of the Woman's National Daily, and then join in the herculean task that Mr. Lewis has set for himself—to fight the most powerful political machine in the world, the most dangerous ring in the nation, the postal department, which is above law or courts of justice, and can crush out any person or paper it chooses. Let us all stand together in aid of Mr. Lewis, who stands for freedom and justice and the right to criticise wrong in high places. Let us help him to renovate the postal department—to make it a benefit and not a curse to the nation. Certainly all the subscribers to LUCIFER must feel that this is their fight. Send for a year's subscription to the Daily and keep in touch with the great struggle for free speech and free press. This at this time is paramount to all other issues, for in the battle to be fought the obnoxious obscenity laws will be wiped out. So, really without knowing it, Lewis is doing for it what we could not do in the interest of sex freedom. —Sarah Stone Kechhill, Alliance, Ohio.

To the Editor:—While all earnest thinkers on questions regarding sex are clamoring that education be given the young on that most important subject, to prevent many troubles incident to the evils of ignorance, I want to call the attention of radical thinkers to the danger of urging the teaching of sexual development and control in the public schools. I had not thought of the great evil arising from such teaching until quite recently. A physician then pointed out the danger. He said, "Let the schools take up the subject, and you will retard the idea of freedom in that line one thousand years. Better the common ignorance, with our teaching those who are dear to us when possible, than to have the young taught the ideas of sexual morality believed by our Christians and patriots. These would be the ideas taught in connection with sexual hygiene as soon as the subject was taken up by the government and made a part of the curriculum of the public school. Let sex and religion remain out of the school course, and parents teach their children at home." You can see what would be the result, when you think of the narrow ideas of most teachers. Think what Roosevelt would order instilled into the minds of young women.—M. Florence Johnson.

To the Editor:—The student of sociology cannot afford to overlook the sex question. Recent numbers of LUCIFER have contained several interesting discussions which have been greatly appreciated. I would like further consideration of the question, by one or more of the recent writers, on certain phases of the subject.

I make the following inquiries: What is "sex perversion"? Is it other than a highly endowed or highly developed physical sex desire?

Is abnormal sex desire inherited, or is it more often or always brought about by youthful "practices" which may tend to strengthen or develop that side of our nature? If the latter is the fact, surely the right sort of education and training during childhood and youth would prove effective in its correction.

To continue my inquiries: Because an individual is a varietist, does it imply that he or she is a "sex pervert," or that such associations or friendships are mainly based on the low plane of physical desire? Is it not extremely rare that life associations are formed wherein the parties find "all that love can give or soul can crave"? Is it not true that a large percentage of married pairs are not perfectly mated physically, to say nothing of "soul" or intellect?

Again: In the case of a married pair who have in all ways been satisfied with each other for a series of years, say ten, twenty or more, does it necessarily follow that they will always continue to be thus satisfied? While such pair may retain a true affection for each other, does it presumably indicate "sex perversion" when one or both find in others a true "soul satisfaction" they are unable to experience with each other as formerly?

It is conceded that mankind, when well along in years, finds a strong attraction in the young of the opposite sex. But if both sexes were economically free would such attraction naturally lead to sex expression to such extent as is the case today? Would not the young unite in wedlock with others of similar age, instead of outside of law with individuals much older or much younger, as is the case today? In such case would not the sex nature of those in declining years quiet down, and would not there be less temptation to express than under present conditions?—Inquirer, New York.

To the Editor:—Inclosed is postal order for $1, for which I wish you would be kind enough to send me a copy of Mr. Walker's "Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses," also a copy of Virginia M. Butterfield's "Parental Rights and Economic Wrongs," and the rest in copies of LUCIFER 1092, for distribution among some "woman's rights" folks that I know. At least one of them wrote me that she didn't see the paper, but thought the prosecution of Mr. Harman a disgraceful outrage.

Mr. Kerr says the shopgirl will probably marry one of her fellow clerks in the store, and I suppose she will; but is there not always the possibility that the poor girl with attractive face and manners and good-looking clothes may be able to capture some one out of her class? If so, as long as women are denied opportunity to gain influence in a legitimate way, they will be very likely to take this method. Moreover, this poor shopgirl has been known to become weary of long hours and miserable salary and to adopt "Mrs. Warren's profession" even without the sanction of the clergyman—all this positively without the slightest regard to motherhood, endowed or otherwise. Not only the clerk in the department store, but the helpless society girl, brought up in a condition of idleness and luxury, has probably never thought disgraceful for herself, that her father would probably have thought disgraceful for himself, must place finance well to the front in her maiden meditations, and she has to make the capture by means of pads, ruffles, frills, flounces, and the dressmaker knows what-not! If women did not want to marry and marry "well,"—I may be mistaken about it, but I have always thought that subscriptions to the Delineator would fall off considerably! Indeed, I do think economics have much to do with the sex problem, and with every other problem that we have.

As to varietism, what people are exactly the same two successive days, anyhow? But I am often impressed with what a gain there is in shutting out theology from the LUCIFER discussions; if the churchman were taking part, he would want to tell us what Moses said about it, and Jesus, and he might jug in some of the Ptolemys—which reminds us of what Mark Twain said about the mummy; if there were to be any corpses introduced in evidence, Mark wanted them to be fresh corpses, and so do we!—L. H. Dana, Chicago.

CURIOUS OLD WELSH WEDDING INVITATIONS.

It is customary in some parts of Wales for the invited guests to a wedding to make a donation of money or such articles as may be useful to the newly wedded pair, expecting similar assistance when a marriage takes place in their own family. The wedding invitation ran thus, says a writer in the Penny Magazine in 1830:

"As we, Benjamin Jones and Mary Coslett, intend to entertain the matrimonial state on Friday, the 28th, the young woman intends to make a bidding on the occasion at her father's house, called Llwforge, in the parish of Llandilstal-y-bout, in the county of Glamirgan, where your agreeable company is humbly solicitated, and whatever donation you may be pleased to bestow upon her will be thankfully received and cheerfully repaid by her father and mother whenever called for on a similar occasion."

The second is in the name of the young man and his parents:

"CAERMANTHENSHIRE, Feb. 16, 1830.

"We take this convenience to inform you that we confederate to such a design as to enter under the sanction of matrimony on the 19th of February, and we feel our hearts widening to regard the ancient customs of our ancestors, Hilingaeth Gomer. We intend to make a wedding feast the same day at the respective habitation of our parents.

"We hereby most humbly invite your most pleasing and most comfortable fellowship at either of which places, and whatever kindness your charitable hearts should grant will be accepted with congratulations and most lovely acknowledgment, carefully recorded and returned, with preposedness and joy, whenever a similar occasion overtakes you. By your affectionate servants,

"DAVID JOSHUA,
"MARY WILLIAMS.

"N. B.—The young woman on the above day and her father and mother, Thomas and Esther Coslett, and her brother, Thomas Coslett, desire all gifts of the above nature due to them be returned to the young woman on the above day and will be thankful for all favors granted."

THE PERSECUTION AND THE APPRECIATION.

A report of the reception to Moses Harman at Drill Hall, Masonic Temple, Jan. 1, 1907, is now ready for delivery. It is a booklet of sixty-four pages, containing speeches by Paul Tyner, Walter Henry MacPherson, Lucinda B. Chandler, Gertrude Breslau Hunt, Parker H. Sercombe, and Moses Harman; also letters from absent friends, newspaper reports, etc., and pictures of Lucinda B. Chandler, Kiichi Kaneko and Parker H. Sercombe. Two portraits of Mr. Harman are given; one, with grandson, taken in January, 1907, has never before been published. We hope this will be an effective document for wide distribution. Price, per dozen, $1.25; single copies, 20 cents.

We have sent out over 700 free copies of this pamphlet and expect to circulate many more in the same way. The expense of publication and circulation is quite heavy and we gladly accept coöperation in the work. Those who are interested are requested to send names of persons to whom they think copies should be sent. Inability to assist financially should not deter friends from sending such names to us.

The crowd demands affirmations and not proofs. Do not tell it why or wherefore, but only yes or no.—Anatole France.

You Need It.

There are but two classes of people, those who think and those who should. Whether you belong to one or the other, you need The Stellar Ray. It presents the best of higher thought in will power, astral science, occultism, etc.

OUR SPECIAL SUBSCRIPTION OFFERS.

Fifteen months for $1 (begin with the January number if you desire and if you let us know soon); foreign, 50c extra.

The magazine and our Pocket Dictionary of Astrological Terms (regular price for two, $1.50), both for $1.25 (foreign, $1.75).

We can furnish you with the lowest clubbing rates with any of the contemporary magazines.

The magazine free for one year with every Five-Dollar Horoscope cast by our Astral Science Department. This is run on the same high standard as the magazine. Write now and say you saw it in LUCIFER.

THE STELLAR RAY,
The Magazine for Thinkers.
Hodges Building, Detroit, Mich.

An Essay on the Duty of Civil Disobedience.

BY HENRY D. THOREAU.

A reprint of this classic essay on the supremacy of the individual conscience. Antique paper; artistic covers, dark green on olivine. 10c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

1093

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your LUCIFER, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of LUCIFER fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

WANTED—A BRIGHT WOMAN, with or without money, as partner in a Turkish bath and sanitarium business, in a large eastern city, by a middle-aged man of good habits and business ability, owning a suitable site and possessing unusual facilities and knowledge for pushing the business; a blonde, between 25 and 35, desiring a congenial companion, preferred. This is an unusually good opening for a progressive physician, osteopath, or one who believes in the prevention as well as the cure of disease by natural methods, without drugs. Address, giving full description of self, with photo in first letter, T. B., care 500 Fulton street, Chicago.

Proudhon and His "Bank of the People."

BY CHARLES A. DANA.

This is a defense of the great French anarchist, showing the evils of a specie currency, and that interest on capital can and ought to be abolished by a system of Free and Mutual Banking. A series of newspaper articles written by the after-time editor of The New York Sun, he having been a Brook Farm experimenter in early life. Price, 10 cents.
MOSES HARMAN, 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill.

Correspondence Club.

Open to those who desire to improve, and to discuss subjects of interest with kindred minds. Editor of this paper says the secretary is worthy of confidence. For particulars, enclose stamp to C. A. KIRK, Sec., Box 753, Mitchell, S. D.

Thoughts of a Fool.

A BOOK THAT IS A BOOK!

A BOOK THAT MAKES ITS READERS STOP AND THINK!

This trenchant volume ruthlessly exposes the shams of the day and inquires into the cause—the why—of present-day civilization. You may not agree with its sentiment,—it is clever—it is daring—it scintillates with epigrams—it abounds in paradoxes,—but if you do not agree with the author you will have to mentally yourself in your position by thought—conservative, logical reasoning—for it is a book that will make you think! Ex. Tilden says: "If I had named this volume I would have called it 'Anatomy of Ideals,' for the author really lifts the veil and shows us what we really mean by what we say." Another authority says: "It is a book to which the reader returns again and again and always with renewed delight." A beautiful cloth-bound copy of this remarkable volume, with symbolic cover design in gray and gold (258 pages, 5x8 inches), will be sent you by mail, postpaid, upon receipt of $1. Send your order today, as the edition is limited.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Marriage in Free Society.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

One of the best short works on the subject. A charming little gift book.

"Love is doubtless the last and most difficult lesson that humanity has to learn: in a sense it underlies all the others. Perhaps the time has come for the modern nations when, ceasing to be children, they may even try to learn it."

Daintily printed. Prepaid, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

The Strike of a Sex.

A NOVEL BY GEORGE N. MILLER.

FORTIETH THOUSAND.

"The Strike of a Sex" is a fascinating novel bearing upon the sexual relations. It is a bold protest against the customary life of most married people, and at the same time a prophecy of happier conditions between man and wife. Prepaid, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Up-to-Date Fables.

BY R. B. KERR.

Contents: The Male Amazons. The Strasburg Geese. Bread Eaten in Secret. The One Tune. A Tale About Noses. The Women and the Wells. Mrs. Grundy's Two Boarding Schools. The Emancipated Horses. Neatly printed and covered. Price, 25c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses.

BY E. C. WALKER.

Contents—Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Variationists; The New Woman: What Is She? What Will She Be? The State Biffing Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Inferences Upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love and Life." Price 15c.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

The Old God and the New Humanity.

BY WINWOOD READE.

This is a handsome booklet, containing matter taken from "The Martyrdom of Man," Reade's masterpiece. It will be found wonderfully effective as an eye-opener on the question of religion, and will make the reader, like Oliver Twist, call for "more." Price, 10 cents.
M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL CARDS.

Otto Wettstein,

THE LIBERAL MAIL-ORDER JEWELER.

Now permanent at No. 110 N. Kensington av., La Grange, Cook Co., Ill. Can save you 10 to 20 per cent on Watches, Diamonds or anything in the Jeweler's Line. Write me and receive prices and my great little tract, "Theism in the Crucible," free.

Philip G. Peabody,

ATTORNEY AND COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
15 COURT SQUARE, ROOM 61, BOSTON, MASS.

Dr. Ogilvie Rice,

DENTIST.
1556 MILWAUKEE AVE., COR. WESTERN, CHICAGO.